The Word of Wisdom is given to us as a principle with promise. The promises that we have in that great revelation are these, that we shall have strength of body, that we shall walk and not be weary, that we shall run and not faint, that the destroying angel shall pass us by as the children of Israel and not slay us; and that there shall come to us through the observance of that principle, treasures of wisdom and of knowledge, yea even hidden treasures. Some time ago a brother came to me with a somewhat visionary and impractical proposition which he wanted me to support, and said to me that this had come to him as one of the hidden treasures of knowledge through the observance of the Word of Wisdom. Now, just what is the meaning of these promises? Does it mean that if I keep the Word of Wisdom, abstain from tea, coffee and tobacco and strong drink, that I can walk and never get weary, or that I can run all day and never get faint? I do not understand it so. I see this in it, it is a simple law of health. If I have been a violator of this law of health and then repent of that and keep the law of health, I will have an increased capacity to walk and not be weary, to run and not faint. In other words, my capacity, my physical strength, will be increased to me so that I can accomplish more in a day's work. And that is the realization of the blessing to me. And this promise of hidden treasures of knowledge—we know, brethren and sisters, and we knew it as a people, those who had faith in the word of the Lord, long before the scientific world knew it. But the scientific world knows it today, perhaps better than we know it, that tobacco and tea and coffee and strong drink does inhibit our mental processes, shuts down and restricts our capacity to reason, to analyze. Now, if I have been breaking the law and then I repent of it and keep the commandments of the Lord, my mind expands and there is opened to me a whole world of treasures of knowledge and of wisdom that before had been hidden from me. And so I see in the observance of this law of the Lord an increase of wisdom or an increase of capacity to work and receive wisdom; because my mind can analyze and penetrate farther in its mental processes.

Now that other promise of the Word of Wisdom, that the destroying angel shall pass us by as the children of Israel and not slay us. Where is the fulfilment of that? You can read it in the statistics of the Church, the mortality rate among the Latter-day Saints is lower than even among the picked risks of the insurance companies of the world. Now, what is the meaning of those statistics? It means that the Lord is lengthening our days. We do not keep this law 100%. We are not as faithful in it as we should be. But just in proportion as we do keep it, just in proportion as we have been faithful in the observance of that law, the Lord has blessed us, and as a people our days are lengthened.

And so with this principle of tithing. It also is a principle of promise, a promise of temporal blessings. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." I have faith in that principle. Now, I know there are always those who say, "Here is this brother who does not live his religion, who seems to care nothing about his faith, and yet everything he touches seems to turn to gold; and here is this other brother, who is as faithful as can be, but can hardly keep the wolf away from the door." The thing that is wrong in that analysis seems to me to be that this is a principle given to a people, as well as a principle to individuals. There are always exceptions to the rule, and these are the exceptions to the rule. I do not regard this promise as a promise of great wealth to us. I do not ask the Lord to send me great wealth for the reason that I keep the law of tithing. I take it that his promise to me is that if I keep that law I shall have plenty, I shall not want. Maybe, if the Lord showered wealth upon me it would be a curse rather than a blessing.

Now, brothers and sisters, if we have faith in that law and observe it and have the assurance in our souls that we will not want, is there any more to worry about? We strive, scheme and work to build up a bank account, and to create a large estate of houses, lands, cattle and so on, just so that we may not want and that our loved ones who are dependent upon us may not come to want. Brothers and sisters, if we keep this law of the Lord, we shall not want. We are not as a people observing the law of tithing 100%. We are not, perhaps, keeping it 75% or 50%, but to some extent we are observing that law. And are we a blessed people? I look over this congregation, I have observed people on this square. We are a well fed people, a well clothed people, there is no evidence of want among us. The Lord has generously fulfilled his promises to us. And it is my humble faith and testimony to you that if we keep these laws, the blessings that are predicated upon them and that are promised to us will be ours. I bear you this testimony humbly and in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH K. NICHOLS

President of the St. George Stake

My brethren and sisters: I have listened with great interest to these services, and to the other services which I have attended throughout this conference. I have had greater interest during the short time that I have occupied a leading position in our stake, for the reason that I desire to take home to our people the messages of the conferences which I attend. I have tried to analyze the message given by each speaker, with the hope that when I return I may take that home.

I am more particularly interested, as President Taylor has said he is, in the young people of our stake; because I believe that the hope of Israel resides in them. And I believe, too, that if we can inspire these young people with a testimony of the gospel which we have espoused, that no greater good can come to them than through this source. I recognize that, in general, we have the motive powers of life—the great joys and pleasures of life, the sympathies of our lives, have their sources in our religious services.

I believe that the opening services of this conference are more easily analyzed than the later services. I believe that I can appeal to the young people to recognize the necessity of law enforcement easier than I can give them the desire for a testimony, the kind of a testimony which men of long years of experience bear before our people.

I have tried to analyze this problem of a testimony, and I agree that it is not an easy matter. There is not as much evidence of a reasoning character to appeal to as we might think. And yet the greatest things of life lie beneath the certainty of this testimony. I think this is also paralleled in the fact that the greatest forces in nature are those we are not able to measure. It is not easy to analyze the strength that is in men which we call personality. It is not easy to analyze the fact that the greatest joy in life comes through parenthood. And especially it seems to me that it would be difficult to have a young unmarried man or woman believe, in this day and age, that possibly the greatest joys in life do come through parenthood. And yet those who have become parents and who know this great source of joy and satisfaction will testify that this is the case. These are facts. In the midst of an economic drive like we live in today, and unknown in the world before, the fact might be against a testimony that the greatest joys in life come through the family. A great teacher in the University of Chicago, Dr. Cope, has said that the family is the sure way to walk the path of the cross. We who are parents can testify of the truthfulness of this.

Now, it is not easy to analyze any fact, and obtain through the reasoning powers alone the great force of a testimony of the divine authenticity of our religious doctrine, and yet those of us who have had sufficient experience know that this is the case. After our services the other day when the missionary presidents spoke, I wondered if we could pass before us the essential doctrines of all the creeds in the world—and they would number hundreds—if we had the power to analyze the essential doctrines of all these creeds, and through our intellect determine which of all these things were right, whether we would not have great difficulty indeed. I believe, though, that the student, through the general processes of reasoning which are applied to him, in his daily life, through his training in high school, in the district school, and through his college days, would adopt that as the natural recourse, and he may challenge you and me, when we bear testimony that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, to know the reasons upon which we base that assertion. This student might say, "Have you reviewed all the doctrines in the world and know through this examination that yours are true?" I would have to say that I have not. "Do you know through travel the world over that the gospel of Jesus Christ which we have espoused is true?" And with many I would have to say that I have not so traveled, but it is the testimony borne by the Spirit of the Lord that is all-essential.

I had an experience once sitting before Brother Ballard, which gave to me one of the finest evidences of the divinity of this work that I know of. I heard him speak upon the redeeming power of Jesus, the redemption of his atoning blood. This subject to me had never been interesting, but in the light in which he placed it, it became so. Without much analysis he proceeded to testify, through a period of about one hour, of the divinity of Jesus, the fact that he had lived and died for us, and I saw men and women on every side of me weep with joy and satisfaction, and I said to myself that if I ever knew anything, if I knew that I lived, I knew that what this man said was true.

Sometimes when I have been called upon to bless little children I have tried to question myself as to what was the most important thing to present in a blessing upon the head of a child. As a father I would say that the most important thing in the world is faith, faith to believe, faith to see, faith to hope, faith to understand, faith to desire to do the right thing in the world, faith necessary to cause a man and a woman to serve each other. One of the finest things that I have learned in the Church is the continued sacrifice of men and women in this wonderful service, the great quantity of unpaid labor in this Church. I sometimes wonder how a man or woman can give so much time and effort to the common service of all the Saints.

Brothers and sisters, I rejoice in this wonderful gospel of ours. The finest thing that has come into my life is an opportunity to serve. I rejoice because of the people that I live with, who make my life happy, who help me to see the joy in each day. I rejoice in the message of the gospel. I pray that we shall all learn more and more as we live. How wonderful it is to know that Jesus lives, that he is the Christ, the son of the living God, and that in him there is life and light and hope and wisdom and salvation and all that life holds near and dear unto us. May we rejoice in the privileges that we have to serve one another and the great Master of all, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Elder J. Robert Smith sang a tenor solo: "I think when I read that sweet story of old."

ELDER HEBER J. MEEKS

President of the Kanab Stake

I have been coming up to the general conferences of the Church for sixteen years. In that length of time I have missed only three conferences, and during all the conferences that I have attended I have been thrilled by the spirit and teachings of the brethren. During the sessions of this conference I have been thrilled. My heart has been made to rejoice. I have seen many situations arise in the Church, but the Lord has provided a way by which every situation has been met. He has placed inspired men at the head of the Church, and he is wielding an unseen hand and power over this people.

I rejoice that we have a progressive Church, an organization which provides for the service of all its members, that they may all find work to do and thereby enrich their own souls and help to enrich the souls of their brethren and sisters. It seems to me that without inspiration it would be difficult to organize a church that would meet the needs and requirements of the present day. This Church was organized under the direction of a youth, but the foundations were laid so well and so deeply that it has provided not only for the present day but for the future, and we will find the Lord providing a means for this people to accomplish the work they have set their hands to do. I am grateful that I was born in the Church, that my father knew the Prophet Joseph. He has told me many times that the Prophet called at his house at Nauvoo only a few days before his martyrdom and said, "Brother Meeks, the Saints will yet go to the Rocky Mountains, and you will go with them," and told him many things that would transpire after the Saints came to the mountains, and especially, to my father and his family—all of which came true. After the Prophet's death, the Saints were in great distress of mind and anxiety regarding the future of the work, and my father testified that when the Saints were called together and Sidney Rigdon made claim to the guardianship of the Church and spoke in behalf of his claims for something like two hours to the assembled Saints, that he was there and heard him, and when President Young arose when Sidney was through, my father testified that Brigham Young spoke with the voice of Joseph Smith, that the mantle of Joseph fell upon him. He witnessed it, and he bore testimony to that truth. And it seems that it was burned into my soul to honor and revere those two great men.

Those who have succeeded have also been prophets of the living God and have been rightful successors to the Prophet Joseph and to Brigham Young. These brethren have each been given a period of presidency. The Prophet's presidency has passed away, gone into eternity, and he is there giving an account of the years when he presided over the Church. President Young likewise has passed beyond. His administration has gone by, but he stands at the head of that time and will stand there throughout all eternity, and he must give an account of his stewardship, of his presidency. And their successors have been given their presidencies, just as every president of a stake and every bishop of a ward has been given a period of presidency. They must account for that not only here but in eternity; for we will be associated with this great organization there, and the kindred spirits with whom we associated here will be associated with us there, and if there have been differences, errors, creep in during our administrations, they must be corrected, and we must be responsible for the part that we play. Therefore, I feel the great responsibility that rests upon me in presiding over a stake of Zion.

I am grateful, as I said before, for the organization that provides for the service of all its members, and in analyzing the teachings of this gospel and what it means, what priesthood means to us, it seems to me that it may be summed up in these words, "It is the perfect plan of service." There can be no better plan devised for people to serve, both young and old, and the Lord has inspired this wonderful organization, and it bears the stamp of divinity and is recognized by those who study it. There is no human organization to compare with it. I appreciate the fact that it is the power of God unto salvation, not only spiritual salvation but temporal, and if we will observe the simple teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ, we will be saved, both spiritually and temporally.

May we be given strength and power to withstand the temptations that come to us. May we be given strength and power to live the simple truths of the everlasting gospel, that we may grow in love, that we may grow in knowledge of the truth, and that we may have the favor and the approval of our Father in heaven, I humbly ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

Of the Presiding Bishopric

We have listened this afternoon to testimonies of the truth of the gospel, also to advise, counsel and instructions dealing with our temporal and spiritual affairs. We have appreciated the wonderful music rendered by the choir, appointed for this meeting. One of the soloists sang the hymn, "Suffer little children to come unto me." The remarkable incident of the blessing of children occurred in the little village of Ephron, in the district of Perea, on the east side of the Jordan valley, just before the Master started his journey to Jerusalem to be crucified.

The speakers at the tabernacle session have urged us to obey the laws of the country, to sustain the constitution, and to observe the Word of Wisdom and the law of tithing. Our faith has been strengthened by marvelous stories concerning the Book of Mormon and the Prophet Joseph Smith. One of the brethren speaking in the tabernacle quoted the statement of Jesus:

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.
 "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

This thought occurred to me: Were the Master here today thousands in this building could say: "Master, we have come to thee. We have listened to the call of thy servants. We have obeyed the gospel. Testimonies have been given us of its truth. The burden of doubt concerning you has left us. We have found rest for our souls." The gospel of Jesus Christ will give rest and contentment to any person who will obey and live it.

THE SABBATH DAY

I want to use the remainder of the time allotted to me to call to your attention one subject that has not been spoken on during this conference, and that is, the observance of the Sabbath, or the Lord's day. During the last few years many changes have occurred in the social life of the people, caused by the automobile, motion pictures and the great world war, which has had a detrimental effect on the observance of the Lord's day of rest. In addition to these conditions, a habit is growing to hold football and baseball games, Sunday concerts with or without pay, Sunday railroad excursions, etc., and places of amusement and resorts are open on the Lord's day, and even some places of business.

LAW OF MOSES

The great law giver, Moses, at one time gathered the Hebrews around Mount Sinai so that they could see the manifestations of the power of the Lord. At that time there was delivered to him that remarkable series of laws known as the Decalogue, or the Ten Commandments. The opening of this remarkable series of commandments says: "I am the Lord thy God which hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt; out of the house of bondage," and among those ten commandments he gave these:

"Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

"Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work:

"But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates."

Later the Lord re-stated this law to Moses, and he said:

"Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. * * *

"Wherefore, the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever."

To the credit of the Hebrew people they did observe the Sabbath. Even in their captivity and when in bondage to foreign nations they did their best to rest on the seventh day. Before the advent of the Messiah two great religious and political parties arose in Palestine. They added to the Sabbath day law many trifling and irritating restrictions. No Jewish army would attack on a Sabbath day; no Jewish army would march on that day; the people were forbidden to bake or cook; to build a fire or to prepare food, etc., and they could only walk a certain distance with a friend on that day. Some of their restrictions were rebuked several times by the Master and at one time he said: "The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath."

The Master was crucified on a Friday. He was hurriedly buried before the Sabbath day, which commenced on Friday at six o'clock. His body laid in the tomb until Sunday morning, the first day of the week, when he arose from the dead. On that day he was seen by several women, then by Peter, and then by Mary Magdalene. He accompanied two of his friends to Emmaus and then appeared to his disciples and their friends in an upper room, and on the following first day of the week he again appeared to his disciples and others, and from that time on the Christian church observed the first day of the week as the Lord's day in remembrance of his resurrection.

The Lord has definitely placed the responsibility of the Latter-day Saints concerning the day of rest. On the 7th day of August, 1831, he gave a revelation to the Prophet Joseph known to us as section 59, Doctrine and Covenants. The part of the section which I wish to call to your attention is as follows:

"And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day. For verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High. But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren and before the Lord."

President Brigham Young called the observance of the Lord's day to the attention of the Saints in his time, and these instructions can be found in the Discourses of Brigham Young, as follows:

"All Latter-day Saints should observe the Sabbath by resting from all labor, except those who must be detained to take care of children or perform some work of mercy. Now remember, those who go skating, buggy riding, or on excursions on the Sabbath day are weak in the faith and gradually, little by little, the spirit of their religion leaks out of their hearts and their affection. When I see a man gathering in his crops, or cattle, or making repairs on the Lord's day, I count him weak in the faith. At least he has lost the spirit of his religion. We should devote our time as the Church requires it, on the Lord's day, for the express purpose of renewing our mental and physical powers and getting our spiritual food."

The late President Joseph F. Smith was equally as emphatic on this subject as President Brigham Young, and in his writings contained in Gospel Doctrine, he has said:

"Men are not resting from their labors when they plow, plant, dig or do work of any kind. Men are not resting when they work around the house all day doing odd jobs. Men are not honoring the Lord when they go to places of amusement. Men are not honoring the Lord when they loiter around ice cream places, go to ball games and witness these games. It is a reflection on any Latter-day Saint community to patronize a ball game on the Lord's day."

LATTER-DAY SAINTS AND THE SABBATH

No Latter-day Saint can feel in full fellowship with the Holy Spirit who uses the Lord's day for recreation and pleasure, who visits pleasure resorts, picture shows and theatres, who goes to baseball or football games, who goes on picnics, fishing or hunting trips, or on railway excursions on the Lord's day, or who uses that day in automobile riding for pleasure.

Experience has shown that those who remember the Lord's day and keep it holy are in harmony with the spirit of the gospel. The keeping of this law will affect our lives for good, and if we disobey it it will affect our lives for evil. The Lord has designed this day so that we may rest from our labors, attend to our religious duties in a spirit of thankfulness and appreciation for the gospel, and obtain spiritual comfort and spiritual food. I am wondering if, in the rush and whirl of life, we are overlooking some of the fundamentals of the gospel. Are we making this day a day of rest and devotion or a day of recreation and pleasure? I hope the Latter-day Saints will follow the word of the Lord given to us in these latter days and that we shall strictly observe the day of rest.

I testify to you that "Mormonism," as it is called, is true. That it is the power of God unto salvation to the believer. It is a living force which will make us better every day we apply its truth and principles, and will take us back to the presence of our Father in heaven from whence we came. Amen.

The choir sang, "The day is ended."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder David R. Lyon, of the Ensign stake.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The closing meeting of the 98th semi-annual conference of the Church opened in the Tabernacle on Sunday, October 9, 1927, at 2 o'clock. The attendance was very large.

President Heber J. Grant announced that the choir and congregation would sing the hymn: "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

After the fervent and earnest singing by the great audience, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Edward H. Anderson.

The Hymn, "I know that my Redeemer lives," was sung by the choir, Jessie Evans, soloist.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

HEARD BY RADIO

We have received word from Elder David A. Broadbent of the Wasatch stake presidency, that the Heber tabernacle is filled with Saints who are getting perfect reception of the conference services.

We have a telegram to the effect that there is a large gathering of listeners at Ephraim, who wish to express their appreciation of the KSL broadcast of the conference services.

It is only fair to say that the interruption that occurred during the opening meeting of our conference, at which time the broadcast of baseball news came into our meeting, was by reason of the fact that the KSL radio service is rented by the hour, and our time expired at ten minutes after twelve o'clock. They, therefore, thought we had adjourned our meeting.

ELDER REED SMOOT

I crave a double portion of the Spirit of the Lord while I stand before this magnificent audience of Latter-day Saints this afternoon.

THANKS TO GOD

I thank my heavenly Father for all his mercies in the past, and above all I thank him that I know that my Redeemer lives. I also thank him, at this time, for the wonderful care he has had over Sister Smoot. Over seven months ago I was directed by a man of science, a great doctor, that if I intended that she should be buried in Utah, I should at once arrange for the care of her body and make plans for leaving Washington within forty-eight hours. I have to acknowledge, not only to the Latter-day Saints, but to all the world, that it is not science that has kept her alive so long, but it has been the prayers of God's people, which have safeguarded her so far. God's will be done, not mine.

THE INFLUENCE AND POWER OF GOD

I have been more than pleased at this conference. It is so often said at the close of conference that it was the best conference that was ever held. I have never before attended one in all my life where I have felt the influence and power of Almighty God as I have at this conference. The Spirit of God has been with us, and no man, no matter what his belief may be, could stand before an audience of this character and listen to what has been said and not admit in his heart that there is something in "Mormonism" which no other religion on earth has.

THE CATHOLIC FATHER MISTAKEN

On the 22nd day of September last I was thinking of an experience that came to me forty-five years ago last July. I was then a young man of twenty years and was superintendent of the Provo Co-op. I decided that I would go to Leadville and Denver, with a view of opening up a market for the products of the farm that we handled in Utah county. I made that trip and was successful. On my return, coming over the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, we had scarcely left Denver until a gentleman approached me. He was a Catholic father, a splendid type of physical manhood, a well educated man, one whose appearance would attract the attention of people anywhere. I had been conversing with one or two men. As I left them and took my seat he came and sat by me. Said he:

"I understand that you live in Utah."

"I do."

"Are you a 'Mormon'?"

"I am."

He then began to discuss the question of "Mormonism," and among other things he said: "I tell you, young man, that no matter whether the Church has grown in years past or not, it will never live a hundred years."

The reason assigned was that it was a fraud, that God did not reveal himself to man in these days; that the testimony of Joseph Smith was a falsehood upon its face; and an institution based upon a falsehood never lived a hundred years, and therefore "Mormonism" would not live that length of time.

The thought came to me as I have looked over these vast audiences gathered here in this general conference, of what has happened during the last forty five years, and O how mistaken that father was.

AN ANSWER FROM THE BOOK OF MORMON

There were a number of things that impressed me greatly in what he said. I suppose many of the people of Utah and particularly my neighbors knew that I had up to that time not taken much interest in Church work. I was wrapped up, body and soul, in commercial affairs. I had no testimony that this was God's work. And so when I got home the first thing I did was to tell my mother of this circumstance. Among other things that he called to my attention was this, that there must be something wrong with the Church, with the organization, with the people, because the whole world was in opposition to them, and therefore the Church could not be true. Of course he gave his reasons why the great Catholic church was the only church of God. I told my mother this, and in her quiet way she said:

"I wish you would read the second chapter of II Nephi, in that wonderful book, the Book of Mormon, and I think it will answer the statements made by the father or anyone else as to opposition."

I took occasion to read it, and I want to call your attention to it today. Not the whole of it, by any manner of means. I wish I had the time to do so, but I am going to content myself after reading just a few of the statements regarding opposition, by asking you all to read that chapter in the Book of Mormon. It is an account of Lehi addressing his son Jacob, and in it Lehi says:

"And behold, in thy childhood thou hast suffered afflictions and much sorrow, because of the rudeness of thy brethren. * * *

"And he [speaking of God] shall consecrate thine afflictions for thy gain."

And as to opposition Lehi says, in the eleventh verse of the chapter :

"For it must needs be that there is an opposition in all things. If not so, my first-born in the wilderness, righteousness could not be brought to pass, neither wickedness, neither holiness nor misery, neither good nor bad. Wherefore all things must needs be a compound in one; wherefore, if it should be one body it must needs remain as dead, having no life, neither death, nor corruption, nor incorruption, happiness nor misery, neither sense nor insensibility."

NEED OF OPPOSITION IN ALL THINGS

Lehi goes on to explain why there must be opposition in all things. When you stop to think about it, it is absolutely as God's servant, Lehi, predicted. If there were no opposition to business it would run to dry rot. And, brethren and sisters, if there were no opposition to the Church of Christ, it never would make the headway it is making. Its foundations never would be so strong as they are without the opposition it has encountered. Many of the hardships and evils that come to us, come as blessings in disguise. People wonder why weeds grow on the farm, why disease comes to the body, why the wicked among the peoples of the world, why evil exists upon every hand? Evil is a challenge to good. The fight is between evil and good, and God intends to have a people who know the difference between good and evil, and follow in the footsteps of the teachings of the Master. And nothing but good ever was uttered by him in mortal life. Why do we have the poor among us? Suppose we did not have any poor. I have always considered poverty a challenge, and it does challenge our sympathy and generosity, and do you know that that is a wonderful thing to broaden a man or woman? And I know of no other pleasure in all the world equal to that which comes to one whose generosity and kindness helps one of God's children.

BELIEF IN REVELATION

One of the things that the Catholic father complained most bitterly about was that we claim to have had revelation in this day direct from God, and that Joseph Smith received revelations for the establishment of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. That I think, my brethren and sisters, is pretty well found to be one of the great criticisms of the Church. I know that in my own case, when there was an effort made to unseat me as a Senator of the United States, after all the testimony had been given and I think most everyone of my witnesses had testified to the effect that revelation was given to the founder of the Church, and I myself testified that I believed it with all my heart, Mr. Taylor, in summing up the arguments of the case to present to the Senators of the United States with a view to unseat me as being unworthy of a seat in that great body, made this statement :

"Several hundred thousand sincere men and women have believed and now believe, as they believe in their own existence, that Joseph Smith, Junior, received revelation direct from God, and if anyone ever believed that, we must believe that Senator Smoot believes it. Now a Senator of the United States might believe anything else in the world but that and not be ineligible to a seat in the body to which he belongs. He might believe in polygamy; he might believe that murder was commendable; he might deny the propriety as a rule of life of all the ten commandments; he might believe in the sacrifice of human life; he might believe in no God or in a thousand gods; he might be Jew or Gentile, Mohammedan or Buddhist, Atheist, or Pantheist; he might believe that the world began last year and would end next year, but to believe in the kind of conviction that Reed Smoot possesses, that God speaks to him or may speak to him is to admit by the inevitable logic of his conviction that there is a superior authority with whom here and now he may converse, and whose command he can no more refuse to obey than he can will himself not to think."

My time has expired, but I want to tell you today that I haven't any more doubt in my mind than that I live that God did reveal himself to Joseph Smith, that this Church is founded upon the great principle of revelation from God. He is the author, the one that we worship, the one into whose presence we hope in time to return and give a report of the stewardship that he granted to us, such that the Father would say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

God bless the people, God bless our country. Instill in the hearts of the American people a greater love, if possible, in the future than in the past, of the great Constitution of this land. I feel in my soul that the time will never come in all the history of the world, be it short or be it long, that this people will deny that the Constitution of the United States came from God himself through men raised up for the purpose of establishing it and building upon it the greatest nation on earth. God be with us, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I have been made very happy while listening to the remarks of the brethren who have spoken, for the nature of the testimonies and instruction has been very timely.

A WARNING VOICE AGAINST EVIL

It is pleasing to know that the Latter-day Saints are loyal, as a people, to the Government, to the Constitution, and that they observe the law. Moreover, it is well to have our attention called to the duties and responsibilities that are ours as members of the Church, and to have the warning voice raised, from time to time, against the evils that prevail in the world that we may be prepared to resist them.

WE LIVE IN PERILOUS TIMES

I take it for granted that every member of the Church sincerely believes that we are living in the last days, and that most of those who are not of us who profess to believe in the scriptures and in our Redeemer hold the same view. This being true, I think we will have to agree also that we are living in perilous times, for the prophets of old who had their vision opened so that they could see our times have spoken of these conditions.

PROPHETS HAVE FOREWARNED THE PEOPLE

Isaiah, Peter, Paul, and even the Savior himself, have spoken of these things. Paul when writing to Timothy of the last days had this to say:

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils;

"Speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

"Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats."

And again he says:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come.

"For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy.

"Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

"Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God;

"Having a form of Godliness, but denying the power thereof."

It appears that there is very little lacking in this prophecy that might have been said of the evils of our times; and the Savior declared that the days before his second coming were to be like the days before the flood. The prophets who dwelt on this continent had the same knowledge revealed to them and have proclaimed it in the Book of Mormon:

"But behold," said Nephi, "in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles—yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles and also the Jews, both those who shall come upon this land and those who shall be upon other lands, yea, even upon all the lands of the earth, behold, they will be drunken with iniquity and all manner of abominations—

"And when that day shall come they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts, with thunder and with earthquake, and with a great noise, and with storm, and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire."—2 Nephi 27:1-2.

Then he adds this:

"Woe unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth! For the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity they shall perish.

"But behold, if the inhabitants of the earth shall repent of their wickedness and abominations they shall not be destroyed, saith the Lord of Hosts. * * *

"For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up to repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

"For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good.

"And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

"And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance."—2 Nephi 28:16-22.

NEPHI SPOKE FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PEOPLE OF OUR DAY

I have read these Scriptures to show that these ancient prophets, who saw our times, have spoken, not particularly for the benefit of the people of their day, but for the benefit of the people living in the days of which these prophecies speak. The world now is in just that condition declared by Nephi and by Paul. The people are denying the Lord and his atonement and the resurrection of the dead, and they are declaring that there is no personal devil, who is Lucifer who was cast out of heaven for his rebellion. Nor are the Latter-day Saints altogether free from these evils and these false teachings that prevail so generally in the world. We must not think that these things do not apply to us, for unless we walk in paths of righteousness and in harmony with the revelations from the Lord, we too will be under condemnation. It is in Zion, according to this prophecy, that people are to feel the "carnal security," that all is well, and Nephi has spoken to us words of warning:

"Therefore, woe be unto him that is at ease in Zion!

"Woe be unto him that crieth, All is well!

"Yea, woe be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Nephi further predicted that in these days there would be churches which are built up, not unto the Lord, and "they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another, and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.

"And they deny the power of God, and the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men;

"Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work."

Does it not appear that this prophet has truly depicted the conditions in the world today, both in the churches and generally among mankind?

MODERN CONDITIONS MAKE FOR UNRIGHTEOUSNESS

It seems to me as I reflect upon these things that it is perhaps a little more difficult for a man to be righteous today than it has been in some other periods of the world's history. I think this because of modern conditions with all the temptations and evils that now confront us at every turn. If this is the case then Latter-day Saints should be just a little more prayerful, a little more diligent, and seek the Lord just a little more closely, that we might be kept free from all the evils that now prevail. The fact that we are baptized and have a standing in good fellowship in the Church will not insure for us our salvation. Evils may come upon us, for the Lord has said by way of warning,

"Therefore, let the Church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptation."

Our Duties Pointed Out

During the meetings of this conference some of our duties as members of the Church have been pointed out. It would be impossible in the limited time that is ours to mention all the duties and responsibilities which rest upon us, and the remarks we make have to be more or less of a general character.

Our attention has been called very forcefully to the keeping of the law of tithing, and the observance of the Word of Wisdom. I would like to call attention in a general way to the fact that we have received many commandments, and it is our duty to keep them all. I wonder if we are all faithfully paying our tithing and observing the Word of Wisdom? I wonder if we are praying in our homes, if we are teaching our children in the spirit of prayer to approach our Father in heaven; if, in the family circle, we remember this obligation and are faithful to this great commandment? For it is a great commandment. I wish each would ask himself the question, "Am I seeking the Lord in secret chambers, and thanking him for the many blessings I receive?" I wonder if we faithfully observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy? There are very few among the people generally in this land who do, and the Lord will not forget the breaking of this law. I wonder if we have forgotten the fast-day which has been set apart to be observed by the members of the Church? And if we remember the fast offerings for the poor? There are so many things I cannot take time to mention all.

We are to be judged according to our works, and we have before us the law. If we fail to observe it, if we reject it, or prove ourselves unfaithful, we shall not receive the blessings, for the Lord has said it. We have the Gospel as it has been restored in its fulness and if we do not observe the commandments of the Lord we are without excuse, "For of him unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation." We should be most diligent in our observance of the fast meetings, the Sacrament meetings, and our Priesthood meetings. I regret to say that in many of the wards of the Church there is a falling off in the attendance at the Sacrament service, which is, in my judgment, the greatest and most important meeting in the Church. We cannot afford to fail in this important duty and in the other important duties which are upon us. Our light is set upon a hill, which gives light to all the world, and we should let it shine so that people can see our good works and glorify our Father in Heaven.

I pray that all Latter-day Saints will prove themselves to be humble, faithful and willing to serve the Lord, keeping all his commandments as they come to us through those who have the right to speak. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang: "O awake, my slumbering minstrel."

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

Two difficulties confront the ordinary speaker at a general conference of the Church. One is to select a theme suitable to the occasion; the other is to present that theme in some degree of completeness without overrunning the allotted time.

I recognize, of course—we all do—the wisdom and the necessity for time limitations, where so many speakers are to be heard from; and I try to conform to the regulation. But it is not the easiest thing in the world to lose one's self in a subject and keep an eye on the clock; to talk about eternity and all the while be thinking about time—the time to close. "No man can serve two masters."

This is my reason for using notes on some occasions. I can speak without them, and generally do, but cannot condense my thoughts so well when speaking impromptu, as when I have committed them, in part at least, to paper.

THE WORTH OF KNOWLEDGE

Knowing just what to say, on any occasion, is very important. Knowing how to say it, or having the power to say it in a way that appeals, is equally so. A machine in a big plant broke down, and an expert was called in to fix it. He gave two taps with his hammer, and the machine started. The bill was $250. The superintendent, as soon as he could get his breath, demanded an itemized statement. It came, and read as follows: "Tapping with hammer, $1.00; knowing where to tap, $249."

It is just so with the speaker. He must know where to tap and even then must leave it to the Lord to do the tapping. Our Heavenly Father knows our needs, and he alone can supply them. He knows where to tap, and the speaker is the hammer that he taps with. The sledge-hammer blows struck during this Conference are samples of his handiwork. They ought to be sufficient to set any machine going—in the right direction.

FIRST PRINCIPLES

Daniel Webster, in his great reply to Senator Hayne upon the necessity for the preservation of the Union, counseled a return to first principles. Our own Brother Roberts, equally eloquent, gave similar advice at one of our recent general conferences. I find myself in much the same mood today. I desire to speak upon the first principles of the Gospel.

One of our Articles of Faith reads as follows:

"We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; Second, Repentance; Third, Baptism by Immersion for the remission of sins; Fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost."

I learned these principles in Sabbath school, when I was a boy, and they have served me all the days of my life. I took them with me when, as a youth of twenty-one, I went out into the world to preach the gospel. I found them as effectual in combating error, as did David the stone and sling in his encounter with the Giant. I have never met the man or woman who could gainsay them.

UNPROFITABLE QUESTIONS

And our missionaries today can say the same, when they preach these principles in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit, testifying to the Restoration of the Gospel, and letting alone such unprofitable questions as, Who wrote the Book of Genesis? Was Job a fictitious or an historical character? Does God save man or does man save himself?

This Church was not established, nor are its missionaries sent forth to quibble and contend over these or any other questions. With a world's salvation trembling in the balance, it matters very little which was first—the chicken or the egg, or whether a house burns up or burns down.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S COUNSEL

Fifty years ago, when I was a young missionary in the State of Ohio, I received a letter from President Brigham Young, containing these golden words: "Never condescend to argue with the wicked. The principles of the gospel are too sacred to be quarreled over. Bear your testimony in humility, and leave the result with the Lord."

That is all we can do. This is God's work, not man's, and He is doing it in his own way, and using men and women as his instruments. No man can say, of any part of the Lord's work, "I did it." No flesh can glory in his presence. The missionary does his whole duty when he bears a faithful testimony by tongue or pen, by word and deed, and leaves the result with the Lord.

CONTENTION AN EVIL

Contention is "of the devil," the Lord says, and the time is so precious and so short between Now and the End, that we need every minute of it to deliver our message, to cry repentance, and warn the world of divine judgments that will follow the rejection of the gospel.

WHAT THE GOSPEL IS AND WHAT IT DOES

The Gospel of Christ "is the power of God unto salvation." It is more than that—it is the power of God unto exaltation. It redeems, saves and glorifies all who yield obedience to its requirements. It is the Pathway to Perfection, and was instituted as such by the wisdom of the Gods before this world was formed, before man had fallen, before he had need of redemption and salvation. There is only one gospel, but there have been many gospel dispensations, and this is the greatest and the last. There never will be another upon this planet. It is the last time that God will so speak to man. But he will speak in other ways, by other tongues, and the world will have to listen:

OTHER TESTIMONIES

"For after your testimony"—the Lord says to the Elders of Israel—

"cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand.

"And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds.

"And all things shall be in commotion; and surely, men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people;

"And angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth; for the judgment of our God is come: behold, and lo! the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." (D. and C. 88:89-92.)

ETERNAL PRINCIPLES

The Gospel's fundamental principles are eternal. They never were created. They are self-existent. Divine wisdom, recognizing certain laws and ordinances as essential to human uplift and advancement, placed them in the gospel plan and made them available and effectual unto man's redemption, salvation and eternal glory.

And how were they made available and effectual to those high ends? Here we touch the question of whether God saves man or man saves himself.

A SINISTER SPIRIT

A sinister spirit is creeping over this world—a spirit of arrogant self-assertion, a disposition to do away with God, to shut him out from his own universe, to strip the Divine One of his divinity, deny his miraculous power, and regard him as nothing more than a superman, a good and wise Teacher who points out the Way in which men should walk—and that is about all. Even in the pulpit such things are said at times. In current literature divinity is below par. Any writer who makes a sensational assault upon religion, robbing Christ of his Christliness, finds a willing publisher and a ready sale. One who stands up stalwartly for God and Truth—his manuscript goes begging.

NO MARKET VALUE

Pure religion has no market value. It's the humbug that prospers. All religion is looked upon by many as old-fashioned fogysm, something out of date, and it is deemed progressive and even heroic to get along without it. Dr. William B. Riley, in a recent address in this city, said: "The idea has been put forth in some of our secular institutions, that a person should make his own moral decisions, without regard to divine law." Heaven forbid that such a spirit, or anything like it, should ever invade the Church of Christ—the Church of the Latter-day Saints! Says Riley again: "Make man believe that he is responsible only to himself, remove all belief of higher power, and it is certain that a state of anarchy will prevail."

Let me now read to you a very splendid poem:

INVICTUS

By William Ernest Henley

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from Pole to Pole,
I thank whatever gods may be,
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud,
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.

It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul.

We all admire courage, fortitude, and the power to patiently endure. We recognize such traits as essential to success, both in spiritual and in temporal pursuits. But these heroic qualities, admirable though they be, and desirable withal, cannot lessen one jot or tittle the need for a Savior, to do for us what we cannot do for ourselves. In this wonderfully virile and powerful poem, there is no recognition of any need for divine help. That, to me, is a defect. Of course, a man must know God before he can recognize him, and this poor man evidently did not know him.

A BROKEN REED

A reasonable amount of self-reliance is a good thing, is a pillar of strength in any human character. But when a man relies wholly upon himself and seeks no help from the divine Helper, he is leaning upon a broken reed, however mighty he may think himself.

David was self-reliant when he met Goliath of Gath; but it was because he knew God was with him. "He will give you into my hands," said the shepherd boy. And it was his simple faith, his sublime trust, his absolute confidence in the Almighty, that overthrew the Giant—not merely a sling with a stone in it.

"I am the captain of my soul," is true only to a very limited extent. Man is a free agent, with a will of his own, with the power to achieve, to succeed or fail. That much is true. But there is a Greater Captain of our souls, to whom we all owe allegiance, for He redeemed our souls from death, and they are his; he purchased them with a price. Self-reliance is a good thing, if not carried too far. But self-assurance, self-sufficiency, self-conceit, is a bad thing. There is no such thing as absolute independence. We depend upon one another, and all are dependent upon God.

FALL AND REDEMPTION

Answering now the question: How are the principles of the gospel made available and effectual for man's salvation and exaltation? It is through the Fall and the Redemption. "Adam fell that men might be"—that a race of spirits might tabernacle in the flesh, and thus become souls, capable of endless increase, of eternal progression and exaltation. But the fall brought death—eternal death, which had to be overcome before these spirits, these souls, God's sons and daughters, could fulfil their heaven-decreed destiny and go on to perfection.

Christ overcame death—conquered hell and the grave—died and rose again; and because he lives we shall live also. He gained this great victory, not by slaughtering his enemies, but by forgiving them, by allowing his own blood to be shed for them and for all, thus paying a debt that no one else could pay. "Greater love than this hath no man, that he will lay down his life for his friends." But here was One who laid down his life for his enemies as well as his friends. No mere man could do that. It required the love and the life of a God.

THE DIVINE AGONY

It took a Being capable of enduring pangs that no mere mortal could endure—pangs of the body and of the spirit, so terrible, so poignant, so far-reaching and fathomless that the finite mind stands aghast in contemplation of the infinite and awful mystery; pangs that caused him, "even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore."

And he "suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer, if they would repent." But if they would not repent, then they must suffer even as did he. (D. and C. 19:16-18.)

"For behold, he suffereth the pains of all men, yea, the pains of every living creature, both women and children, who belong to the family of Adam.

"And he suffereth this that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day.

"And he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name, having perfect faith in the Holy One of Israel, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.

"And if they will not repent and believe in his name, and be baptized in his name, and endure to the end, they must be damned; for the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel, has spoken it." (2 Nephi 9:21-24. See also D. and C. 18:11, 12.)

Can anyone read that, and believe that all Christ did was to point out the Way of Salvation and bid men walk therein? What about the construction of the way? There was no way till he made one. Walking in it, however difficult at times, is a mere bagatelle by comparison.

MACHINERY AND THE POWER

Adam's fall placed man on earth and made available for him the plan of salvation and exaltation. Without the fall, the spirit would have no body, and consequently no claim upon the resurrection. And it was Christ who brought about the resurrection. He is its Author. It was his death, his sacrificial offering, that gave vitality to the gospel plan and rendered effectual man's faith and works in his own behalf. Without the Atonement, to offset and nullify the fatal effects of the original transgression, all man's self-help would count for nothing, and the very Gospel itself would be mere machinery without the power.

IN AND OUT OF THE PIT

When Adam fell, it was as if the human race had fallen into a pit, from which they were powerless, by any act of their own, to emerge; having no means whereby to climb up and out, and not even knowing how to climb. But a Friend, all-wise and all-powerful, comes to the mouth of the pit, compassionates its wretched inmates, and proposes to rescue them from their unhappy situation. He makes of his own life a ladder; lets it down into the pit and says: "Now climb!" They who climb, get out of the pit. They who refuse to climb, remain in the pit—and who is to blame but themselves?

The Crucifixion on Calvary, the self-immolation of a God, is the Rock upon which the gospel rests—the Everlasting Gospel, the ladder unto life eternal.

"Faith without works is dead." We work out our salvation. There is no question about that. But we work it out through Jesus Christ, and not independently of Him. WE DO NOT SAVE OURSELVES. We but avail ourselves of the means of salvation provided by our Lord and Savior, the God who died that man might live.

ELDER DATUS E. HAMMOND

President of the Pioneer Stake

My brethren and sisters: I have enjoyed the privileges and the blessings of this conference, and I feel perhaps more than at any other time in my life that I have appreciated my membership in the Church, the blessings that come through it, and the wonderful associations that come with this privilege. My testimony has been increased, my desire to labor and do good have increased, and I have prayed that my heavenly Father would give me strength to be able to build up myself and to carry into my life some of the resolutions that I have made as a result of the inspiration of this conference. I am very much concerned and interested in the welfare of the young people of this Church. I feel that our greatest strength should be given more particularly to them. I feel that our greatest concern is with them. Those who have grown old in years and in service, and have a testimony of the divinity of this work, can't be changed very much; and, while we must labor with them, we are not nearly so much concerned as with the youth of Israel. Our young people in our auxiliary organizations, the youth of the Church in our Lesser priesthood work, gives our greatest anxiety. I have been grateful indeed that there has come such activity and such a program and such organization in the Lesser priesthood work to more carefully direct and teach and inspire the young men of the Church. As one associated in this work with the young people, and connected with the Mutual Improvement organizations, I have been greatly interested in the work for young boys. I have been happy indeed that all of my time for a number of years past has been spent with them, with the Boy Scouts of America.

May the Lord bless our young people. May all of us, who are responsible for their welfare, in all our organizations and priesthood quorums, give them all we have to direct their work, their thought and their actions. May our greatest desire and ambition be to instil in their hearts a testimony of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged, and if they enjoy this testimony, we may feel assured as to their welfare and the outcome of their lives. May we thus be concerned, and have as an objective in every contact, in every activity and program the putting into the hearts of our young people an appreciation and a testimony of the divinity of this work, I sincerely pray, through Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER MILTON H. WELLING

President of the Bear River Stake

I have attended every one of the sessions of this conference. The conference began with the admonition of the Presidency of the Church, and those who followed in the early meetings, with warnings to the people of the Church against a spirit of lawlessness that seems to be abroad in the land today. I do not feel that it is my responsibility or my business to stand as a watchman upon the tower, so far as giving general direction to the thought and activity of the Church is concerned. When those warnings were given on Friday morning and Friday afternoon I thought of myself as being among the great multitude of people in this Church, and in the world, who were being warned, and as I thought of that I reflected upon the things that had occurred in my life which were useful to me, a help to me in receiving the warnings of my brethren who had addressed the conference. I thought of the time when, as a boy, I was taught to repeat the Sermon on the Mount, in connection with one of my brothers who is down here now somewhere among the bishops of this Church. We were taken into the meeting house and stood up on a bench. He would recite one verse and I would recite the next until we had finished it. We received from our father twenty-five cents between us, as I remember it, for learning Christ's Sermon on the Mount. I don't believe that any other money that I ever earned in the world was more useful to me than that.

There is one verse in the Sermon on the Mount which was always useful to me. It is found near the end of the 6th chapter of St. Matthew. In that verse the Savior of the world spoke of the fact that we were to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all else would be added unto us. I want to testify, in the moments that I occupy this afternoon, that every good thing that has come into my life has come through following the admonition and the advice of the servants of God, and through seeking to live the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have been inspired by the teachings of this conference, and my one hope is that I can go back home to my own people, hundreds of whom are not here this afternoon, but who are listening in to these services, and bear testimony to the inspiration of the Spirit of God which has directed his servants in this conference, and which is directing the Church of Christ. I know that the gospel of the Redeemer of the world is true; and I pray God the eternal Father that that testimony, and a disposition to bear it to the world, will remain with me forever, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER GEORGE H. ROMNEY

President of the Fremont Stake

I am deeply grateful, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord has so blessed me in this life that I am counted worthy to stand in this pulpit and speak to the Latter-day Saints in general conference, but I am more grateful that he has blessed me with a testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which has been restored to us in these days, through Joseph Smith the Prophet and those who have followed him. I feel particularly grateful that my fathers heard the sound of the gospel and were thrilled by it, inspired by it, to come to Zion. I am glad for the privilege of being recognized as worthy of representing our people in Idaho. I shall be very glad to carry back to them, if the Lord will give me his Spirit, the messages of this conference. I have been thrilled by the inspiration that has come to us. I remarked, at the close of the first session of this conference, and the instructions of the brethren in regard to keeping sacred the laws of the land and of being true and faithful and full of integrity, that the statements made impressed me very much, and I believe that the instruction is needed to be given to the people in Idaho, the Latter-day Saints who live there as much as it is to the people throughout all the world. I believe that our brethren are inspired. One of the problems of my life has been to understand how it is that the Lord can prompt the thinking of men and inspire them so that they can say his mind and will, so that they can give his words instead of giving the product of their own thinking. It became a question at one time in my life how to exercise faith, what attitude to take. What is the proper attitude that a person must be in, in order that he can be inspired, and that he can hear the voice of the Lord and speak his words to the people?

I realized, as a boy, that it was necessary for one to receive something by direct contact; that is, for his mind to be guided in such a way that he was not speaking of himself. I afterwards learned through some of the experiences which I had that if a person will have perfect faith and trust and confidence in the Lord, that if he will believe with his whole heart that the Lord will guide and direct him in what he says, he is bound to go forth and do the best he can, and the Lord will see that he makes no mistake in judgment when he is acting in the performance of the duties of his calling. This is my faith and my confidence in the Lord, that he will guide and direct. I do not believe that the judgment of man or the wisdom of man is sufficient to perform the duties of the priesthood in this Church. I believe that it is not possible for men to know what is most needful for the people; but I believe, my brethren and sisters, that if in humble prayer and thankfulness they approach the Lord, that he will guide them. I have perfect confidence that that has been the case in this conference. May the Lord bless us and help us to accept it in that spirit, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

CLOSING THOUGHTS

I rejoice in the very splendid testimonies that we have heard during this conference, and in the advancement of the work of the Lord. I rejoice, as I look into the faces of this body of men who are here before me, the presidencies of stakes, the bishops of wards, the men who have dedicated their lives to God, all that they have, for the advancement of his kingdom; men who are seeking first the Kingdom of God. I rejoice as I look at these sisters, on my left, who are as devoted as mortals can be, for the advancement of this work. When I think of our auxiliary organizations and the integrity and devotion of the men and women who preside over them, my heart goes out in gratitude and thanksgiving to God for such men and such women.

BLESSINGS UPON THE PEOPLE

I pray God's choicest blessings to attend each and all of you, that every blessing which your hearts can desire may be yours. I pray for all Zion, for God's people in every part of the world, at home and abroad, for every soul that is laboring for the salvation of the souls of men and women. I beseech God to give to each and all of us who have partaken of the inspiration of this conference his Spirit, that we may be representatives of him, to labor particularly among the youth of Zion, that they may not get into that broad way that leads to destruction, but may the Lord help you and me and every soul having a testimony of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged to so order our lives that we can bring the wayward back into that straight and narrow path that will lead them back into the presence of God and our Redeemer. I thank the Lord for the inspiration of his Spirit during this conference, and I leave my blessing upon all who are here assembled, all who are listening in, and upon the honest the world over. May God help the Saints to be in very deed a shining light to the world, is my prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, Amen.

The choir sang, "Worthy the lamb."

The benediction was pronounced by President Anthony W. Ivins. The conference adjourned to meet again in six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by Brigham Cecil Gates. Accompaniments and interludes were played on the great organ by Edward P. Kimball, Tracy Y. Cannon, Frank W. Asper and Alexander Schreiner.

Stenographic notes were taken in the Tabernacle by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson, and in the Assembly Hall by Frederick G. Barker.

EDWARD H. ANDERSON,
Clerk of the Conference.

John A. Widtsoe absent, presiding over the European Mission.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the conference began at 10 o'clock, Friday, April 6th, 1928.

The great auditorium and galleries were comfortably filled with people from all parts of the Church.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The congregation sang the hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Richard C. May, President of the Minidoka Stake.

Brother J. H. Wood sang a solo, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

It is certainly an inspiring sight to see this magnificent audience in attendance here this morning at the ninety-eighth anniversary of the birth of the Church. When I contemplate the fact that just a handful of people were in the Church ninety-eight years ago (the organization was effected with six members) and that now there are over a half million members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I am reminded of the very wonderful revelation given to the father of the prophet over a year before the organization of the Church:

"Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.

"Therefore, if ye have desires to serve God ye are called to the work;

"For behold the field is white already to harvest; and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perisheth not, but bringeth salvation to his soul;

"And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

"Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.

"Ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you."

This audience testifies to the fact that a marvelous work and a wonder has been established. It testifies to the diligence of those who have gone forth by the thousands and tens of thousands during the last ninety-eight years, proclaiming the gospel in all parts of the world.

I had not the slightest idea of reading this revelation when I first stood up.

It has always been customary at our annual conferences to give a little account of the activities of the Church during the past year.

During the year the very efficient man who stood at the head of our educational system for a number of years, Dr. Adam S. Bennion, has been honorably released, with appreciation for his most splendid work, and Dr. Joseph F. Merrill has been made the commissioner of education for the Church. Dr. Merrill has been associated with the University of Utah for many years as one of the deans of that great institution.

Teacher training (average attendance, 1927) 10,670.

During the last six months the clerk of our general conferences, and the editor of the Improvement Era, Elder Edward H. Anderson, has passed away, than whom no more capable, faithful, diligent,
God-fearing man has ever been engaged in the service of the Lord in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Brother Hugh J. Cannon, now presiding over the Swiss and German mission, has been selected to succeed Brother Anderson as the editor of the Improvement Era—a most splendid successor to a most splendid man.

I feel that we have great cause to be grateful for the blessings of the Lord to us as a people.

IMPRESSED WITH HYMN

I was profoundly impressed this morning in listening to the congregation sing, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet." I am sure that whenever we as Latter-day Saints sing this hymn our minds go back to the time when it was written, and we think of the marvelous and wonderful work accomplished by the Prophet Joseph Smith. I am going to take the time, although you all know it by heart, perhaps, to read this hymn. I do not think I have ever done so before in public in my life:

We thank thee, O God, for a prophet
 To guide us in these latter days;
 We thank thee for sending the gospel
 To lighten our minds with its rays:
 We thank thee for every blessing
 Bestowed by thy bounteous hand;
 We feel it a pleasure to serve thee,
 And love to obey thy command.

When dark clouds of trouble hang o'er us
 And threaten our peace to destroy,
 There is hope smiling brightly before us,
 And we know that deliverance is nigh;
 We doubt not the Lord nor his goodness,
 We've proved him in days that are past:
 The wicked who fight against Zion
 Will surely be smitten at last.

We'll sing of his goodness and mercy,
 We'll praise him by day and by night.
 Rejoice in his glorious gospel,
 And bask in its life-giving light:
 Thus on to eternal perfection
 The honest and faithful will go,
 While they who reject this glad message
 Shall never such happiness know.

THE PROPHET JOSEPH

Speaking of the Prophet Joseph, an eminent writer refers to him in the following language:

"Yet he being dead yet speaketh. The work he began has never ceased. * *
 "Who can explain Joseph Smith? What are 'revelations from God'? What is their test? Is it not beyond all reason that a lad, born of poor parents, devoid of any save the commonest education, too poor to buy books, should have accomplished what he did in less than forty years, unless there were some great reason for it?

"Let anyone, even a literary genius, after forty years of life, try to write a companion volume to the Book of Mormon, and then almost daily for a number of years give out 'revelations' by the score that internally harmonize one with another, at the same time formulate a system of doctrine for a new church, introduce many new principles, resuscitate extinct priesthoods, and formulate a system of church government which has no superior on earth.

"Would he succeed in making the system coherent? Could he influence scores of intelligent, wise, thoughtful, educated, religiously trained men, like John Taylor, Dr. Richards, and scores of others, besides attracting thousands to the fold of his church, as did Joseph Smith? Even if one were assured that the prophet was an imposter, that does not lessen the marvel. The mystery, the riddle, the problem, is even greater, than before. * * *

"I offer no explanation. * * *

"To deny such a man a wonderful power over the human heart and intellect is absurd. Only fanatical prejudice can ignore it. However he may be accounted for by the reasoning mind, Joseph Smith, the 'Mormon' prophet, was one of the wonders of his time. That he is not an enigma to his followers (as he certainly is to his critics) is only another proof of his wonderfulness."

I will read a part of section 135, Doctrine and Covenants:

"To seal the testimony of this book and the Book of Mormon, we announce the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and Hyrum Smith, the patriarch. They were shot in Carthage jail, on the 27th of June, 1844. * * *

CITES ACHIEVEMENTS

"Joseph Smith, the prophet and seer of the Lord, has done more, save Jesus only, for the salvation of men in this world, than any other man that ever lived in it. In the short space of twenty years, he has brought forth the Book of Mormon, which he translated by the gift and power of God and has been the means of publishing it on two continents; has sent the fulness of the everlasting gospel, which it contained, to the four quarters of the earth; has brought forth the revelations and commandments which compose this book of Doctrine and Covenants, and many other wise documents and instructions for the benefit of the children of men; gathered many thousands of the Latter-day Saints, founded a great city, and left a fame and a name that cannot be slain. He lived great, and he died great in the eyes of God and his people; and like most of the Lord's anointed in ancient times, has sealed his mission and his works with his own blood; and so has his brother Hyrum. In life they were not divided, and in death they were not separated!

"When Joseph went to Carthage to deliver himself up to the pretended requirements of the law, two or three days previous to his assassination, he said: 'I am going like a lamb to the slaughter; but I am calm as a summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offense towards God, and towards all men. I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me—he was murdered in cold blood!'"

THE ARIZONA TEMPLE

I rejoice in the testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. During the last year it has fallen to my lot to have the privilege of visiting from here to New York, and in the northern section of the country, and to have the blessed privilege of going into Arizona and there dedicating one more temple to the Most High God. I rejoice in the rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord that was enjoyed by those of us who had the opportunity of attending the dedicatory services of that temple. I rejoice exceedingly in the remarkable publicity that was given to us by the newspapers of Arizona. Never in the history of the Church has there ever been manifest a more friendly feeling toward the Latter-day Saints by those not of us than was exhibited by the good people of Arizona. They devoted page after page of their papers to an account of the erection of the temple, in publishing a sermon upon the vicarious labor for the dead, by Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, in giving illustrations and having interviews of a favorable character. In addition the president of the Church and some of those who were at the dedication services were invited to meet with the legislature that was then in session, and the president of the senate made some very complimentary remarks regarding the splendid edifice—one of the finest buildings in Arizona. He also complimented the people themselves on their integrity and their remarkable accomplishments in that section of the country. I could not help but contemplate the difference in conditions as compared with the time when there was a feeling of animosity, almost of hatred, existing in the minds of the people of the state of Arizona, regarding the Latter-day Saints. I rejoiced in being able to pay tribute, in answer to the speech by the president of the senate, to the senators of the United States from Arizona and their defense of the "Mormon" people, and their uniform testimony of the integrity and devotion of our people.

PURCHASE OF HILL CUMORAH

Within a short time the Church has purchased the Hill Cumorah. The purchase embraces the farm where the hill stands, and the adjoining farm, which together with one that we had already purchased, including a part of the hill, gives us now the entire possession of the Hill Cumorah. I know that the hearts of the Latter-day Saints thrilled with pride when the announcement was made that we had secured this property. We now have the home where the prophet was born, and have erected a monument there. We now have the house and farm of Peter Whitmer, where the Church was born. We now have the Palmyra home. We have nearly all of the spots that are sacred in the history of the Church; and we rejoice in the financial condition of the Church whereby we have been able to accomplish these things.

TEMPLE WORK

I rejoice in the temple work that is being done, and I wish to ask the Saints to try to shape their affairs so that they can occasionally go to the temple. For years I felt that I was too busy to find a day or an evening in which to go to the temple. A little over a year ago I made up my mind that by planning my affairs, by staying away from lectures or concerts or theatres or operas, that I could go to the temple at least once every week and have ordinances performed in behalf of some of my loved ones who had passed away. By making up my mind that I could do this I had no difficulty whatever in going through the temple once a week during the entire year. Starting this year I felt that by a little extra effort I could go twice a week, and I have had no difficulty in doing this. True, I have had to miss, perhaps, an opera or theatre or some other function at which I should have liked to be present, but I have had no difficulty whatever during the past three months, in going to the temple twice a week, and when I can do so I go more than twice a week, so as to make up for the time when I am absent from the city. Up to the first day of April I had endowments to my credit of more than two a week for this year. We can generally do that which we wish to do. A young man can find an immense amount of time to spend with his sweetheart; he can arrange his affairs to do that. We can arrange our affairs to get exercise in the shape of golf and otherwise; we can arrange our affairs to have amusements; and if we make up our minds to do so we can arrange our affairs to do temple work, judging from my own experience of the last fifteen months.

I pray that the Lord will inspire each and all of us to greater diligence in performing to the full extent of our ability the duties and the labors that devolve upon us in doing vicarious work for our dead.

A WONDERFUL DECLARATION

A very wonderful declaration was made by Moroni to the Prophet Joseph Smith one hundred and five years ago this coming September:

"Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."

And the priesthood with all its powers, rights and privileges, has been restored to us. Elijah has come. I will not take your time to read from the 110th section of the Doctrine and Covenants, which declares that the Savior appeared to Joseph Smith and to Oliver Cowdery, and that Moses, and Elias and Elijah also appeared and conferred upon them all the keys of all the dispensations of the gospel that have ever existed upon the earth.

"And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers.

"If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming."

No more wonderful thing has ever been accomplished in the history of the world than the turning of the hearts of the children to their fathers. From the day this message was declared by Moroni to the Prophet Joseph, men and women all over the world have been organizing societies, hunting up their ancestors, and compiling genealogical records of their families. Millions of dollars have been expended for these purposes. I have spoken to and heard many times of men who have spent large sums of money to compile a record of their forefathers, and after it was compiled, when asked why they did it, they said: "I do not know; I was seized with an irresistible desire to compile that record and to spend money freely to do it. Now that it is compiled I have no special use for it." The Latter-day Saints value books of that kind beyond price or money, and when we seek earnestly, year after year, to gain knowledge regarding those of our family who have passed away without a knowledge of the gospel, I am sure the Lord blesses us in obtaining it. There is a little account of a remarkable and wonderful blessing bestowed in connection with the ancestors of my wife which is contained in the last issue of the Genealogical Magazine.

That the Lord may bless you and me and every soul that has an abiding testimony of the divinity of the gospel in which we are engaged, to whom he has given a knowledge that he lives and that Jesus is the Son of the Living God, the Redeemer of the world, and that Joseph Smith was his prophet, to so order our lives that our light shining forth through the example of our lives may bring those who know not the truth to a knowledge of the gospel, is my humble prayer, and I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I feel very grateful to the Lord, my brethren and sisters, that through his mercy all of us who are assembled here this morning enjoy the opportunity of meeting together in general conference, upon the ninety-eighth anniversary of the organization of the Church.

Reference has been made by the president to the acquisition by the Church of the spot of ground in the state of New York known as the Hill Cumorah. It appears to me to be an event of such importance that I desire to devote the short time which is at my disposal this morning to a discussion of that subject. There have been some differences of opinion in regard to it, and in order that I might be correct in the statements which I make I have this morning finished a short manuscript which I would like to read—the first time, I believe, in my experience, that I have ever addressed a congregation in this manner, and I do it for the purpose stated.

OF MORE THAN ORDINARY IMPORTANCE

The purchase of this hill which President Grant has announced, is an event of more than ordinary importance to the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The memories of the remote past which cluster round this sacred spot, its close association with the opening of the present gospel dispensation, which has resulted in bringing together this congregation of people, for without it this tabernacle would not have been erected, nor would we have been gathered here in worship today, and the thought which we entertain of the possibilities which its bosom may unfold, make the acquisition of this hill almost an epochal accomplishment in the history of the Church.

If our Bible chronology is correct, and it is at least the best we have, it was in the year 599 before the birth of Christ, our Lord, that Zedekiah was chosen to be king of Judea. His reign was of short duration, extending over a period of only eleven years. He was in rebellion against the Babylonian kingdom, and Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, with his armies overran Judea, made Zedekiah prisoner, put out his eyes, killed his sons, and carried the king away captive to Babylon.

It was during the reign of this king that Lehi and his family, Ishmael and members of his household and Zoram, who had been a servant to Laban, left Jerusalem and began the journey which in time brought them to the American continent.

As a guide to their spiritual life these people brought with them that part of the Holy Scripture known to us as the Old Testament, which contained the first five books of Moses, the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah and others of the ancient prophets. These records were engraved upon plates of brass.

TWO SETS OF PLATES

Soon after the arrival of these people and their establishment upon this continent, Nephi, the son of Lehi, was commanded to make other plates, on which a record of the history of his people was to be written. Two sets of plates were made from metal which was smelted from ores that abounded in the new world to which the Nephites had come; upon them Nephi commenced to record the history of his people. Both of these sets of plates which were made were called the plates of Nephi. Upon one set, which was called the larger plates of Nephi, the secular history of the people was kept, the reign of their various kings, their system of democratic government under the judges who were chosen by the voice of the people, and their wars and contentions.

A smaller set was made on which the religious history of the people was kept a record of their faith in God and the service rendered to him, their idolatry, the hand-dealings of the Lord among them, the predictions of their prophets and the persecutions which they suffered because of their faith in, and adherence to the doctrines taught by their fathers.

CAREFULLY PRESERVED

It was principally from these latter plates that Mormon made the abridgment which constitutes the volume known as the Book of Mormon. These records were carefully preserved, and passed through the hands of many different custodians before the history closed, which was more than four hundred years after the birth of the Redeemer of the world.

Besides these two sets of the plates of Nephi, and the brass plates which were brought from Jerusalem, there were twenty-four plates of gold, upon which was recorded a brief abridgment of the history of a people who came from Babylon to this continent long before the arrival of the Nephite colony. They left the old world at the time of the building of the Tower of Babel, about 2,200 years before the birth of Christ. It was from these latter plates that Moroni, the son of Mormon, transcribed that portion of the Book of Mormon known as the Book of Ether.

It was three hundred twenty-one years after the birth of Christ that all of these records came into the hands of Ammaron, who received them from his brother Amos, who was the son of Nephi, who wrote the Fourth Book of Nephi, which appears in the Book of Mormon, as the following shows—I am quoting here, as I shall continue to quote, from the Book of Mormon itself:

"And it came to pass that when 320 years had passed away, Ammaron, being constrained by the Holy Ghost, did hide up the records which were sacred—yea, even all the sacred records which had been handed down from generation to generation, which were sacred—even until the three hundred twentieth year from the coming of Christ.

"And he did hide them up unto the Lord, that they might come again unto the remnant of the House of Jacob, according to the prophecies and the promises of the Lord. And thus is the end of the record of Ammaron."

AMMARON TO MORMON

One year later Ammaron called Mormon to him and gave him the following instruction:

"And now I, Mormon, make a record of the things which I have both seen and heard, and call it the Book of Mormon.

"And about the time that Ammaron hid up the records unto the Lord, he came unto me, (I being about ten years of age, and I began to be learned somewhat after the manner of my people) and Ammaron said unto me: I perceive that thou art a sober child, and art quick to observe;

"Therefore when ye are about twenty and four years old I would that ye should remember the things that ye have observed concerning this people; and when ye are of that age go to the land Antum, unto a hill which shall be called Shim; and there have I deposited unto the Lord all the sacred engravings concerning this people.

"And behold ye shall take the plates of Nephi unto yourself, and the remainder shall ye leave in the place where they are; and ye shall engrave on the plates of Nephi all the things that ye have observed concerning this people.

"And I, Mormon, being a descendant of Nephi, (and my father's name was Mormon) I remember the things which Ammaron commanded me."

Fourteen years after this charge had been given to Mormon he writes as follows:

"And now, the city of Jashon was near the land where Ammaron had deposited the records unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed. And behold I had gone according to the word of Ammaron, and taken the plates of Nephi, and did make a record according to the words of Ammaron."

It will be observed that at this time only the plates of Nephi were removed from the hill Shim, by Mormon.

YEARS OF CONSTANT WAR

It was forty years later, as near as we are able to fix the date that Mormon again visited this hill, under different circumstances, as the following shows. Forty years had passed, forty years of constant war and bloodshed between the Nephite people and their enemies the Lamanites. The Nephites were fleeing before their enemies, taking all of the inhabitants with them when Mormon says:

"And now I, Mormon, seeing that the Lamanites were about to overthrow the land, therefore I did go to the Hill Shim, and did take up all the records, which Ammaron had hid up unto the Lord."

Mormon, after taking possession of the records, returned to the command of the Nephite armies. The sacred records, which had lain in the hill Shim for more than fifty years, were now in the custody of Mormon, and the Nephite people were fleeing before their enemies. Ten years later, ten years of hopeless struggle, Mormon again writes as follows:

"And I, Mormon, wrote an epistle to the king of the Lamanites, and desired of him that he would grant us that we might gather together our people unto the land of Cumorah, by a hill which was called Cumorah, and there we could give them battle.

"And it came to pass that the king of the Lamanites did grant unto me the thing which I desired.

"And it came to pass that we did march forth to the land of Cumorah, and we did pitch our tents round about the hill Cumorah; and it was a land of many waters, rivers and fountains; and here we had hoped to gain advantage over the Lamanites.

"And when three hundred and eighty and four years had passed away, we had gathered in all the remainder of our people unto the land of Cumorah.

IN THE HILL CUMORAH

"And it came to pass that when we had gathered in all our people in one to the land of Cumorah, behold, I, Mormon, began to be old"—this man, at this time was, past 70 years of age and was still the commander-in-chief of the Nephite army; "and knowing it to be the last struggle of my people, and having been commanded of the Lord that I should not suffer the records which had been handed down by our fathers, which were sacred, to fall into the hands of the Lamanites, (for the Lamanites would destroy them) therefore I made this record out of the plates of Nephi, and hid up in the Hill Cumorah all the records which had been entrusted to me by the hand of the Lord, save it were these few plates which I gave unto my son Moroni.

"And it came to pass that my people, with their wives and their children, did now behold the armies of the Lamanites marching toward them; and with that awful fear of death which fills the breasts of all the wicked, did they await to receive them."

THE FINAL DISPOSITION

So far as we have information this was the final disposition which was made of the records given into the custody of Mormon, from the plates of Nephi. This latter, with the addition of the Book of Ether, and the few chapters written by Moroni, constitute the record contained in the Book of Mormon.

All of the remaining records, Mormon tells us, were deposited in the Hill Cumorah.

That the Hill Cumorah and the Hill Ramah are identical is shown by the following: Moroni, in the Book of Ether, says:

"And it came to pass that the armies of Coriantumr did press upon the armies of Shiz—he is telling the story now of this first people who came to the American continent from the Tower of Babel—"that they heat them, that they caused them to flee before them; and they did flee southward and did pitch their tents in a place which was called Ogath.

"And it came to pass that the army of Coriantumr did pitch their tents by the hill Ramah; and it was in that same hill where my father Mormon did hide up the records unto the Lord, which were sacred."

The passages which I have quoted from the Book of Mormon and the more extended discussion of this subject by Elder B. H. Roberts which was published in The Deseret News of March 3, 1928, definitely establish the following facts: That the Hill Cumorah, and the Hill Ramah are identical; that it was around this hill that the armies of both the Jaredites and Nephites, fought their great last battles; that it was in this hill that Mormon deposited all of the sacred records which had been entrusted to his care by Ammaron, except the abridgment which he had made from the plates of Nephi, which were delivered into the hands of his son, Moroni. We know positively that it was in this hill that Moroni deposited the abridgment made by his father, and his own abridgment of the record of the Jaredites, and that it was from this hill that Joseph Smith obtained possession of them.

PART OF THE RECORD SEALED

Only a portion of the record which came into possession of Joseph Smith was translated, and is contained in the present edition of the Book of Mormon. Part of the record was sealed, which he was forbidden to translate. The first Nephi, foreseeing that which would occur among the descendants of his father, has this to say:

"And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall bring forth, to you the words of a book, and they shall be the words of them which have slumbered.

"And behold the book shall be sealed; and in the book shall be a revelation from God, from the beginning of the world to the ending thereof.

"Wherefore, because of the things which are sealed up, the things which are sealed shall not be delivered in the day of the wickedness and abominations of the people. Wherefore the book shall be kept from them. * * *

"And the day cometh that the words of the book which were sealed shall be read upon the housetops; and they shall be read by the power of Christ; and all things shall be revealed unto the children of men which ever have been among the children of men, and which ever will be, even unto the end of the earth."

FROM THE BOOK OF ETHER

The footnotes concerning that which I have read refer us to the book of Ether from which I desire to read a few paragraphs.

"And the Lord commanded the brother of Jared to go down out of the mount from the presence of the Lord, and write the things which he had seen; and they were forbidden to come unto the children of men, until after he should be lifted up upon the cross; and for this cause did king Mosiah keep them, that they should not come unto the world until after Christ should show himself unto his people.

"And after Christ truly had showed himself unto his people he commanded that they should be made manifest.

"And now, after that, they have all dwindled in unbelief; and there is none save it be the Lamanites, and they have rejected the gospel of Christ; therefore I am commanded that I should hide them up again in the earth.

"Behold I have written upon these plates the very things which the brother of Jared saw; and there never were greater things made manifest than those which were made manifest unto the brother of Jared.

"Wherefore the Lord hath commanded me to write them; and I have written them. And he commanded me that I should seal them up; and he also hath commanded that I should seal up the interpretation thereof; wherefore I have sealed up the interpreters, according to the commandment of the Lord.

"For the Lord said unto me: They shall not go forth unto the Gentiles until the day that they shall repent of their iniquity, and become clean before the Lord. * * *

"And now I, Moroni, have written the words which were commanded me, according to my memory; and I have told you the things which I have sealed up; therefore touch them not in order that ye may translate; for that thing is forbidden you, except by and by it shall be wisdom in God."

AWAITING THE TIME

This sealed portion of the record which came into the hands of Joseph Smith but was not translated by him so far as we are aware, the abridgment made by Mormon, the record of Ether, and the other sacred records which were deposited in the Hill Cumorah, still lie in their repository, awaiting the time when the Lord shall see fit to bring them forth, that they may be published to the world.

Whether they have been removed from the spot where Mormon deposited them we cannot tell, but this we know, that they are safe under the guardianship of the Lord, and that they will be brought forth at the proper time as the Lord has declared they should be, for the benefit and blessing of the people of the world, for his word never fails.

According to the Book of Mormon many hundreds of thousands of people fell in battle around this hill, and the immediate vicinity. It was here that two once powerful nations were exterminated so far as their natural existence was concerned. It was here that these nations gathered together for their last great struggles.

UNTIL THE LAST

These people were human, as we are; they carried with them their most precious possessions until the last, and when the end of the mighty struggle came, and the result was in doubt, they hid them away in order that they might not fall into the hands of their enemies.

Without doubt these treasures lie concealed today, some of them, at least, to be brought forth in the not distant future. How soon this will be we do not know, but this is certain, we are more than a century nearer that time than we were at the time when Joseph Smith took from their resting place in the Hill Cumorah, the plates from which he translated the contents of the Book of Mormon.

All of these incidents to which I have referred, my brethren and sisters, are very closely associated with this particular spot in the State of New York. Therefore I feel, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, that the acquisition of that spot of ground is more than an incident in the history of the Church; it is an epoch—an epoch which in my opinion is fraught with that which may become of greater interest to the Latter-day Saints than that which has already occurred. We know that all of these records, all the sacred records of the Nephite people, were deposited by Mormon in that hill. That incident alone is sufficient to make it the sacred and hallowed spot that it is to us. I thank God that in a way which seems to have been providential it has come into the possession of the Church.

I bear witness to you that the words which I have read here, quoted from the Book of Mormon, which refer to the future, will be fulfilled. Those additional records will come forth, they will be published to the world, that the children of our Father may be converted to faith in Christ, our Lord and Redeemer, through obedience to the doctrines which he taught. May God our Father hasten that day, is my humble prayer, and I ask it through Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet, "An angel from on high," was sung by Claude Cornwall and Ellen Copening Ferrin.

SYLVESTER Q. CANNON

Presiding Bishop of the Church

It is a surprise to me, my brethren and sisters, to be called upon this morning to address this great congregation. I rejoice with you, however, in the privilege of being present and of listening to the testimonies, the instructions and the inspiring remarks made by those who have spoken. I appreciate the fact that this work is the work of the Lord and that it is growing. I was reminded while President Grant was speaking, that in examining the statistics for some years past, I notice that the membership of the Church today is over four times as great as it was fifty years ago, and in other respects the work of the Lord is growing and prospering.

Yet I realize, also, that there is great room for progress and improvement in every line of activity. If it were not so we would not be the people of the Lord, because he expects of his people that they shall improve and increase in good works and in activity continually. We are told that the Savior said to his disciples upon one occasion: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." I appreciate the fact that this life is a life of progression, of improvement, of learning, and of the application of that learning to the problems of life and to the bettering of conditions among humanity.

We have heard this morning the statement from President Grant of the work that has been done in a financial way in the benefiting and the blessing of the people of the Church and of mankind. As to the money expended from the tithes during the past year, considering the membership of the Church and the conditions of the people, I venture to say that there is no other organization in the world that disburses such an amount of money as does this Church. I venture to say, also, that there is no other organization that is expending it as efficiently as the Church is doing. This is because of the fact that practically all of the money employed for charitable purposes, for missionary work, and for the construction, operation and maintenance of the meetinghouses and chapels throughout the Church, is expended in a very economical way, largely through the voluntary, cooperative effort given by the people.

I am reminded of a statement made in a government census report just received at our office a few days ago, of one of the organizations in this country—a national organization of a charitable nature—wherein it is shown, as I remember it, that less than 25% of the money expended by that organization was used for benevolences. The remainder of it was used for salaries and for other purposes. Some was used for building construction and maintenance, but a large proportion of it was used for other than benevolent purposes, for which it was primarily raised.

We have had in this state recently a Community Chest drive. The Community Chest is an organization that is recognized as being necessary, and more efficient and helpful than is the case where individual drives are undertaken by various agencies. The result of the drive has been to accumulate funds amounting to about $150,000, for something like nineteen agencies, and for the administration of that organization. The members of the Church appreciate the fact that this is a desirable thing for the community needs.

I would like to call your attention, however, to the fact that, in addition to what has been done by the Community Chest this year and last year and the previous year, the members of the Church living in these city stakes, and the Church itself, have given directly for charitable purposes in this city each year an amount equal to that raised for the Community Chest. In addition thereto there has been spent something like $30,000 for other purposes for which various agencies of the Chest are instituted. In other words, over $180,000 was given and expended in this city by the Church last year for such purposes as the agencies which the Community Chest is undertaking to support. And, of the money donated for charitable purposes every cent of that which was given, went directly for the purpose for which it was intended. A great volunteer effort was given by the people of the Church.

I think there is no other organization in the world that is willing to give the service or to make the sacrifices manifest by the people of this Church. This is not to be ascribed to the people of themselves, but to the influence of the Gospel upon them. I would like to read a word or two from the scriptures. Jesus in teaching his disciples on one occasion said:

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

In another place the Savior gave a parable in which he describes a man who has acquired means:

"The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully:

"And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

"And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

"And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry.

"But God said unto him, Thou fool! this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

I think that one of the most objectionable conditions which prevails in the world today is that of selfishness and greed. It has caused more hatred, strife, bitterness and warfare among men than almost any other thing, so far as my understanding goes. Even today in this nation we are experiencing evidences of such conditions and actions on the part of men in endeavoring to build up their own fortunes at the expense of the welfare of the community. The people of the nation are aroused, I think, to a certain extent at least, to an appreciation of the seriousness of this condition. Prosperity tends very often to lead men away from a spirit of unselfishness. As they acquire means they tend to become, very often, greedy and selfish, and concerned only with their own welfare. I believe it was the Apostle Paul who said that the love of money is the root of all evil. Surely, when men set their hearts and their minds solely to the acquirement of wealth, there is great danger of their losing the perspective of things that are more important in life.

In contrast to the excessive desire for self-aggrandizement which is all too common in the world, is the spirit of charity and sacrifice, of love and consideration, which is the spirit of the Gospel of Christ. The Latter-day Saints are a people who have been trained to sacrifice. They have been trained to understand the principles of the gospel which the Lord has established, which requires sacrifice. There is no principle that is invoked today in the Church, or that is to be found anywhere, that is more equitable, more efficient, or that helps more to promote the spirit of humility, faith and stewardship on the part of men, than does the principle of tithing and of offerings.

The Lord has given these principles to us that we may learn to sacrifice, that we may learn to overcome selfishness, and that we may learn to appreciate the fact that the things which this earth possesses and the things which we have in our possession are the Lord's. We can use them only during this life, and we ought to be willing to cultivate the spirit of giving one-tenth, at least, of our increase, for the welfare of his work. I can think of no other organization, or no other possibility of cooperation in so efficient a manner as that which is possible in this Church, through the paying of tithes and offerings whereby the means obtained through cooperative effort can be employed most effectively for the welfare of the people.

I do not know of any other organization that is engaged to the same extent as this Church, comparatively, in the building of temples, chapels, and recreation places, where the people can enjoy the spiritual, social and recreational features that are afforded by the Church. I visited one ward recently—a little ward comprising four hundred people—which, with the help of the Church, had erected a meeting-house that cost, I think, $70,000. The four hundred members in that ward, almost all of them, had lost their homes largely because of adverse conditions in the farming industry and the lack of a market for their farm produce. Yet they had themselves donated in money and in labor nearly one-half of the amount I have stated. Can you appreciate what a sacrifice is made by those people? Sometimes I think we are inclined because of our desire to build fine meetinghouses, to possibly overreach ourselves and put a greater strain upon the people than is desirable or necessary. But the people seem willing to do these things.

There is no premium on poverty. The faithful observance of the law of tithing does not impoverish those who practise it. On the contrary, it is a principle of blessing and increase. The Lord desires that his children shall prosper temporally as well as spiritually. But prosperity, whether temporal or spiritual, need not prevail at the expense of the other. Tithing is the most important principle now to be obeyed for the building up of the work of God in a financial way. It is the first donation expected of us in the advancement of his work. If all men and women throughout the Church who are earning would faithfully pay their tithes, the Church would have the means to do the things which are required without some other donations. In other words, the people would not have to donate additional means for meetinghouses if the members generally would observe the principle of tithing.

Now, as I stated, this principle is one that develops in men faith in God. It develops spirituality. Strange as it may seem to some, it is one of the most potent means by which we evidence our real faith in the Lord and in his work; for we give evidence of our faith by our works. We realize the fact that we are his children, that we are here but for a time, and that we can take none of the goods that we possess away from this earth. It is important that we should employ the means we may possess in a most effective manner for the welfare of our fellowmen as well as our own good.

Finally, observance of the law of tithing develops in us a spirit of economy and thrift, and of care in the handling of our own affairs. It helps us to overcome selfishness, and to be considerate of our fellowmen. It promotes the spirit of cooperation. It develops greater faith in the Lord and his work. And it will make this a land of Zion to us.

I have noticed repeatedly, and I think it is generally true, that those who are conscientious tithepayers are the ones who are able to meet their obligations fairly, and to make steady progress. They are blessed sufficiently at least to fulfil their obligations and to get ahead. The Lord blesses them and they enjoy spiritual as well as temporal blessings. I pray that the Lord may help us as Latter-day Saints to so live that we may be worthy to receive his blessings, through the development of the spirit of sacrifice, and the observance of this and every other principle of the Gospel. With all the prosperity that we may enjoy, and the general improvement in our financial conditions, may we still continue to maintain faithfully that principle, and may we go forward and cultivate in our hearts the feeling that we are stewards of all we possess, and that we hold it in trust for the Lord and his work. May we develop the spirit of dedicating that which we possess for the building up of his work! I pray the Lord to bless us to this end, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, to be in attendance at this conference, and to have the opportunity of adding my testimony to those that have been borne and that will be borne to the divinity of the work in which we are engaged.

While listening to the opening remarks of President Grant, my mind reverted back over the history and the accomplishments of the Church in the years that have passed, since it was organized in this dispensation in which we live. Truly, it is marvelous to contemplate the work, the development and the faith of our people. It is marvelous to note how the Church has extended, and how rapidly the stone that is destined to fill the whole earth, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, is rolling forth. It is marvelous to contemplate the wonderful foundation that was laid through the Prophet Joseph Smith for the Church to build upon. Accurately was it all laid out and designed. It would seem that there might have been some things instituted in the beginning that would have needed correction as the work proceeded. That certainly would have been the case, had not this work been established through and by the inspiration of our Heavenly Father to his chosen prophet. There has been laid for the Church and this people a foundation upon which they have builded without wavering, a foundation of faith that has withstood all of the trials and the tribulations and the persecutions and the drivings to which the Church has been subjected. The hymn that propounds the question, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word," is answered by the growth and the development and the continuity of the Church that was established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith. I rejoice in this foundation of faith that has held our people together, and that has kept us going through all these years that have passed. I read with marvel in my heart the deeds of valor and of heroism enacted by our pioneer parents who came to this land. I stood again, the other day, on the site where Brigham Young made that memorable remark: "This is the place!" I had just crossed a desert country, overland from El Paso, passing through parched and barren lands, and through sections that were inland seas in years long passed, the ground parched and cracked, and as I stood there I thought that I could visualize what this country must have looked like at that time. Yet, by the vision that was given, through the inspiration of the Lord, his prophet was able to say: "This is the place." And the foundation of faith laid in the hearts of the people of the Church was sufficient to make them believe it and to build upon it, so as to withstand the privations, the trials and the hardships incident to the conquering of this land. What a miracle has been wrought! This is a veritable garden spot; a beautiful city has arisen on that wasteland.

I recalled, this morning, hearing my father tell me of his boy-hood days, when grandfather was away on a mission, and grandmother's meager earnings as a dressmaker were not sufficient to supply what was necessary to eat. They roamed these barren hills to gather segos, thistle tops and red root, and from those things, many and many times, made out their meager meal. It is marvelous to contrast those conditions with what we see today. But I maintain, my brethren and sisters, that men would not have done that without vision; men would not have done that without a foundation of faith that made them know, beyond all doubt, that this is the work of the Lord, and that they were in his service. They knew that out of their labors would grow the very things that we, their children, witness here today.

The question to me, my brethren and sisters, is, How firm a foundation is there laid in the work of the Lord for my faith? Will I be able to endure to the end? Will I be able to meet the changing conditions that I find in my life? I am not called upon now to do those things that I had to do as a boy, for I went into a new land and had to make fences, build ditches, kill snakes, ride the cattle range, and do many things that neither I nor my children are called upon to do now; but I meet conditions, my brethren and sisters, that test and try my faith. Will I be able to live and maintain my integrity and continue to build upon the faith of my fathers? Will I continue to build upon the broad foundation that is laid for our faith in the work of the Lord? We are living in an age of skepticism. We are living in an age of doubt. We are living in a day when men in all parts of the country doubt even the existence of our Father in heaven. Statistics reveal the fact that in these United States half of the population, practically, are without organizations in a religious way. They are unchurched; they have no particular affiliation with any religious denomination. I do not say, nor do I believe from my contact with them, that they have no faith in God, but they are not anchored, they are wandering, stumbling, as it were, at noonday, feeling for the wall, as does the blind man. This, my brethren and sisters, is because of the skepticism that has grown up, because of the false teaching in regard to Christ and his mission, and in regard to the gospel that was established as the means of salvation to our Father's children in the world. Will we be led away by the teachings of these men who are teaching false doctrine, or can we maintain our faith and our integrity in this glorious gospel? We have a marvelous mission, my brethren and sisters, to carry this work into the world. There are thousands and thousands of people, millions of them, who are not conversant with the principles of the gospel. As I have said, they do not believe that there is a religion upon the earth which is divine, and still there is something in their hearts, something within them that reaches out, and they are longing for something tangible, for something real, that they might know where the word of God is. Within our keeping is the responsibility of carrying this great message of the restored gospel to them.

I bear you witness, my brethren and sisters, that we have the truth. I am satisfied, beyond a doubt, that the Book of Mormon was found in the Hill Cumorah, which hill has been acquired by the Church. I rejoice in this. I knew long before last summer that the Book of Mormon was true. I have studied it, I have pondered upon it, I have read it again and again in two languages. I have taught the people among whom I have been called to labor that it is true; but last July, for the first time in my life, I had the opportunity of standing upon that hill, and I endeavored to visualize what transpired there one hundred years ago. In my heart, I prayed to the Lord that I might have a witness there that the book is true, that the record had been taken from that sacred ground. I bear you my testimony that I know, as well as I know that I am looking into your faces, that the angel Moroni stood there with the boy prophet and handed to him those records. I bear you my testimony that I know that that boy, by the inspiration of the Lord, translated that record, and we have it as a witness for God in the earth today. The gospel, in its fulness, is contained in that sacred record. I would that the people of the Church would study it more than they do. I had occasion to make frequent inquiry, during the last year and a half, among our missionaries who came into the mission field as to their having read and studied that book before they came out. I find, my brethren and sisters, that there are far too many of them who have not given it serious consideration, and have not studied it. I rejoice in the fact that there is in the Church a disposition now, among the auxiliary organizations, to get the youth of Zion to read the Book of Mormon. You cannot read it without believing it is the word of God, and that it has been given to us for a purpose. I rejoice in the opportunity that has come to me to labor with the people whose ancestors wrote it. I bear you my witness that the Lamanite people are of Israel. I bear you my witness that they are descendants of those men who wrote that book, and I wish to do my part in their behalf. I wish to be instrumental, in the hands of the Lord, in bringing back to them the glorious knowledge that gives such joy to me,—that the Book of Mormon is true, that it contains a record of their forefathers, that it will teach to them the principles of the everlasting gospel, and that, by following those teachings, they may be saved in our Father's kingdom.

We have the Bible, a wonderful record which we all appreciate, as well as the Book of Mormon. But I wonder, as is propounded in the 29th chapter of Second Nephi, whether we have reflected whence we obtained the Bible? We obtained it through the Jewish nation. It was the Jews who wrote it, and the Book of Mormon asks the question: What credit do the Gentiles give to the Jews for the Bible that they appreciate so highly? Do we esteem them as we should? Do we reach out to them, as we should, in an endeavor to make true and to bring to pass the glorious promises of restoration for the Jews, as contained in the Bible? Likewise, do we, as a people, realize, to the full extent, our obligation to the children of those who wrote the Book of Mormon? Do we always feel inclined to reach out to them and endeavor to make possible and to bring to a reality and to fulfillment the promises of the Lord made to those people, as recorded in that book?

I rejoice in the testimony that I have, that the gospel is true. My desire is to serve, in my humble and weak way, so long as the Lord requires my service. I desire that my family shall be found employed and engaged in service to our Father in heaven and to his Church. There is nothing else in all the world that I love so much as I do my family, my children. To me they are very dear, and I desire them to grow up in an environment where they shall have this same faith, and where they shall have this same testimony. I desire them to have an opportunity to serve in our Father's kingdom also. I love the young men and the young women whom the Lord has sent out to labor with me, during the past twenty-one years, in the missionary field. I feel a kinship to them, almost equal to that which I feel toward my own boys and girls. I rejoice when I see them go home in faith, and engage actively in the ministry there; and I rejoice, beyond measure, to have an experience such as I had just the other day, when a young man walked into my office, for I had not received word that he was coming or why he had come. When I asked him, "How long are you going to stay?" he said, "I have come to serve again as a missionary, for six months, in this mission." Twenty-one years ago he served as secretary in the Mexican mission. He has grown and has developed during those twenty-one years. He is more efficient today than he was then. I rejoice to see them come back, not only with their spirits as bright as when they left, but with renewed energy, with renewed intelligence, and better qualified to deliver the great gospel message.

Let us assume the responsibilities that are ours, my brethren and sisters, in the spread of the gospel. Let us be mindful of the fact that we must teach by example as well as by precept. The Lord help us to do so, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The following telegram has been received from S. N. Kunz of Montpelier, Idaho:

"We are hearing the opening services by radio more distinctly than we usually do in most sections of the Tabernacle."

The congregation sang, "Redeemer of Israel."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Heber J. Burgon, president of the East Jordan stake of Zion.

The meeting adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

Promptly at 2 o'clock p. m. President Heber J. Grant opened the meeting by announcing that the congregation would sing the hymn, "O ye mountains high."

After the singing, the opening prayer was offered by Elder David A. Broadbent, president of the Wasatch stake of Zion.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

There will be held, the first of next week, in San Francisco, the annual convention of the Boy Scouts of America. I promised myself the pleasure of being there, but circumstances prevent me from going.

As most of you are aware, the states of Utah and Idaho have taken a very active part in this movement, as a great many of our boys belong to the Boy Scouts of America.

We are honored today with the presence of Dr. Roy O. Wyland, who is the Director of Education of the National Council of Boy Scouts of America. We will now have the pleasure of hearing Dr. Wyland.

MR. ROY O. WYLAND

Director of Education, National Organization, Boy Scouts of America

President Grant, my fellow countrymen, and brothers in Christ: As I came upon this platform I breathed a prayer that God would give me words of wisdom that I might speak to you a message which will help to further the splendid work that you have been doing and that you are now doing for the youth of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I am exceedingly happy to stand upon this platform and to bring you greetings from the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America; and, if possible, to give you in part, a vision of the vitality, of the rapid spread, and of the effectiveness of the work of an organization which is great because other people throughout the world are manifesting the same definite interest, though probably not in so wide a degree, as you are here in Utah and throughout your magnificent Church in the work of this movement as a means of service to their boyhood.

Behold a modern movement of the knighthood of youth which enrolls in its membership each year more than a quarter of a million boys who never were Scouts before; a movement which, in eighteen years, has enrolled approximately three million boys, and three-quarters of a million men who have given volunteer leadership to make possible a larger service to the youth of the nation; a movement which, in the year 1927, had an enrollment of about four million boys and 186,000 men; a movement which reaches out into the open spaces to serve the boy upon the farm with a Lone-Scout program, which he receives through the mail, through the Lone-Scout Patrols which are carried on in the homes of the farmers (his neighbor boys gather with him around the fireside during the long winter months); a work which reaches unto our colored boys in the South, in a division which has recently been established with the colored youth of the nation! It is a program which reaches into the life and thought and feelings of every class and type of people, of every political and religious party in the United States, and is universal in its scope.

I do not know whether you can appreciate what four-million membership looks like. I cannot see that many people. The truth of the matter is, I never before in my life looked into the faces of an audience so large as this. This is the largest inspiration that has ever come into my life in facing a group of representative men and women. But imagine, if you will, a group of four million boys and men. If you would gather that great group of boys and men on Long Island and march them, in single file, across Brooklyn Bridge and up Broadway and along the Storm King Highway to Albany and to Buffalo, on to Toledo, Chicago, Omaha, Cheyenne, Salt Lake City and San Francisco, when you had gathered two hundred thousand Scouts at the Golden Gate, at the Palace of the Legion of Honor, with a marching column three thousand miles across this continent, you would still have more than two hundred thousand on Long Island that had not yet crossed Brooklyn Bridge. That is the membership of a movement, a crusade, a modern knighthood of youth that has spread throughout this land in the brief space of eighteen years, which adds to its membership a little more than one hundred thousand each year.

Scouting is not confined to America. In the eighteen years it has been saturating this country, Scouting has reached out to the civilized world, and today we have a membership in the other nations which totals about four millions. Forty-three of our leading civilized nations have national Scout associations. Every four years they send representatives to the international jamboree, where a great concourse of boys (some fifteen to sixteen thousand) meet on the same common field, not a battle field, thank God, but on the field of friendly endeavor, to demonstrate the achievements of Scouting, in the forty-three civilized nations, which forms an international brotherhood, reaching out beyond the points of our mother-land, and gripping the hand of our brother Scouts in our brother-lands around the world. These Scouts of all nations are learning to be brothers, to understand one another, to respect one another, to sympathize with one another, and to look through the eyes of a brother Scout into the problems and lives and sympathies and rights of other Scouts and other nations the world around.

We believe that we are laying the foundation and furthering a movement of world brotherhood in this splendid, magnificent boy movement which has swept the nations of the world.

But Scouting is not confined to the forty-three nations. There are Scout troops in some twenty or more other nations, where there has not been sufficient organization, as yet, to establish a national organization, but Scout troops are there organized and are carrying out their method of Scouting in their own way, looking forward to the time when they will be sufficiently strong to organize a national association and to become part of the international fellowship of Scouting. So the sun, in all its course, never ceases to shine upon the uniform of the Boy Scout of the nations of the world, and that is a picture of this movement of Scouting throughout the world.

We have just produced a new handbook for boys, which went to the press in the first week in November, 1927. We ordered a half million copies as the first part of a million order. The printers were so much surprised at the size of the order that they looked into the records to find if any other order of its size, had ever been given, and they found that it was the largest single order of any book or form that had ever been given to any publisher. We have already sold five hundred thousand copies, and the other day, before he left New York for San Francisco, Mr. West placed an order for two hundred thousand more copies of the new handbook, to satisfy a need that is evident within four months from the time that the book was given to the public. The old handbook went through thirty-seven editions in seventeen years, and three million one hundred thousand copies were circulated. There is only one other book in print that has had as wide a circulation among the people of any civilized land as our handbook, and that is the Christian Bible, the circulation of which is many times more than that of our handbook, but we hold second place.

I have indicated these high spots in the power and influence and rapid spread of Scouting, only to impress your mind with the vitality of this movement. You have been aware of the vitality of the Church. I have also been aware of the vitality of the Church. I have read several of the books on "Mormonism." I have been impressed with your method of organization. I have been impressed with your rapid spread. I have been more impressed by what I have seen and felt here today than by anything I have ever read or seen of the vitality and power and onward sweep of the great Church of which you are a part.

I should like you to have a vision of the vitality of the Church and the vitality of Scouting tied up together in one union for the service of the youth of this nation. I should also like you to feel the power that can be carried forward through the combination of religion in the life of adults tied up with the program of vitality in the life of youth, so that the leadership and the power and example of adults can be brought to bear and made effective in the life of youth.

Scouting vitality may be accounted for on three counts: First, its appeal to the boy because of the great out-of-doors that it brings into his life, the skill, the information, the fun and the fellowship and all that goes into it, and its romance and friendship that makes it appeal to the boy. Scouting vitality is accounted for secondly on the basis of its appeal to men because of the physical benefits and vocational guidance, the clean recreation, the clean reading program, the citizenship training, the character building, the initiative, the courage, the manhood and the recognition that bring into the lives of boys those principles which make reliable citizens. There you have two appeals. But there is a third one, which many people do not see, and that is the appeal which Scouting makes to the institutions which carry on this program as a part of their programs; for you must realize that Scouting does not go out to the world to propagate itself. It is propagated by those who believe in it, and those who believe in it and carry it forward, in a great majority of cases, are those who make up the churches of America. It has been my responsibility and supreme opportunity to be the liaison between the Boy Scout movement and the churches of all states in this land, and I have had a delightful fellowship with men of all religions and all faiths and creeds and have been able to help tie into the program of the various church bodies the activities which Scouting offers in better service to their boyhood.

We believe that Scouting has succeeded in America. We not only believe but we know it has succeeded in America far beyond its success in any other country; so much so that we can match the entire Scouting population of all the races of the world with our Scouting population, because of the fact that the churches of America have taken Scouting and made it a part of their program in the service to youth. More than sixteen thousand of our twenty-seven thousand Scout troops are in churches. The church furnishes the leadership; it furnishes the places in which to meet; it furnishes supervision; it names the troops; it names the Scoutmasters, and the local church controls the Scout program through its own leadership. They administer the leadership; they sponsor and carry on that program. The Boy Scout movement has started out to carry on a program gathered around a certain ideal, a beautiful conception of an ideal,—a soul; and that soul is expressed in the Scout oath involved, and will make the movement live.

The churches of America have supported our movement because they feel that the soul of Scouting, as expressed in the Scout oath and law, is thoroughly in line with the objectives of the church. For example, at the north pole of the Scouting compass, we have placed, duty to God; at the point of the rising sun, we have placed, duty to country; at the point of the genial south, we have placed, duty to our fellow-men; and at the point of the setting sun, duty to self. And these are the words of the Scout Oath:

"Upon my honor I will do my best—

"1. To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout Law.

"2. To help other people at all times.

"3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

Between duty to God and duty to country, a Scout is trustworthy, loyal and helpful.

Between duty to country and duty to others, a Scout is friendly, courteous and kind.

Between duty to others and duty to self, a Scout is obedient, cheerful, and thrifty.

Between duty to self and duty to God, a Scout is brave, clean and reverent.

And there you have, swinging around the Scout compass, the sixteen points, beginning with duty to God, and coming back again to duty to God, in the twelve Scout laws. So the ideal of Scouting and the objective and aim of the church are one. And so the church has taken Scouting to its bosom to carry forward its program.

There are four or five reasons why the church offers the best home to the Boy Scout troops. I should like to name these and further impress upon you the responsibility you have, as leaders of the church, to carry out in the lives of these boys in the church the spiritual program you have for your boys, and supplement the activities program which Scouting offers to them.

The church is the best home for a Scout troop, first, because it has the moral and spiritual atmosphere in which boys should grow up. As no other institution, it has the soul and spirit life which surrounds the place and which surrounds the boy whose life centers in the church. Then again the church has the man power with the right character, the right spirit, the right vision, who are worthy to be leaders of boys: and that character and that spirit and that vision are more important to the boys than are all the skill and information you can ever get over through the Scout handbook or any other handbook you may find. In the third place, because of the spiritual atmosphere and the right example of men, the church in the community has the confidence of fathers and mothers in the community as no other institution has that confidence; and, because of that, it will have the support of fathers and mothers in a community as no other movement will have. In the fourth place, the church can complete in the lives of these boys a program of religious education which Scouting cannot give. We deal with the great body of the Catholic church and are officially represented in their circles, and our program is carried forward under the supervision of their cardinals, archbishops and bishops. We are represented also in about thirty or forty of the protestant denominations in America, and our program is carried forward by them to their groups. We are also represented in the Jewish groups of America by their committee, and so on. We cannot let the Boy Scout movement pass out anything of a definitely religious program to these groups, but expect these groups to take up our program of activities and carry it alongside, and tie in with it, and bring to bear upon the lives of their own boys, the spiritual message, the spiritual ideals, the spiritual life, the religious life of the church of which the troop is a part.

But there is another reason why we want our Scouting tied into the church, and that is because of the thought, that no matter how effective a Scouting program may be in the lives of boys, we know it is a temporary program, which may serve the boy in the period of his youth and early adolescence, as he grows to manhood, but it is only a brief period. You know, if you take a man along that period, ever so well, for two or three years, and leave him there without support and without foundation, without anything to help him to carry on, you have not done him any more service than if you started to carry a man across the country, to a town beyond, and lost him in the prairie or in the woods, or marooned him on a desert island. That is not helping a man to attain his destiny.

But what has the church? The church has a program that ministers for the boyhood under its mother arm, that carries on through his growing period of life to manhood and maturity and old age and down to the grave. The church has a program that ministers all the way along. Scouting is brief in its period with the boy. If we can tie up Scouting with a boy, we will tie up the boy with his church and with his God, and then this program will carry on in his life, and the church will be there to sustain and bless and support him to the end and out into the life to come.

One last word and I am through. I am happy to bring you word that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is using the Boy Scout program in a larger way than any other church in existence. I am happy to tell you that there are 846 troops among the Latter-day Saints; that you have a larger per capita of Scouts in your membership than any other religious body on record. I am happy also to tell you that, in the State of Utah, you have a larger percentage of Scouts in the boy population than any other state. And I am happy also to tell you that the reason for this is because you have a closer tie-in and community correlation with Scouting in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints than in any other church as a church body. You have absolutely correlated and included Scouting with your program for young boys. I am happy to say also that a large part of that success is due to the fact that you have had a leadership in your Church, in the personality of Mr. Oscar A. Kirkham and Mr. Datus E. Hammond and other executives, sponsored by your able President and members of the Council of Twelve, sponsored also by your local bishops, and carried on by your local wards and stakes throughout this country, that has given a volunteer and a loyal leadership and support that is unequalled by any other religious body in America. And I say that because I know, because I study the records of all of them. I close by saying that I pray God that, through our Lord Jesus Christ, the work of Scouting and youth in this Church may be carried on and live forever.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

I am sure that we all rejoice in the encouragement and satisfaction which we have just received. We could well say to the eminent gentleman who has just addressed us that nothing could be said to give us greater and more lasting satisfaction than that our youth are learning principles of righteous conduct and are being trained in the Gospel of Christ, preparatory for duties as citizens of the country, and for their service to fellowmen and God.

A MESSAGE OF JOY

I do not know that I can adequately convey to you a message that is in my heart today. I have felt that we have a duty, a paramount duty to all the world and to the Church to interpret the Gospel of Jesus Christ in a manner which shall appeal; to reveal the joy of it.

Today is Good Friday, a day which is set apart in Christendom in memory of the crucifixion of the Savior of the world. I have seen several representations of the personality of Christ portrayed on the stage, and more recently portrayed on the moving picture screen. I cannot remember that in all these representations I have ever seen the Christ made to appear happy. I have seldom if ever seen him appear to smile. All of the representations have brought a message of gloom, sadness and final death. It may be that certain good is accomplished by such representations. I take it that it is desirable that we should remember the sufferings of our Lord and Savior. We are called upon by the Lord himself to commemorate his broken flesh and his spilled blood. His remarkable, incomparable sacrifice should never leave our minds, for it is by and through that sacrifice that he did become our Savior and our Redeemer. Yet at the same time I do not look upon the Savior of the world as a man of gloom, nor do I regard the Gospel he gave to the world as one of despair, or one which is intended to kill the joy in humanity.

All the natural world bids us have joy. The flowers that bloom, the sweet perfumes that greet our senses, the colors that enliven our environment, are all calculated to bring to us joy, to enliven us with a sense of beauty, richness and fulness of life.

Christ did not come to take the color out of life, and I attribute the large measure of indifference to his word, indeed the resistance which is set up against it, in no small part to the erroneous interpretation of his cause, of his life and his service under which the world has suffered for centuries of time.

"Men are that they may have joy." It is as natural to long for joy as it is to live, and it would be a perversion of the fundamental philosophy of things if religion were to be interpreted as an imposition upon life, to take out its joy and its gladness.

PRINCIPLES OF GOSPEL A STABILIZING FORCE

I am thinking of the host of young, of these armies of Boy Scouts of whom we have just learned. I am thinking of their attitude and I am delighted that the Doctor reminded us that the program which the Boy Scouts' organization provides for these young men is of temporary and partial character only. These young men, a million strong, need something to stabilize their lives. They need a force to guide and direct them. They need to realize the richness and the beauty of life, not only during their youth but all through their maturity, and we hold out to the world blessed, beautiful, cheerful life-giving principles of the Gospel of Christ to supply that vital need. It is incumbent upon those who teach the youth to interpret the Gospel for them in such terms that they may see its joys, its encouragements.

PROVISION FOR IMPROVEMENT AND PROGRESSION

Every man loves to improve. Progression is the very law of life itself. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, as interpreted by the Prophet Joseph Smith, is the embodiment of eternal progression. Improvement is constantly advocated and provision for it is made. Men seek today to improve their temporal condition. It is a day when men have been able to harness the forces of nature, and by the inventions which have been devised more liberally enjoy the resources of nature than ever before.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is in no sense incompatible with such important improvements. It recognizes the intelligence in man. It seeks through education to develop that intelligence, to expound the principles of life, to investigate and understand the secrets which nature and the universe hold.

MATERIAL PROSPERITY NOT CONDEMNED

Material prosperity is not repugnant to the spirit of the Gospel. Indeed it is regarded as being an accomplishment worth while to be able to so accumulate or organize an industry or enterprise as to improve the conditions under which people live. It is selfishness and personal aggrandizement at which the Gospel directs its injunctions. But when one who has the true spirit of the gospel at heart, one who has consecrated himself to the service of God and his fellowmen, has been able to acquire property or to organize materials or forces for the improvement of conditions, he in no sense comes under condemnation. The spirit of consecration, devotion to the cause, to altruistic interests, is of the very genius of the Gospel.

JOY THROUGH SACRIFICE AND SERVICE

When Christ said to his disciples that they should take up the cross and follow him, I have never interpreted that to mean that they were to load upon themselves gloom and despair. He said, "I am come that ye may have life, and have it more abundantly." He engaged his disciples to disseminate the glad tidings of great joy which he taught. It is true that he made sacrifice, it is true that his life was filled with many wrongs to him, and that he suffered inexplicably, and yet I cannot but think that in all his sufferings, indeed even in the giving of his life he experienced a joy that transcends the comprehension of the finite mind. He knew of the vitality of the work which he did. He knew he was the Savior of mankind. He knew of the beneficent results that would follow his supreme sacrifice, and that knowledge could not have failed to transport him with a joy that no one can fully appreciate and realize. The joy of service, the joy of spreading his great work, is the only comparable joy that we may have.

I want the youth of Zion, as well as the youth of all people, to know that to believe in Christ and to live his gospel is to bring the supreme joy and happiness into their lives. There is no other royal road to the happiness of mankind excepting the path which Jesus set.

OUR OBLIGATION

And so, my brethren and sisters of the Church, having these wonderful interpretations of the life of Christ and of the purpose of his ministry given to us by the Prophet of the latter days, it becomes incumbent upon us to so live and so teach that the world will long for the gospel of Christ as it longs today for pleasure and the gratification of appetite.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of great joy!" These glad tidings are entrusted to us to give to the world, and to give to our youth. I pray God that we may have the vision, the strength, and the love to give them faithfully, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

There has been, this afternoon, a very great and deserving compliment paid to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for its work with the boys of the Church as they have become associated with the Boy Scout movement.

PRACTICAL VALUE OF SCOUTING

I believe in Boy Scouting. It has come into my home. The past few days my seventeen-year-old boy has been attending a Scout pow-wow that has been conducted at the University of Utah. This afternoon, as I was about to leave for meeting, my boy sat at the table working with his papers. I suggested that I should be pleased if he felt like coming to conference with me. He said, "Father, I am working on these merit badges. I do not see how I can very well leave them." And realizing that this was a consummation of what he had been working on during the past three days, I felt to excuse him. This boy has earned and obtained seventy merit badges. He is not satisfied yet.

One evening as we sat in our home, one of my sons-in-law, who has had much experience in the handling of cattle and horses said he would like to know what my son had to learn in order to obtain a merit badge for horsemanship. So the boy proceeded to tell him, and, when he was through, my son-in-law remarked that he had been with horses and cattle all his life, but that he had just heard things about horsemanship that he had never known before.

I have thought that what is required to obtain the merit badges presented by the Boy Scout organization, would make a splendid junior-college course, and I know that the influence of the organization is wholesome and good. I believe that if our boys were to become good Scouts, they would be better deacons, teachers, and priests and better

Church members; so I desire to lend my influence to the Scout movement.

GOD TO RAISE UP A MAN WHOSE NAME WAS JOSEPH

The beautiful tenor solo that was rendered here this afternoon impressed me very much. The prediction made by Joseph who was sold into Egypt, looking down through the vista of time, and seeing that a man of God would be raised up for the accomplishment of a mighty work in the last days, contained a very specific declaration, to the effect that as his own name was Joseph, so should be the name of this individual whom the Lord would raise up, and not only that, but that the name of this individual's father also should be Joseph. The coming forth of Joseph Smith as a prophet of the last dispensation fulfils that prediction beautifully. His coming forth and the visitation of the Father and the Son and the message delivered to the boy, Joseph, in answer to his earnest prayer, were most beautifully presented in that solo this afternoon.

EVIDENCE OF TRUTH OF THE GOSPEL

As I was thinking of these things, I thanked the Lord in my heart for the many evidences that he has given to us of the truth of the gospel, as it has been revealed to us through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith. And I said to myself, I know that this is God's work, I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and I can prove it to my own entire satisfaction. It does seem to me that what is satisfying to my soul, in the way of evidence, should be satisfying to the souls of other men and women who are honestly seeking for light and truth.

WITNESSES TO TESTIFY

It is not unusual that witnesses should be raised up to testify of God and his Son Jesus Christ and of the truth. We read in Acts, first chapter and eighth verse:

"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

With the disciples of the Master, that was one important part of their calling, to be witnesses of the Lord. In John twentieth chapter and thirty-first verse, in speaking of the things which were written and preserved in the New Testament, we read:

"But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name."

And so, in this day and time, the Lord has raised up witnesses for him. His prophets are his living witnesses and the oracles of the Church. After Joseph Smith had received from the angel Moroni the plates from which the Book of Mormon has been translated, and after the translation, the Lord provided witnesses, and he did this that men and women who are seeking for light and truth might be convinced and that those who believe not might be left without excuse.

TESTIMONY OF BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES

You know the nature of the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitner and Martin Harris. They testify that an angel of God came down from heaven and laid before their eyes, that they beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon; that they heard a voice from heaven saying that they had been translated by the gift and power of God; and that they were commanded to bear record of that fact, which they did.

Eight other witnesses, reputable men, men of character, testified that Joseph Smith showed to them the plates, which had the appearance of gold, and as many of the leaves as he had translated they handled with their hands, and they declared that the characters on those plates had the appearance of ancient work and of curious workmanship, and they gave their names to the world as witnesses of these facts.

In the Book of Ether (Book of Mormon), 5th chapter, 3rd and 4th verses, we have a declaration, that the Lord would raise up these witnesses, in words like this:

"And unto three shall they [the plates] be shown by the power of God; wherefore they shall know of a surety that these things are true.

"And in the mouth of three witnesses shall these things be established; and the testimony of three, and this work, in which shall be shown forth the power of God, and also his word, of which the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost bear record—and all this shall stand as a testimony against the world at the last day."

In one of our modern revelations, as contained in section 20 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith said:

"Therefore, having so great witnesses, by them shall the world be judged, even as many as shall hereafter come to a knowledge of this work.

"And those who receive it in faith, and work righteousness, shall receive a crown of eternal life;

"But those who harden their hearts in unbelief, and reject it, it shall turn to their own condemnation."

TESTIMONIES THAT JOSEPH SMITH WAS A TRUE PROPHET

Applying a little reason to these testimonies, and I am sure that the Lord intends that we should, I conclude that these evidences, these testimonies of the three and eight witnesses to the truth of the Book of Mormon, are just as strong testimonies that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God as that the Book of Mormon is true. The Book of Mormon could not be true, having come through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, had he not been a prophet of God.

We may take the test which our Savior gave by which we might know a true or false prophet. He said:

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

"Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

"A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. * * *

"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

PROPHET'S STORY MUST BE TRUE

There can be no question about the Book of Mormon, as it is given us today, with the fulness of the everlasting gospel contained therein, being the fruit of this tree, Joseph Smith, in that it was given to us, of the Lord, through him. Then, if Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, the story that he tells of the visitation of the Father and the Son to him must be true, and, being true, God the Eternal Father is a glorified, immortal being, having a body of flesh and bones and spirit, and his Son like him. Joseph Smith being a prophet, this visitation being true, the things that were told to the Prophet Joseph by the Son of God must also be true—that there had been a falling away. That did not mean that just a few apostatized from the Church. It has always been that way; in every dispensation there are some that fall away. There had been a general or universal apostasy from the truth. That is the word of our Lord and Savior to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and the testimony of these witnesses is a testimony of that fact.

A FALLING AWAY BEFORE A RESTORATION

We stand for a restoration of the gospel. But how can there be a restoration of the gospel without there first be a falling away? The scriptures tell us that "known unto God are all things, even the end from the beginning." They also tell us that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, but that the prophecies came not in olden time, by the will of man, but that holy men of God spoke as they were moved upon by the power of the Holy Ghost. That is the means of communication between the heavens and the earth.

And again, we are told that the Lord doeth no thing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets. And I think we may add to that, no great thing is done, affecting the human family, except it has been revealed to his servants the prophets. If there was to be a universal falling away from the truth, he would have made it known through his prophets. He has done so, and made it very clear. Many scriptural declarations, concerning an apostate condition are to be found in the Old and New Testaments. History tells us that there has been this falling away.

KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD RESTORED

The Lord has sent John, the Baptist, who died in the primitive days, holding the Aaronic Priesthood, and the keys of that Priesthood were conferred by him upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, with authority also to confer it upon others who are worthy. That was in the spring of 1829. A little later, Peter, James and John, who held the keys of the Melchizedek Priesthood in the primitive days, came and visited Joseph and Oliver and conferred the keys of that priesthood upon them.

If Joseph Smith had not been a prophet of God, these witnesses could not have testified as they did; he being a prophet of God, what he said and what Oliver Cowdery said, in regard to the restoring of the Aaronic and Melchizedek Priesthoods upon them, must be true. It happened just about the time that these witnesses bore their testimony, in the spring of 1829. It was on the 15th day of May that John, the Baptist, conferred the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood.

I say these witnesses, the like of which no other religious organization can provide for its comfort and conversion, are witnesses of the truth of the restoration of the everlasting gospel.

FORESEEING OF RESTORATION PROOF OF FALLING AWAY

John, the Revelator, as recorded in Revelation, 14th chapter, 6th and 7th verses, when his vision was opened to see the many things that were to transpire before the great and glorious event of the coming of our Lord in the last days, towards which the eyes of all religionists are directed today, said:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

"Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Would there have been any occasion for an angel to deliver the everlasting gospel to the nations of the earth if the gospel, recognized of the Lord, and the authority of the Lord to administer the ordinances of the gospel had been here? Reason answers that question for us. There would have been no occasion for it.

JOHN'S VISION COMPLETELY FULFILLED

The visitation of the Angel Moroni fulfilled, at least partly, the vision of John upon Patmos, when he delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, containing the fulness of the everlasting gospel as taught by our Savior to the ancient inhabitants on this continent. If there need be any further administration to make a full and complete fulfilment of what John saw, we find it in the visitation of John, the Baptist, conferring the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood, and the visitation of Peter, James and John, conferring the keys of the Melchizedek Priesthood, conferring the power and authority to build up the Church and kingdom of God upon the earth, to establish the Church of Christ, to restore the gospel, and administer the ordinances unto the children of men who are prepared to receive them.

All these and numerous other evidences come up before us, proving the truth of this work and that Joseph Smith was a divinely inspired man of God, a prophet in very deed.

NOT ALL ACCOMPLISHED AT ONCE

And now, carrying the thought just a little further, if I may, all that we see in this mighty work of God, the admiration of the world, because of the beauty and perfection of its organization, the efficiency of its workings—have not been accomplished in the days of Joseph Smith. Only one of these great auxiliary associations of the Church had been organized in his day, but they have been organized since, under the leadership of those who have succeeded to the presidency of this Church. These great auxiliary associations, our Church school system, our seminaries, these stakes of Zion throughout the valleys of the mountains, ninety-nine in number, and a thousand wards and branches, are evidences to me, conclusive and convincing, that those who have succeeded to the Presidency of this Church have been recognized of the Lord. His power has been with them in administration, and those who have been associated with them, and this work has grown and prospered until it has arrived at its present condition.

HEBER J. GRANT A PROPHET OF GOD

I know that Heber J. Grant is an inspired man of God, the right man at the head of this work, a prophet, seer and revelator, just as well as I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I uphold and sustain him as such. This people do also. Were it not so, he could not accomplish the work the Lord has for him to accomplish, and that which he is accomplishing with the means that the Lord has given him. So that I know that we are the people of God, that this is the Church of Christ, the power of God unto salvation, and I do know that it will go on to triumph. The truth will, ultimately, prevail throughout this world, and the purposes of our Father in heaven will be consummated, his Son will come to reign over this his kingdom, as King of kings and Lord of lords, forever and ever.

This is my testimony; I bear it unto you in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Do what is right."

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Commissioner of Education

My brethren and sisters: This is the first time in my life that I have been called without previous notice to this position. I do not know what I can say. I came today wholly in a receptive attitude. Perhaps I can do no better than to give you a confession of my faith.

I believe that I have been called to the finest and the best educational position in America. I think that for two reasons primarily. One because of the character of the people with whom I have been brought in contact, and the other, because of the nature of the work itself.

Bishop Cannon this morning spoke of the quality of selfishness that was dominant in the lives and conduct of many people. May I say that I have learned that the people with whom I labor are devoid of that quality. Without a single exception every individual with whom I have been brought into contact has looked at our problems from the standpoint of what is best for the whole. I have talked with ambitious college presidents, with ambitious teachers, with ambitious chairmen of boards, with respect to their problems. Without a single exception they have said that what is best for the whole is what we will cheerfully accept. That spirit makes the work extremely pleasant.

Again may I say that I believe there is no kind of education in the world that is so fine and so elevating and so good and so important as religious education. And I believe that nowhere in the world is there a system of religious education that is equal in its quality, in its thoroughness and in its comprehensiveness to the system of education that is being undertaken in this Church. The time will come, I verily believe, and before very many years, when week-day religious education will be offered to every high school boy and girl, to every college and university boy and girl in this Church.

The seminary movement is progressing rapidly. It is doing an extremely good work. We have recently received testimonials from all of the school superintendents in the districts where we have either schools or seminaries located, testifying to the value of this work. They have used such expressions as these, when speaking of the nature of that work:

"Most highly satisfactory."

"Exerting the highest moral and ethical influence."

"It is the finest thing that has come to this school."

You understand of course that in all of our system of education we are not trying to get into, we are not trying to dominate, we are not trying to influence improperly, we are not trying to interfere in any way with the public school system of education. All that we are asking is that the members of the Church may voluntarily go during school hours into our buildings, and our own property, and receive religious education. And this religious education was given daily last year, as President Grant announced this morning, to more than 14,000 who were in daily attendance at high schools and colleges. This year more than 15,000 high school and college students are attending week-day religion classes.

With respect to my faith in this work may I say that long years ago, before ever I left my home for collegiate training, I received a testimony of the existence of a divine power, who could reveal himself to men. And so in all of my life since that time I have never once doubted the existence of such a power, of a revelator who can give knowledge to an individual, and who can hear and answer prayers.

In my boyhood days, for seven long years, I prayed daily for certain knowledge, for a certain blessing. Once during that time I was greatly encouraged by attending an evening entertainment in which a group of young people sang, "Keep on asking; God will answer by and by." I kept on praying. And finally when the answer came I did not know that shortly I was to leave my home for ten years of college and university work. Hence I did not know the significance at that time of the message that came to me, of how it would stabilize me in my faith in the years immediately before me. One night between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock, after a hard day's work, there came to me a revelation from on high that was most glorious in its nature, that has been from that moment to this an absolute testimony to me of the existence of a higher power, of the existence of a God who will hear and answer the prayers of a humble farmer boy. Further, since that time I have had two critical periods in my life, when I did not know how to turn, and there came to me at each of those times a revelation from on high that directed me, that told me what was to come to pass, and how I should perform.

And so I care not, my brethren and sisters, what the philosophy of men may be, how they may question the existence of divinity, how they may question the existence and power of a being who will hear and answer prayers, and will direct in the affairs of men. I know of my own self that God lives, that he does reveal himself to men, that he does direct men. And so I have such confidence in God, I have such confidence in this as being his divine work, that I stand ready to welcome investigators, research workers and truth seekers in every field of human thought and human endeavor, feeling assured, independent of what they may say or what their explanations may be, if they find truth in any field of endeavor whatsoever, that truth will be in harmony with the gospel of Jesus Christ as we understand it. And so I feel that there is absolutely no reason for us to be afraid that our young people, if they are rightly led and taught in gospel truths, can ever be won away into infidelity by anything that men may teach that is contrary to the truth, because all truth is in harmony with truth.

In my early boyhood I learned this couplet:

"Truth is truth wherever found,
On heathen or on Christian ground."

And I believe it thoroughly.

To me there stands today at the head of this Church in President Heber J. Grant, the personal representative of the Lord Jesus Christ, and there sits surrounding him today men who have been called as special witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ. And I want to testify to you that I do know of my own self through revelation that has come to me, that these men are what they claim to be, and that this Church is what it claims to be, and that if we are true to our professions; if we are true to ourselves, we shall eventually attain to the goal for which we have started out.

May the Lord give us strength and help us to do this, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

President of the Southern States Mission

It is the pure testimony of the Spirit that reaches the hearts of the children of men. As I listened this morning to the President of the Church and the other speakers, I recalled the words which the haughty and wicked king of Babylon addressed to Daniel, the Hebrew prophet. The king said to him:

"And I have heard of thee, that thou canst make interpretations, and dissolve doubts." (Daniel 5:16.)

Could a more eloquent tribute be paid to the prophetic office of a man of God than that? Is it not wonderful to dispel darkness and to dissolve doubt? It is the truth, as the Savior said, that makes us free.

With all my heart I believe that the gospel is a dissolver of doubt. One of the greatest editors that this country has ever produced lost his boy, five years old, by death. Friends endeavored to console him in this great bereavement. The man of letters said:

"Now, all that deeply concerns me is the evidence that we shall live hereafter, and especially that we shall live with and know those we loved here. If I felt sure on the point of identifying and being with our loved ones in the world to come," etc.

The gospel answers this question. The Apostle Paul said:

"But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." (2 Timothy 1:10.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith, the founder of this Church, through the will of God, was given a most comprehensive and inspired definition of truth.

"And truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." (Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 93:24.)

This choice seer "gazed on the past, the future, too, and opened the heavenly worlds to view."

This religion of which I am proud, this religion designated by the world as "Mormonism," brings the consolation of divine comfort to the hearts of stricken parents, that their babies laid away in death, their youth who have been called to the other side, shall be restored to them in the resurrection, and that parents shall have the joy of rearing infant children, in the resurrection, to manhood and to womanhood, for "God will finish what he hath begun."

"Mormonism" dissolves doubt as to the origin of man. We believe in the immortal origin of men and women; that God is the Father of our spirits—that we had a royal ancestry. And the Latter-day Saint, whose path is lighted by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, will never say to the Almighty, as he said some people would say: "Thou formed me not." No, "Mormonism" gives the answer, vouchsafed to us in holy writ and modern and ancient revelation, that the Almighty is the Father of our spirits, that we lived as individuals in spiritual form before we came to this earth.

Another thing: "Mormonism" dissolves any and every doubt concerning the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Book of Mormon, which is another witness for God, testifies (and that is one of the main purposes for which it was written) that Jesus is the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world, and the Savior of mankind; that he redeemed us from death, and brought to light life and immortality, through obedience to the gospel. This is the testimony that we bear to the world. Our doubts have been dissolved by the gospel; and, instead of doubt and uncertainty, the light, the testimony of the Holy Ghost, the power that guides into all truth, fills our hearts, and we can say, with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."

Thank God for the gospel. Thank God for the Holy Ghost. Thank God for the inspired prophets, seers and revelators who, by their ministry and the word of life, have dissolved all doubts and dispelled the clouds of darkness.

I bear you my testimony that Jesus Christ is the Son of God: that Joseph Smith was his prophet, and that he, like Daniel, was a dissolver of doubts, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I have received a number of telegrams and letters from various presidents of stakes and others, explaining the impossibility of their being at this conference.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

At 10 o'clock Saturday morning, April 7, 1928, the conference reconvened in the tabernacle.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Come, come ye saints."

Invocation was offered by Elder Walter K. Barton, president of the Franklin stake of Zion.

A solo, "He that dwelleth," was sung by James E. Haslam.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Among the wonderful inventions of our day is that of the amplifier and the radio. This morning I am grateful that I have the assistance of this device in speaking to you in this great building.

Yesterday we had as visitors men from afar, one of whom addressed us, calling attention to our particular position in the world of Scouting. His remarks reminded me of an experience I had recently, at least it is not many months ago, while in San Francisco attending a regional meeting of the Scout organization. We had spent the day in session. At the close of the meeting, when it was ready to adjourn, I asked the chairman for permission to say a few words on the Latter-day Saint plan of taking care of boys. My request was cheerfully granted. I asked those who were present, first, if they would pay attention to what I had to say, with the thought that they might add to our program, and give us the benefit of their thinking, because they were all experts in taking care of boys.

THE MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT PLAN

I said first of all, we have a fathers' and sons' outing manual. I had it in my hand. This is an invitation to the fathers and sons of our country. We have in our Church ninety-nine ecclesiastical divisions known as stakes, and this program is suggested for fathers and sons, with the thought that if they can go out together into the open spaces and camp in the mountains or plains of God's great out-of-doors, and become better acquainted, both fathers and sons will be greatly benefited thereby. I went through the program, of course, in a little more detail than I shall do here today. I said: We have a Junior Manual. This is intended to inspire in the boys faith in God. There is a lesson for each week during the Mutual Improvement season, and we feel it is a fine program. I called attention to some of the features of the plan, some of the experiences of our missionaries and early Scouts, and the feeling that it would engender in the heart of the boy in appreciation of the heroism of these individuals.

I said: We have an advanced Junior group in the Mutual. For this group we have a manual prepared to call attention to the fact that courage is an important thing, not only courage in the face of ordinary danger, but courage to do right when evil is present. We feel that at this age our boys should be stimulated with the courage to do right. Scouting is an important part of the program of these Junior groups.

Our next age is our senior group, and we have a manual prepared for them. While men are quarreling about the differences between science and religion, we prepare a manual and put it into the hands of our advanced adolescent youth, calling attention to the fact that there is no conflict between true science and true religion; that the truth, no matter from what source we derive it, all originates with our Heavenly Father. We place a manual in their hands that calls attention to the fact that instead of trying to find a conflict between science and religion we do well to understand them both, to the end that we will be able to harmonize them.

While I was talking I noticed several individuals in the house nodding to one another, calling attention to the fact that that was a good thought.

Now, I said, we have an advanced Senior group. For this group we have taken for this year's study short biographies of men who have been prominent champions of liberty throughout the world, such as Moses, Confucius, Gotama the great Buddha, Justinian and other philosophers and religious leaders. Then we call attention to the fact that in this group were Oliver Cromwell, George Washington, Joseph Smith, Abraham Lincoln, Brigham Young, Benito Juarez, etc. In the life of each of these men we have found that which we feel ought to inspire men and women with a desire to do better things. In addition, we have our Mutual Improvement Era, that is published monthly, containing articles that are intended to inspire in the growing young men a feeling of reverence for God, and a desire to know of his purposes.

At the conclusion of my talk to them I said: Now, gentlemen, I have told you what we are trying to do for our boys in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I shall appreciate it if you will now give me your reaction and any suggestions for improving our plan.

One of the leaders of the group, without hesitation, said: "Mr. Smith, we are at your feet." Another man spoke up and said: "There is no other program like that, for boys, in the world." The Superintendent of Schools of San Jose, California, said to me: "There is no church in all the world doing for its young people what you are doing," and he said, "It is remarkable to me that we, in San Jose, work our heads off to put over the Boy Scout program with the thought that we are doing the most wonderful thing in the world for boys, and you come here and tell us that that is only a little part of your program, that Scouting is a part of your Junior work." And he said: "I want to compliment you." There were quite a number of those present who gave me their cards and asked if we would supply them with our manuals for this year.

I mention this because only yesterday you heard from one of the chief Scout men of the United States, the statement that we lead in Scouting, that Utah and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are in the forefront in the world of Scouting. In the case of the people I have mentioned, their lives are set on that one department.

OTHER DEPARTMENTS OF THE CHURCH

When this man from San Jose said: "We find that this is only a little part of what you are doing for boys," I did not enlarge upon the program by saying, this is only one of the departments of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We start with our Primary children, and they are surrounded by the love and tenderness of the best women in the world. Our children are taught to pray; in the organizations with which they are identified they are taught faith; they are led along the pathway of constructive thought. They are carried on in that department until they are twelve or fourteen years of age. I did not tell of our Sunday Schools—no other Sunday Schools in all the world compare with ours. We take our boys and our girls in their tender years and lay a foundation for an understanding of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price, and the history of the Church; so that when they are old enough to come in contact with individuals in the world they have a fund of information by which they are not only able to defend their faith, but are qualified to advocate their faith in such a way that others may be inspired and interested in it. Then we have the Mutual Improvement organizations, that have developed both boys and girls to become orators, musicians, writers and thinkers. We have our Relief Society, the great national organization, than which there is nothing in all the world better, an organization that contributes, not only to the intellectual and spiritual welfare of its members, but also to the desires in their hearts to reach out and benefit and bless those who are in need, as the name implies. I did not tell these men that when our boys are young they are taught the gospel of Jesus Christ, and ordained to the Priesthood; that as Deacons, as Teachers and as Priests, they are taught, while in youth; that as Elders they become members of the Melchizedek Priesthood, and may be ordained Seventies, and High Priests, going upward through the various ages of their lives. I did not call attention to the fact that we have our ward meetings where, once a week, we are brought together and where we may partake of the Sacrament. I did not call their attention to the fact that we have our quarterly conferences which afford the opportunity for the people to come together in the various larger districts, under the influence of our Heavenly Father. I did not tell them of the great annual and semi-annual conferences that are held in the Church, attracting people from all parts of the world, affording opportunity for the reuniting of families, the bringing together of friends and renewing acquaintanceships—all these things, a regular part of the program of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

OPPORTUNITY FOR DEVELOPMENT AND GROWTH

I haven't touched all the things that are in my mind, but I have mentioned enough to call your attention to what I would like to have you remember, that when our Heavenly Father established his Church upon the earth, he established it on such a broad plane that there is afforded in this organization, by means of its priesthood and its auxiliary organizations, an opportunity for the development of every living soul, under the influence of his Holy Spirit. He organized his Church on so broad a scale that all are invited to search the scriptures and understand them for themselves. On such a scale we are invited to go into the great schools and universities of learning of the world, seeking for the things that the world has been able to uncover and explain; and these all, as far as they are true, to become a part of our thinking, to be made a part of our lives. When we analyze these things and realize what God has done for us, we would be an ungrateful people if in the depths of our souls we did not worship him day by day, with thanksgiving in our hearts for the mercies that are extended unto us. No other people in all the world are so cared for and cultured, no other people in all the world are so tenderly taught and so carefully advised and counseled as are the Latter-day Saints. And if we will only take advantage of our opportunities and avail ourselves of our privileges, this Church will continue to grow and spread, there will be less opportunity for evil to come into our communities; we will continue to be a tower of strength for righteousness, as I believe we now are among the people of the world, not only in keeping the ethical ideals of this world before the people, but also in instilling in mankind a living faith in our Heavenly Father, which is at the foundation of all real progress and all that is really worth while.

A NEW PLAN

I am grateful for my standing in this Church. I am thankful to be associated with my brethren and sisters in a department of service. And now today, inasmuch as there is a new plan in operation, affecting the Priesthood and the Mutual Improvement Associations, following upon that of the Church Sunday School, let us all desire to carry forward this mighty work of our Heavenly Father, put our shoulders to the wheel and cause this department to function for the benefit and blessing of the youth of Zion, and for the uplift of every man, woman and child, to the end that each may in due time be found worthy of a place in our Father's celestial kingdom. That we who have part in this glorious work may rejoice in it, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

We have had a very excellent conference thus far. To me the meetings have been extremely profitable, and I have rejoiced greatly in the spirit of the conference.

I am reading now the Twelfth Article of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

ALL ARE SUBJECT TO LAW

"We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law."

My brethren and sisters, this is not a mere platitude; it is not a formality, but it is an article of faith of the Church of Christ. Let me call your attention to the fact that all people in all nations are under a reign of law. We cannot escape this conclusion, we cannot evade the fact, being upon the earth as we are, mingling one with another, we are subject to law. The Lord has said in one of the revelations to his Church, through the Prophet Joseph Smith (See Doctrine and Covenants, Section 58):

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no heed to break the laws of the land."

That is direct and emphatic, and leads one to the obvious conclusion that the laws of God are higher and superior to the laws of the land.

We read in the scriptures that when the wicked rule the people mourn, and conversely it might be said that when the righteous rule the people rejoice. They rejoice because the righteous make righteous laws, and they mourn because the wicked make wicked laws. We are living, my brethren and sisters, under one of the best and most substantial governments in the world today, if not the best. It simply results from having the best and most liberal laws of government.

I call your attention to this important truth, that people who live in far distant hamlets are under law: that people who live in the cities of the land are subject to law, and it follows if a citizen desires to enjoy the privileges that belong to the city in which he resides, he must yield obedience to the laws of that city, and give heed to its ordinances. If a man wishes to enjoy the advantages and privileges of citizenship in this great nation of ours, he must subject himself to the laws of the nation. You know quite as well as I do what is said of a man who disregards law, who goes beyond and away from it, who appears to think that that is his privilege. Well, the Lord has something to say about that, for he spoke by revelation to Joseph Smith the Prophet and said:

"And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same.

"That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willesh to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, nor judgment. Therefore, they must remain filthy still."

So a man who ignores the law, who sets his face as flint against it, is called an outlaw, and if he sets himself against the Government in which he resides and of which he is a part, and violates the law and uses his influence against the Government, that is designated as treason. He is treasonable, he is subject to the action of this very law which he violates.

LAWS OF GOD AND LAWS OF MAN

Now there are two great law-givers, the one is the Lord in heaven. He is the supreme law-giver of the universe. The other is man upon the earth. The laws of God are great spiritual and eternal laws, and are given to govern us in our conduct and to protect us in our future prospects. The laws of the land are of temporary character and appertain to mortal life. However, if the laws of the land are good laws, they have the approval of the Almighty. The greatest and most spectacular revelation of law, if I may use that expression, ever made, was given at Mount Sinai when the Lord descended upon the mountain, and in the midst of thundering and lightning and a great smoke going up, he gave the Ten Commandments. It might truly be said that all the righteous laws of man have their origin in the Ten Commandments.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CONSTITUTION

The Lord had a great purpose in view in establishing the Constitution of this land, and doubtless entertained very great respect for our pilgrim fathers, and the early fathers of this great nation, because he has referred to them in a revelation given to his servant Joseph Smith. (See Sec. 101, Doc. and Cov.) Speaking of the Constitution the Lord said:

"According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles;

"That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.

"Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.

"And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood."

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE CONSTITUTION

Is it to be wondered at, brethren and sisters, that the Latter-day Saints as a people have profound respect for the Constitution of the United States? We believe that the Constitution was inspired of the Lord. If other people draw away or lose their interest, or their faith in the Constitution and the flag of our country, the Latter-day Saints will be expected to rally around it. We propose to maintain the Constitution and all that it stands for. Our children are taught to respect the flag and to honor the law-givers of the nation. In Scout law, our boys are taught to be obedient and to honor the law, to be honest, to be truthful, to be upright. They do not always have a good example set before them by men of influence and men of power in the nation, men who have rightly earned the designation of "boot-leggers." We hope that the Scouts who are growing up will be safeguarded against the pernicious example of these men.

PROHIBITION LAW SHOULD BE OBSERVED

The law pertaining to prohibition is an expression of the wishes of the majority of the people of the United States of America. It has become a sacred law of the land, and should be so regarded, at least until it is repealed. So I might add that the voices of the Latter-day Saints are raised against those who violate this law.

ALL KINGDOMS GOVERNED BY LAW

I call your attention to the fact, and to me it is very interesting, that the Lord is the author of many great and glorious laws. We are told in one revelation from on high that all kingdoms have a law given unto them.

"There are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or a lesser kingdom.

"And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions.

"All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified. * * *

"And again, verily I say unto you, he hath given a law unto all things, by which they move in their times and their seasons:

"And their courses are fixed, even the courses of the heavens and the earth, which comprehend the earth and all the planets.

"And they give light to each other in their times and in their seasons, in their minutes, in their hours, in their days, in their weeks, in their months, in their years—all these are one year with God, but not with man."

The foregoing quotation will be found in Section 88, Doc. and Cov.

BLESSINGS PREDICATED UPON OBEDIENCE TO LAW

Upon another occasion the Lord said to his prophet:

"For behold, I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory.

"For all who will have a blessing at my hands shall abide the law which was appointed for that blessing, and the conditions thereof, as were instituted from before the foundation of the world.

"And as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fulness of my glory; and he that receiveth a fulness thereof must and shall abide the law, or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God. (Doc. and Cov. 132, verses 4, 5, 6.)

"There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

"And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated." (Doc. and Cov., Sec. 130, verses 20, 21.)

Now we learn from this that every blessing bestowed upon men is predicated upon law. I take it there is no exception to this rule. Blessings do not come in a haphazard way, they do not come by chance, but they come by obedience to law. And if you want a blessing you must obey the law upon which that particular blessing is predicated. The blessing of salvation is predicated upon obedience to the New and Everlasting Covenant, and condemnation is predicated upon its rejection.

THE NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT

Now, what is this New and Everlasting Covenant spoken of? We understand it to be the gospel of Jesus Christ, or the law of the gospel. If you desire salvation, then you must obey the law of the gospel. It cannot be had in any other way. We can't run and jump into heaven, or drop down into it from above, or climb up into it from below. If you get into heaven, if you would secure the blessings, joys and privileges of heaven, you must obey the law that governs in heaven. That is good logic and good reasoning, and is according to revelation.

BLESSINGS DERIVED FROM PAYMENT OF TITHES

Let us make an application or two: For instance, there is the law of tithing. It is a law of God. If you would receive the blessing that goes with paying tithing, then you must obey the law of tithing. Somebody might ask: "Well, what is the blessing that goes with the paying of tithing?" The answer is this: A great and important blessing. We are told in the revelation on tithing—Doc. and Cov., Sec. 119—that to them who observe to keep this law the land will be sanctified and will become a land of Zion; it will not be a land of Zion to them who reject the law of tithing.

BLESSINGS OBTAINED THROUGH OBEYING THE WORD OF WISDOM

What blessing, if any, comes through obedience to the Word of Wisdom? Is it worth while to render obedience to this special Word from the Lord? Certainly it is worth while. The Word of Wisdom is often referred to in our Church as the law of health. I am sure if the Latter-day Saints would follow it strictly and carefully, they would enjoy the blessing of health to a very great extent. Of course we naturally inherit the weaknesses and imperfections of the flesh, that is true, but generally speaking, good health and the preservation of our bodies would result in the main from an observance of the Word of Wisdom.

Still another great blessing comes from observance of the Word of Wisdom, for the Lord said to Joseph Smith, the Prophet, that "all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones; and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint. And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

DISTINCTION BETWEEN DESTROYING ANGEL AND ANGEL OF DEATH

Some people might say, well, so far as that is concerned, the destroying angel slays everybody sooner or later. The answer is: Not so.

There is a distinction between the angel, or messenger, of death and the destroying angel. When a righteous man dies the angel who comes to take charge of his spirit is not a destroying angel, but rather an angel of mercy, of peace and love, a messenger from the Father.

The death of a wicked and disobedient man is bitter, and he has no promise that the destroying angel will pass by him and not slay him.

I rejoice in the fact that all men are subject to law, both civil and heavenly law—the law of the Gospel and the law of the land. We admonish Latter-day Saints to cultivate respect for law.

I know that the Gospel is true, that Christ is and was the Savior of the world, that Joseph Smith the prophet, was a glorious character and a mighty minister of truth. I testify of these things in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy

I wish to take as the subject for my sermon the first and last articles of our faith, written by Joseph Smith.

"We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

"We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to ALL MEN; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

The first and last articles of faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints embody principles, large in their concept of life. These two statements of religion deal with the most important problems of the soul, and they solve in a general way how man may enter into a divine world. Perhaps the majority of mankind is not yet ready for such a presentation of religion; but it is through some such conception as the thought of these two statements that mankind will grasp the meaning of life and its ultimate end. The same trend of thought that we have today—the religious and the scientific—was developed in ancient times when Hebraism and Hellenism flourished. This brought forth much of the thought expressed by the Prophet Zechariah, when he wrote "Thy Sons, O Zion, against thy Sons, O Greece." The one thought was the selfless life, and its eternal belief in God; the other was the life of nature; the pursuit of knowledge, the establishment of great truths by philosophers and men of science.

Such men who believe in the one true and living God, the eternal father of us all, like Jeremiah, Isaiah, and Zechariah, established through their writings the fundamental truths of religion and life. They gave to the world religion, which took the culture of Greece and afterwards the power of Rome, and elevated and inspired them. The Hellenistic movement was that of Aristotle and Plato, and through these men there came into the world a struggle fiercer than the struggle of arms; for it was a struggle of ideas, but the words of the prophets had a keener significance for all time to come than had any other thought. "The Sons of Zion were against the Sons of Greece." Israel and Greece stood for the two great forces that have moulded our Western history, and still dominate modern life. Paul, the Apostle before the age of historical criticism, made the distinction so emphasized in our day, between the Hebrew spirit and the Gentile, particularly the Greek, when he said that the Gentiles followed not after righteousness; but that Israel did follow after the law of righteousness. Beautiful are his words found in the ninth chapter of Romans. History fully bears out Paul's contrast between the Jew and the Greek; the religious mind and the scientific mind. The Jews understood that God required righteousness as indispensable for life. The law flashed out solemn warning to the world. The sense of sin, the need of redemption, the lawlessness of human nature, when it is not under subjection to the law of God; and these principles were all postulates of the Bible. Hebraism stood out for the moral and religious principle, Hellenism for the culture of the human; the sensitive love for the beautiful, and the joy of living.

Down through the ages, faith in one God was needed before consistency in the moral life of man was possible. The world is indebted to the Jews for the moral law, not merely the Ten Commandments, but the idea of law in general. The result of this moral advance was an infinite intellectual advance, and it brought reason and order into the world.

The idea of the uniformity of nature, which is the first principle of science, was impossible until the Jewish mind swept away Polytheism, and through the concept of law, saw the world consistent, with unbroken continuity. In this way, the Hebraism of the Jew and the Hellenism of the Greek came together."

So today we have the struggle of ideas. There appear two opposing methods of thought and development, which we meet in our schools and universities. They reflect at times a conflict in human nature. With the thought of the first and the last articles of our faith, certainly we make a contribution to religious thought in our day. We see the simple acceptance of both sides, looking with clear eyes on the whole situation. We accept the Hellenistic or scientific truths as given by the master men of science and philosophy. It is the gospel of the love for the beautiful and the joy of living; that man may search out truth by study and thoughtful work in the world. Then on the other hand, these two articles implicitly say that all discord in life is changed into harmony by reconciling man to God. The deepest thought of Christ's teaching and life is simple confidence in God, as seen in the world and in human life. This consciousness of the divine takes precedence over all else, and becomes the great inspiring motive, driving the life to noble ends, and assuring the spirit of man of the highest realities of life. This is one of the contributions of the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord, as we Latter-day Saints understand it. The problems of life are solved not by denying one side or the other, but by carrying both sides to a high point. As of old, so today, Christianity reconciles religion and science by a form of knowledge and ethics, that is made accessible to all classes, kindreds, tongues, and peoples. The gospel of Jesus Christ is not a scheme of culture or a system of philosophy; but a Religion, fulfilling the law and the prophets, enforcing the obligations of duty, and pointing to the glory of the Cross. It brings man into a new relationship to God. Its end is not the curtailment of thought and life, but its enlargement, so there is room for the development of every gift of heart, mind, and soul. As was indicated by the Prophet Joseph Smith in the last article of faith, the narrow lot of man is broadened whenever he comes into filial relation to God. This enlargement of life through faith is a fact of experience. Faith in God enlarges the horizon of life, and leads to the acceptance of all truth. All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are opened to the believing mind; "for they are all broken lights of God, in whose light alone, we see light." How forcibly wrote Paul of old:

"The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made."

So we, Latter-day Saints, say to the world: "Believe in God the eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost," for it is Christ who gives us power to become, and opens up new possibilities of thought, feeling, and action. He asks for obedience, and when we obey, we discover the law of our own life; He asks for service, and when we serve, we discover perfect freedom. The love of God in Christ unifies life for us; we gain love, and as our love increases, our faith deepens.

The message of Jesus then, as it is now, was: "Repent." "Prepare ye the way of the Lord." His coming in that first day was a revolution in religious thought. He taught that the soul of man deals directly with his God. Man must be perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect. His life changed the history of mankind more deeply, more widely, and more permanently than any other from the beginning of the world to the present. It was he, Christ Jesus our Lord, who bestowed upon us the increasing consciousness of the immortality of spiritual values.

So has the message of our Lord been revealed today.

Jesus Christ and him crucified for the sins of the world; the larger faith that assures us immortality, are what the world needs this Easter day. He is risen. He is our Savior and our King. He lives and we are in the image of the true and living God, who made the world and all things therein. And when the sons of Greece are for and not against the sons of Zion; when all ideals of culture shall find their inspiration and nourishment in the divine ideals of Jesus, the Redeemer, then will the world march on to perfection.

When thought, and art, and literature, and science, and knowledge and life are brought into subjection to the obedience of Christ, then shall we have the true victory of life, and we will be able to say: "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean."

Both trends of thought are coming together in the gospel of Jesus Christ. George Santayana, America's greatest philosopher writes today:

"O world, thou choosest not the better part.
It is not wisdom to be only wise,
And on the inward vision, close the eyes,
But it is wisdom to believe the heart.
Columbus found a world, and had no chart
Save one that faith deciphered in the skies
To trust the soul's invincible surmise
Was all his science and his only art.
Our knowledge is a torch of smoky pine
That lights the pathway but one step ahead
Across a void of mystery and dread.
Bid then, the tender light of faith to shine
By which alone the mortal heart is led Unto the thinking of the thought divine."

And so by thy divine faith, says Santayana, shall you find out the true knowledge.

In our belief as Latter-day Saints, Zion and Greece are brought together today in the Doctrine and Covenants one of our sacred books.

The Doctrine and Covenants contains the revelations of God the Father to Joseph Smith and other prophets of God in this dispensation. It tells about the restoration of the plan of God in the salvation of the human race. It is largely ethical in its message, and, like the Book of Mormon, makes public and private righteousness matters of practice. The book opens by telling of a mighty work that is about to be ushered into the world. This is the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ, with the giving to man of the holy priesthood of God, the Aaronic and Melchizedek, as it existed in the days of the prophets of Israel and at the time of Christ. The outstanding truth of the book is that God is identified as the Father of the race, and the gospel of Jesus Christ is restored in this day with all its gifts and blessings. It puts the principle of righteousness through obedience to the plan of salvation into the foreground; and all its teachings grow out of the principle that for man to attain the highest development he must place his faith in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, and receive by divine authority the priesthood of God. It also emphasizes the importance of man's spiritual life, and his great mission on earth; as well as the glory of immortality and the power of eternal progression in the hereafter. Men are coming to know beauty and truth. Zion and Greece are brought together. These two articles of faith, the first and the last, written by the Prophet Joseph Smith, embody this great thought, and that is a distinct contribution to the truth and to the religion of the world.

That the Lord may help us to see these things and appreciate the beauty of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the majesty and the grandeur of the principles of eternal truth that have been revealed in this day, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "High on the mountain top."

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

No servant of the Lord should ever arise before a congregation and say, I have nothing upon my mind. A people who have been commanded of God to "seek for wisdom out of the best of books"—to "seek learning by study and also by faith," ought to have something upon their minds. I have something upon my mind, but I need the Spirit of the Lord to enable me to bring it forth, in such a way as to feed your souls with the bread of life and build you up in the faith of the everlasting gospel. That Spirit I now invoke.

THE CONFERENCE KEYNOTE

The keynote of this conference, if I heard it aright, was struck by the president of the Church in his opening address yesterday morning, when he referred to the great and marvelous work in which the Latter-day Saints are taking part. I wish to elaborate that theme.

A PROPHECY AND ITS FULFILMENT

It was about seven hundred years before the birth of the Savior, when a prophet of God upon the Eastern hemisphere predicted the coming forth of "a marvelous work and a wonder." The reason assigned for its coming was given in the language of the Lord, as follows:

"Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, * * *

"Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."—Isa. 29:13, 14.

If you wish to know when and where this prophecy began to be fulfilled, follow me down the ages to the spring of the year 1820, and into the rural districts of New York State, where then dwelt a humble family by the name of Smith. One member of that family was a boy between fourteen and fifteen years of age. Anxious for his soul's salvation, young Joseph Smith went into the woods near his father's home, and inquired of the Lord which of all the churches then extant was the true Church of Christ, in order that he might join it. While praying he was seized upon by an evil power, which strove to destroy him; but he was delivered by a vision of light, in the midst of which stood two glorious personages, one of whom, pointing to the other, said: "This is my beloved Son—hear him."

In answer to his inquiry as to the churches, the boy was told, to his astonishment, that none of them was the true Church of Christ, and that he must not connect himself with any of them; but await the coming of the true Church, in the founding of which he was destined to play an important part. Said the Son of God, in relation to the churches then existing: "They draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me;"—thus linking together the ancient prophecy pertaining to the "marvelous work and wonder" and the work inaugurated by Joseph Smith in this the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times.

MARVELS AND WONDERS

And what a wonderful work it is! What could be more so? At a time when all over the Christian world—to say nothing of the heathen world—it was popularly supposed that the heavens were sealed, and the canon of Scripture full; that visions and revelations had ceased, and that angels no longer communicated with men—at that very time the heavens burst, and not only angels, but God himself comes down, and proclaims to a little fourteen-year-old boy the opening of a new gospel dispensation! Could anything be more marvelous?

Three years pass, and an angel appears to Joseph, giving his name as Moroni, and stating that in mortal life he was a prophet to an ancient people called Nephites, the civilized ancestors of the present-day American Indians. Among other things the youth was told that a record engraved upon gold plates, compiled by Moroni's father, another prophet named Mormon, would be found in a neighboring hill, where Moroni had concealed it centuries before. This record contained the fulness of the everlasting gospel, as delivered to the Nephites by the Savior, who claimed them as his "other sheep"—a branch of the House of Israel. (John 10:16; 3 Nephi 15:21.) That book, translated by Joseph Smith, reveals the wonderful past and the yet more wonderful future of America, the Land of Zion, otherwise known as the Land of Joseph, referred to by the Patriarch Jacob when blessing his twelve sons (Gen. 49:22-26), and by the Prophet Moses, in giving his farewell benediction to the tribes of Israel (Deut. 33:13-17.) America is shown to be the place of the New Jerusalem, a holy city to be built by a gathering of scattered Israel, prior to the glorious coming of the Lord.

Next came John the Baptist, another angel, who conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood, authorizing them to preach the gospel in its restored purity, and to baptize by immersion for the remission of sins. And this was followed by a visitation from three other heavenly messengers—namely, Peter, James and John, who ordained them to the Melchizedek Priesthood, thus empowering them to bestow upon their baptized converts the gift of the Holy Ghost. By virtue of these ordinations, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized, April 6, 1830, at Fayette, Seneca county, New York. And thus was fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy of the lifting up of the Ensign for the gathering of scattered Israel (Isa. 11:11-16.) This movement was authorized by Moses, who as an angel delivered to Joseph and Oliver the keys of the Gathering; that the dispersed of Judah and the outcasts of Israel—including the Lost Tribes in "the land of the North"—might assemble in fulfillment of prophecy—the Jews to Palestine, to rebuild the old Jerusalem; the other tribes to America, where the new Jerusalem is to rise.

Elias also appeared and committed to Joseph and Oliver "the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham." These men were descendants of the great Hebrew patriarch, and were to begin a work having as its object the eternal welfare of Abraham's posterity. Then Elijah came,

"to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and the children to the fathers," that the dead as well as the living might share in the blessings of the Final Dispensation, wherein, pursuant to divine purpose, all things that are Christ's, both in heaven and on earth, will be brought together in one.

In preaching the gospel to the world and gathering Israel from the nations, the Latter-day Saints—children of Ephraim—are helping to fulfil the covenant made by Jehovah with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." So runs the ancient promise—fulfilled by Jehovah himself in coming through the lineage of those patriarchs as the Savior of the world; and further fulfilled by the dispersion of Israel among the nations, blessed by this racial admixture and by the gathering that has begun.

These are some of the marvels connected with the mighty work in which we are taking part—the wonderful work of Almighty God, in this the last and greatest of the gospel dispensations. What can compare with it? Is there anything half so wonderful?

ALMOST AS WONDERFUL

Yes, there is something almost as wonderful—and that is, that the wise men of this world do not see in it anything worthy of their special care or attention. "Mormonism," to its devotees, is the most glorious thing in existence—the sublimest poem that was ever written, the profoundest system of philosophy that the world has ever known. But the "wise" and "prudent" pass it by as a thing of naught, or stand at a distance, sneering at it and pelting it with unsavory epithets. Why is it?

LINCOLN AND GREELEY

Why couldn't Abraham Lincoln, that good and great man, see in "Mormonism" what we see in it, and what it really is—the Everlasting Gospel? He and Joseph Smith lived almost within a stone's throw of each other in Illinois. Why did not the future president recognize in the prophet of God what the Latter-day Saints recognize in him—the most remarkable human being that has walked this earth in two thousand years? Why couldn't Lincoln see it? The great emancipator was no enemy to the "Mormon" people. When asked, after his election as president, how he intended to treat the "Mormon" question—which was bothering the politicians as well as the priests—he answered in his quaint, characteristic way: "I intend to treat it as a farmer on the frontier would treat an old water-soaked elm log lying upon his land—too heavy to move, too knotty to split, and too wet to burn. I'm going to plow round it." And he did.

Horace Greeley, another great character, the founder and editor of the New York Tribune, a man whose utterances were more potent in his day than those of the president of the United States—he came out to Utah in early times when the fastest means of travel between the Missouri river and the Pacific Coast, was the ox-team, the pack-mule, or Ben Holliday's stage line. Greeley came by stage, and on his way to California, tarried certain days in Salt Lake City. He had repeated interviews with President Brigham Young, and in a book afterwards written and published he paid high compliment to the pioneers and early settlers of these mountain solitudes. He didn't believe the "Mormons" were robbers and murderers, as he had been told, and he spoke of them as honest and industrious people. But that was all. Brigham Young's views on marriage and slavery interested the great editor, but the "Mormon" religion in its sublimest phases was a sealed book to him. Why?

OUTSIDE AND INSIDE AUXILIARIES

Well, doubtless there were good reasons for it; and I will venture to advance one. Perhaps the Lord needs such men on the outside of his Church, to help it along. They are among its auxiliaries, and can do more good for the cause where the Lord has placed them, than anywhere else. And the same is true of the priesthood and its auxiliaries inside the Church. Hence, some are drawn into the fold and receive a testimony of the Truth; while others remain unconverted—for the present; the beauties and glories of the gospel being veiled temporarily from their view, for a wise purpose. The Lord will open their eyes in his own due time.

ISRAEL AND THE GENTILES

God is using more than one people for the accomplishment of his great and marvelous work. The Latter-day Saints cannot do it all. It is too vast, too arduous, for any one people. Our part in it is the greatest. We have the gospel and the priesthood, with a mission to gather Israel, build the New Jerusalem, and prepare the way for the advent of the King of kings. And this duty has been laid upon us because we belong to the house of Israel. It is the God of Israel who is coming to reign and we are the right people to prepare the way before him.

But we don't own the steamships and the railroads and other means of rapid transit and communication, whereby the Lord's people are being gathered out from the nations—flying "upon the shoulders of the Philistines," as Isaiah predicted. The risen Savior, when he appeared to the Nephites and spoke of the glorious future, said that the Gentiles would assist his people in gathering to their promised lands. And are they not doing this? Is it not the ships and railroads of the Gentiles—"the shoulders of the Philistines"—that are bringing the children of Ephraim to this Land of Joseph, and carrying the children of Judah to their ancient homeland—dedicated for their return by direction of the Prophet of Ephraim—Joseph Smith?

We have no quarrel with the Gentiles. They are our partners in a certain sense. The name Gentile is not with us a term of reproach. It comes from Gentilis, meaning, of a nation, a family or a people not of Israel—that is all. "Mormon" is a nickname for Latter-day Saint, but "Gentile" is not a nickname. It simply means, with us, one who does not belong to the Church. We need the Gentiles, and they need us, but they don't know it, and we do. They are wiser than we are in material things—the things of Earth and Time. But when it comes to spiritual things—the things of Heaven and Eternity, we can teach them. We need their wealth and worldly wisdom, their wonderful skill in managing and manipulating temporalities. And they need the Gospel and the Priesthood. They need us, for we hold in our hands the Key to their eternal salvation.

Again I say, the Lord's Work has need of auxiliaries outside as well as inside, to help it along. Because of their worldly influence—which would depart if they connected themselves with the Church—many are kept where they are, where the Lord has placed them, and can best use them for the good of all.

THE WISE AND PRUDENT

Many years ago I had an interesting conversation with a man who was a member of the Roman Catholic church. He was a great scholar; he must have had a dozen languages at his tongue's end, and seemed to know all about history, science, law, philosophy, and all the rest of it. We were frank and friendly with each other, and one day he said to me:

"You 'Mormons' are all ignoramuses. You don't even know the strength of your own position. It is so strong that there is only one other position tenable in the whole Christian world, and that is the position of the Roman Catholic church. The issue is between 'Mormonism' and Catholicism. If you are right, we are wrong. If we are right, you are wrong, and that's all there is to it. These Protestant sects haven't a leg to stand on; for if we are right, we cut them off long ago, as apostates; and if we are wrong, they are wrong with us, for they were a part of us and came out of us. If we have the apostolic succession from St. Peter, as we claim, there was no need of Joseph Smith and 'Mormonism;' but if we have not that apostolic succession, then such a man as Joseph Smith was necessary, and 'Mormonism's' position is the only consistent one. It is either the perpetuation of the Gospel from ancient times or the restoration of the Gospel in latter days."

"Doctor," said I, "that is a very clear and concise statement, and I agree with it in almost every particular. But don't deceive yourself with the notion that we 'Mormons' don't know the strength of our own position. We know it better than you do. We know it better than any other people can know it. We haven't all been to college, we can't all speak the dead languages, and we may be ignoramuses as you say; but we know we are right, and we know you are wrong." I was just as frank with him as he had been with me.

Now what was this great scholar's viewpoint? With all his learning, he could not see into the heart of "Mormonism." He recognized the strength of its position; but he supposed that to be an accident.

He thought Joseph Smith had stumbled upon something of which he did not know the true value. He was wise in worldly wisdom; but his wisdom perished in the presence of this mighty and marvelous problem.

Another instance and I am done. A learned gentleman named Riley applied for a doctor's degree at Yale University, and as the basis of his application, he wrote a thesis entitled "Joseph Smith, the Founder of Mormonism." And what did he bring forth? Simply this: That Joseph Smith was an epileptic, who fell in a fit and imagined that he saw the Father and the Son; imagined that Moroni revealed to him the Book of Mormon; that John the Baptist conferred upon him the Aaronic Priesthood, and Peter, James and John the Melchizedek Priesthood; that Moses restored the keys of the gathering, and that Elias and Elijah also appeared to him. All imagination, said Mr. Riley.

But this wise man overlooked one important fact: A tree is known by its fruit; a fountain, by the stream that issues from it. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as a system of government, challenges the admiration of intelligent men all over the world. It is conceded to be a wonderful organization. And the doctrines of "Mormonism" are replete with poetry and philosophy—are beautiful, glorious and sublime. Joseph Smith declared that these things were revealed to him—that they came right down from God out of heaven; but Mr. Riley would have us believe that they all sprang from the diseased brain of a fourteen-year-old boy who had fallen in an epileptic fit!

There are some things that do not need answering, and this one of them. Well was it said in days of old, with reference to the days in which we live: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

ONLY ONE WAY

There is but one way to understand "Mormonism"—and that is God's way, not man's. Books and schools cannot give a testimony of the Truth. Those who sneer at the Everlasting Gospel, and pelt it with nicknames, will never understand it—unless they repent, and are baptized, and receive the Holy Ghost, whereby the things of God are made manifest. What Peter said to the multitude in his great Pentecostal sermon, is just as true today as when it was first spoken. The Gospel does not change; it is the same yesterday, today and forever; and what was necessary to save a soul two thousand years ago, is necessary to save one now. Amen.

ELDER JOHN M. KNIGHT

Retiring President of the Western States Mission

During the few moments at my disposal I pray that I may have the spirit of this occasion.

For nearly nine years it has been my good fortune to labor as a missionary of the Church, proclaiming to the world the marvelous work and a wonder that has been established in this dispensation. I can truly say to you, my brethren and sisters, that it has brought into my life a greater joy than any other experience. We may buy pleasure, we may attain happiness, but real joy comes to the individual who gives long and unselfish service to his fellowmen. I have rejoiced in the opportunity afforded me to lift up my voice in proclamation of the gospel and to declare that Jesus is the Christ and that Joseph Smith was and is a prophet of the living God.

As I have listened to the brethren, during the sessions of this conference, I have realized more fully than ever before that Joseph Smith was the spiritual pioneer of the nineteenth century, that he was the trail-blazer, if you please, who led men and women away from the worship of idols and planted anew in their hearts a knowledge of God and of his Son, Jesus Christ. He led by voice and life and never permitted the message entrusted to his care to be throttled by any power, social, economic or military. Joseph Smith established the Church on a firm foundation, builded it upon the Savior of the world, with apostles and prophets as in the great organization established by the Savior in the meridian of time. I am wondering if we appreciate the value of that organization, how important it is that we have the living oracles among us. If it were not for these men, who direct the destinies of the Church, who keep it in order, we would soon be as the world, wafted about by every wind of doctrine, and as unstable as many of the organizations calling themselves Christian churches.

I am happy in the knowledge that the Church has been controlled, from the beginning, by the power of God, and that the men who have stood at the head have directed its destiny under his inspiration. The Latter-day Saints, as indicated by the last speaker, are not in doubt with respect to the gospel of the Master. It is the purpose and will of our Father that all men might know the truth. To that end the gospel is being preached in all the world as a witness. The promise is made unto all who obey its saving ordinances, that they may know the truth. There are thousands and tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints today who bear witness that the Lord has heard and answered their prayers, and has sealed upon their hearts this knowledge. The missionaries who are out in the world, undaunted and unafraid, proclaim to the people that if they will obey the truth they may know that it is of God. The Savior has promised that if any man will do the will of the Father he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether we speak of ourselves.

May I refer to one incident that happened in our mission during the last year. One of our missionaries, laboring in Casper, Wyoming, called at a home one day and was invited in, by the man of the house. He discussed our faith with this gentleman for upwards of three hours. The man then said to him: "I have been a member of a Christian church for many years, and was educated for the ministry. My father and my grandfather before me were ministers of the gospel.

Some ten years ago I discovered that there was a lack of vitality in the organization to which I belonged, and I covenanted with the Lord that if I ever found the truth I would accept it. I resigned my pastorate, took up school teaching, and have been searching for the truth." He said, "I have looked everywhere, except into your organization and your faith, and I discover today that you have presented to me the message that I have been seeking all these years. I have covenanted with the Lord that I would join the church that presented to me the truth, and I find what I am looking for in your organization."

It was not an easy matter for this gentleman to accept the message of the elders. Weeks and months went by, a serious illness overtook him, an operation was necessary; but before the operation was performed he called his family around him and said to them: "I have discovered the truth in the Mormon Church, and if I die, it is my wish that you accept their message and become identified with that people, and then have the work done for me in the temple." The man did not die. The elders administered to him; he lived, and as soon as he was sufficiently well he became a member of the Church by baptism. After baptism he said, in bearing testimony, that the scriptures were opened to his view, or to his understanding; they became a new volume. He understood them as he had never understood them before. He comprehended the truth. It was to me the best evidence of his conversion. The Holy Spirit had come into his life, and he was able to understand the gospel of the Master as it is presented by the Latter-day Saints. Many such instances might be related.

I appreciate that the time has expired. I desire to bear my testimony to the truth; that I know as I know I live that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, that it is the power of God unto salvation to all who will obey its saving principles and ordinances. It is not enough for us merely to go down into the waters of baptism, but after we have accepted the truth we should make application in our lives of its saving graces—add to our faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. The apostle of old said: "If these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Lord help us to so live that we may be worthy of all his blessings, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Now let us rejoice."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Henry D. Moyle, President of the Cottonwood stake of Zion.

The conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The meeting commenced at 2 o'clock in the Tabernacle, April 7, 1928.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The congregation sang, "How firm a foundation."

Elder Heber S. Allen, president of the Taylor stake, offered the opening prayer.

A solo, "Lift thy heart," was sung by Harold H. Bennett.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I pray that I may have the Spirit of the Lord to direct me in what I shall say this afternoon. It is my desire to address my remarks particularly to the officers and teachers of the Church—those who have been called to responsible positions in the Church and who have a voice in the choosing of instructors in the priesthood quorums and the various auxiliary and other organizations of the Church.

TEACH AS DIRECTED BY THE SPIRIT

I shall read a few verses from section forty-two of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel.

"And they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit.

"And the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith; and if you receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."

We are inaugurating in the Church this year, a little different system in regard to the teaching of members of the Church, and I think it is an improvement through which all the members may have the opportunity to receive instruction in the principles of the Gospel as these things are presented unto them by these elders, priests and teachers of the Church, according to the word of the Lord in this revelation.

FAITH A NECESSARY QUALIFICATION

The matter of teaching is one of the greatest importance. We cannot estimate its value when it is properly done; neither do we know the extent of the evil that may result if it is improperly done. Whether in the Church schools, the seminaries, auxiliary organizations; or in the Priesthood quorums, the greatest qualification required of a teacher is that he have faith in the principles of the gospel; that he believe in the principles of revealed truth as they have come through inspired prophets in our own day as well as in times of old; and that he shall exercise his privilege as a teacher in the spirit of prayer and faith.

I am in full accord with the commandment as it is written in this revelation. Unless a man does have a knowledge of the truth, has faith in the word of the Lord and his power, and is guided by the Spirit of the Lord, he should not teach. We are commanded "to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life." For we "shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ."

In this day of wonderful educational privileges and opportunities for the gaining of knowledge, as the world understands it, we may feel that the greatest thing required of a teacher is that he possess a liberal education. It is very essential that men with the responsibility that teaching brings, be educated; that they have knowledge in a general way; but it matters not what a man's training or what his schooling may be—how many degrees he holds—if he has not faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ and has no testimony received from the Spirit of the Lord of the divine truth which has been revealed, he is not qualified to teach in any organization within the Church. Sometimes those who are serving as Bishops and Presidents of Stakes, and in other leading positions, I fear, may overlook this fact and in the choosing of teachers in classes, as teacher trainers, or wherever it may be, think of the man's educational qualifications as they would be looked upon in the world and forget the spiritual and doctrinal qualifications which are more essential. A teacher should not be called primarily because of his schooling, or educational attainments, without taking into consideration his humility, his faith and his integrity to the cause of truth which he is supposed to represent. This training does not come through the study of science, art or literature, but through prayer and faith and the promptings of the Spirit of the Lord. It cannot be stated too forcefully that the man or the woman without faith in the gospel as it has been revealed in the day in which we live, should not teach. The Lord has made it very emphatic.

MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH SHOULD BE PROPERLY TRAINED

This is a very important age in which we live, and our message and our authority in the world are the most important things in the world. The souls of members of the Church are just as precious in the sight of the Lord as are the souls of the people in the world unto whom our missionaries go with the plan of salvation. In fact, if a choice is to be made, a soul already in the Church—one who is in the Covenant—is just a little dearer to the Father, if possible, than is one who is on the outside. Of course, the Lord is no respecter of persons, and all souls are precious in his sight, but he no doubt loves those who obey his voice and who are willing to walk in his truth, more than he does those who fail to do so. We should spend our time and give diligent attention to the training of members of the Church. Teachers who are filled with the spirit of the Lord and who are tried and true, should be called to act in this capacity, and those who are not so tried and proved, should not be called to instruct the members. What do we accomplish if we spend our time and means preaching in the world to make converts to the gospel, if we place instructors before the youth in the stakes and wards who destroy the faith in the hearts of the young people in the divine message intrusted to our care?

SAVING PRINCIPLES

A man may have a wonderful education and not be on the road to salvation. It matters not if a man is acquainted with the principles of science, history, literature, and all the branches of education as they are taught in the schools of our land, these truths, of themselves, will not save him in the kingdom of God. He must have in his heart the spirit of faith in the mission of Jesus Christ; he must understand the principle of repentance; he must understand the principle by which the remission of sins may be obtained, which is baptism by immersion by one having authority. In fact, he must understand all of the first principles of the gospel and obey them. These truths are fundamental to salvation. If a man has not complied with these principles and received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, and obtained entrance into the kingdom of God, he is not on the road to salvation, no matter what else his knowledge may be. The great learning he obtains in the world will not save him.

FULNESS OF TRUTH PROMISED TO FAITHFUL

All knowledge is helpful, all truth is a part of the gospel, but the Lord has given us some fundamental laws, truths by which his kingdom is governed, and we must be in accord with these principles of truth and these laws, and understand them if we would be saved in the celestial kingdom. Having possession of these truths pertaining to our salvation, we may add to our knowledge. Eventually a man will be under the necessity, if he becomes perfect as the Lord prayed and taught in his sermon on the mount, to understand all truth. Things are taught in a fragmentary way now, but we will know them in full sometime when we receive the greater light and understanding after the resurrection. Our knowledge does not end with this life. We will continue to progress in eternity, and all things will be revealed unto those who are faithful in this life in keeping the commandments of the Lord. The Redeemer has said:

"The Spirit of truth is of God. I am the Spirit of truth, and John bore record of me, saying: He received a fulness of truth, yea, even of all truth.

"And no man receiveth a fulness unless he keepeth his commandments.

"He that keepeth his commandments receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth and knoweth all things."

SEEK MEN OF FAITH AND TESTIMONY

We learn in the scriptures, then, that there are fundamental things which we must understand, and laws which we must obey, if we would find our way into the celestial kingdom. Now I speak this way to impress upon my brethren, the Bishops and Presidents of Stakes, and others, the necessity of hunting for men as teachers in organizations within the Church who have a firm testimony and who live in full accord with the word of the Lord. Men who are filled with the spirit of faith, who understand the principles of the gospel, and who make them a part of their lives and who spend some of their time in prayer and fasting.

THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH

Let me read from another revelation:

"Wherefore, I the Lord ask you this question—unto what were ye ordained?

"To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter which was sent forth to teach the truth.

"And then received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and received them to be of God; and in this are ye justified?

"Behold ye shall answer this question yourselves; nevertheless, I will be merciful unto you; he that is weak among you hereafter shall be made strong.

"Verily I say unto you, he that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way?

"And if it be by some other way it is not of God.

"And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth or some other way?

"If it be some other way it is not of God.

"Therefore, why is it that ye cannot understand and know, that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth?

"Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understand one another, and both are edified and rejoice together."

HOW TO AVOID DECEPTION

Again the Lord has said, speaking on this question:

"And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations—

"Wherefore he that prayeth, whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me if he obey mine ordinances.

"He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek and edifieth, the same is of God if he obey mine ordinances.

"And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you."

Satan is abroad in the land, deceiving the nations, and he will deceive us unless we are firmly grounded in the faith, unless we base our salvation on truth, unless we search for gospel knowledge and understanding. The Lord has required of us, as he sets it forth in many of the revelations given to the Church, that we should search the scriptures, and make ourselves familiar with the teachings they contain. If we will do this then, we will not be led astray by every wind of doctrine and foolish teaching of men in the world, but will have power to understand and discern between truth and error and choose the right, avoiding that which is wrong. Every member of this Church has it within his power to know the truth, so that he may not be deceived. This knowledge will come to us through our study, through faith, through perseverance, and through living in full accord with the ordinances of the gospel.

May the Lord bless and guide us, I pray, in all things, that we may be steadfast in the truth in these days of peril, these days when there are so many false doctrines prevailing in the world and men are striving to destroy the fundamental teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ. May we stand firm and faithful in the spirit of prayer, the spirit of faith and with a perfect testimony of the truth, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

I have been greatly impressed by the spirit of this conference, and with the fact that the Lord has set his hand to do a marvelous work and a wonder among the inhabitants of the earth in the day and age in which we live. It is, indeed, a marvelous and wonderful work that was portrayed to us so beautifully, in the meeting this morning, by Elder Orson F. Whitney. It has been accompanied by the most miraculous occurrences, and it is not a great wonder that many people have questioned its truth.

We are living in a day of agnosticism, a day when there is but little faith among the children of men. The great thing in connection with these miraculous occurrences is the introduction, among our Father's children, of those principles and doctrines that have within them the power of God unto salvation.

What is the work of God? We read in the opening paragraph of the Bible:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.

"And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

"And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."

Thus began, according to Holy Writ, the great work of creation; and there followed the creation of man in the image of God.

What is God's work, of which we speak as this marvelous work and a wonder? It is the great plan of life and salvation. God created the heavens and the earth, and we look up into the starry heavens, with wonder and amazement at the grandeur and the glory of this universe in the midst of which we live. We see the blazing sun at noonday and our hearts are thrilled with the wonder of it; and we learn of the motions of those heavenly bodies and our hearts are filled with amazement and wonder at the glory of this wonderful creation; and we ask the question, Whose work is this? We may read the answer in the opening verse of the Holy Scriptures: It is the work of God.

But is that all that is contemplated in this great work of God? Is that the great thing that God has in mind? The Lord spake unto his servant Moses, and his words unto that mighty prophet read like this: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man." The saving of human souls, redeeming them from the fall, exalting them, and bringing them back into the presence of God, is to bring to pass their immortality and eternal life. It is not sufficient that we live here upon the earth. This is but one phase in the progress of the children of God. This mighty work of God began before the foundations of this earth were laid. What do we know about the things that happened before the foundations of this earth were laid? I grant you that very little has been revealed, but that little is full of meaning. The Lord spake unto his servant Job and said:

"Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding. * * *

"When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"

True enough; where was Job then? My brethren and sisters, where were we? We stood in the presence of our Maker; we stood in the presence of our Eternal Father—his begotten children in the spirit. What was the occasion that filled our hearts with joy? It was the promulgation of this glorious plan, whereby the children of God might become exalted and be saved in the kingdom of God, that we might have our part in that great work which the Lord instituted among his children even in that primeval day, that involved the creation of this world, the placing of our Father's children upon it in tabernacles of flesh and bones. It involved the fall, because we were free agents, and without the experience of an earth life there would be no possibility of an exaltation.

The principle of progress is involved in the experiences that we have upon this earth. The plan was announced. It was one of free agency, the right to choose between good and evil. Are you willing to take the chances of an earth-life, with the recollection of your previous existence taken from you, and live in a world of sin, tempted by the adversary of the children of men? Are you willing to be proved, whether or not you will do all things whatsoever the Lord will require of you? The announcement was made and a covenant made with the children of God, even in that primeval day, when he revealed the gospel of the Lord Jesus to the children of God. Even then, it was the power of God unto salvation, the new and the everlasting covenant that the Lord made with his children. If you will do these things and prove yourselves, you will receive an exaltation in the celestial kingdom of God. And our hearts were filled with joy inexplicable, even to overflowing, and we shouted for joy over the glad tidings that had been made known unto us even in that primeval day.

The plan involved the sending of one mighty and strong. The question arose, Whom shall I send? And there arose in that mighty multitude the first-born of all the children of God, who said, "Here am I, send me." "Thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever." But there was another in that assembly who objected to the great plan that was evolved, that of free agency, and he arose in that mighty multitude and said, "Here am I send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind that one soul shall not be lost." Compulsion, that. "Surely I will do it," said he, "wherefore give me thine honor." And God said, "I will send the first." And Satan grew angry, for Satan it was who had spoken thus, and he rebelled against God. He had been busy beforehand, laboring among the children of God, deceiving them with his sophistries. And there was war in heaven, and Satan prevailed not, for the Lord sent the first, and Satan was cast out of heaven.

The all-important thing for the inhabitants of this world, then, is this, to believe on Him whom God did send, and reject the message of him whom God did not send but cast out of heaven. For the war, begun in heaven, was continued here on earth among the children of men, and Satan is abroad in the land endeavoring to lead the children of God away here as there, continuing his work of destroying the souls of men. To believe on Jesus Christ, then, is the all-important thing. Believe on him and thou shalt be saved. And when I say believe on him, I mean a living faith in him, and in his glorious gospel, for, as then, it is now the power of God unto salvation. A man may not say that he believes on him and reject his gospel. A man who has a living faith in him lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God, and accepts of the plan of him whom God sent into the world, rejecting the plan of the adversary. To accept the plan of our Savior is to have faith. To reject the plan of the adversary, with all his sophistry, his false religion, his deception, his evil and all combined, to resent and resist that, and to turn away from it, is to overcome sin.

There is only one way, and that is to accept of him whom God sent, and his glorious gospel, which has been restored in the day and age in which we live. That which was first given to father Adam and in various dispensations of God's providence has been revealed anew to the children of men. Let us then have faith in him. There is no other name given under heaven whereby men and women can be saved, no other plan, no other gospel. There is but one faith, one Lord and one baptism; and that baptism, and that faith, and that Lord have been revealed to the children of men in this dispensation of his gospel, and now, in the day in which we live, the gospel restored in all of its primitive purity, having in it the power of God;—a marvelous work and wonder for the salvation and exaltation of the children of God.

May we accept that message, live in accordance with it, and thereby be entitled to an exaltation wherein our Father will fulfil the covenant that he made with us in that primeval day. Let us take advantage of it, and lift up our voices to all the world, that they may hear the glad tidings which God has sent into this world, through his Only Begotten Son, I pray, in the name of Jesus Chrsit. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

Yesterday Elder George F. Richards, quoting the words of the Master, said:

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

May I for a few moments draw your attention to some of the fruits, the accomplishments, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints?

I sat yesterday in our conference by the side of Dr. Roy O. Wyland, director of education for the Boy Scouts of America. As he looked out over the great multitude in this building and listened to the remarks of the various speakers, he was getting, perhaps for the first time, an intimate and accurate view of this Church and its fruits.

At the close of the second session of the conference Dr. Wyland said:

"This is one of the glorious days of my life. I have never known such inspiration before. The feeling that has come into my soul today is entirely new."

A TRIBUTE BY SENATOR OWEN

These remarks of Dr. Wyland remind me of Senator Robert L. Owen and of the experience he had under very similar circumstances, a few years ago in this same building. Senator Owen and the Honorable William J. Bryan occupied front seats at one of our conference sessions during a week-day afternoon. The great audience made up largely of men was to them a thrilling sight.

At the close of the session these two distinguished visitors came to the stand and watched the great multitude move out of the building. A few people, probably a hundred, gathered in front to hear what these visitors might say. Mr. Bryan asked the Senator to speak:

"My friends," said Mr. Owen, "I cannot tell you how much I have been surprised and how much I have been pleased at what I have seen and heard here this day. You need have no fear for the future, for your faith is founded on a rock.

"I can perhaps explain my feelings best by telling you a little story. Two men were sitting side by side; one said to the other, 'You see that man over there? I hate him.'"

"'You hate him? How can you hate him? He is a stranger; you do not even know him.'"

"'Of course I do not know him. I could not hate him if I knew him.'"

Mr. Bryan, Senator Owen, and Dr. Wyland, were all surprised, they were all pleased, with the fruits of Mormonism as these were presented by the audiences and the words of the speakers.

OUR WORK IN SCOUTING

"Ye shall know them by their fruits. * * * A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."

If we are to be judged by the work we have done throughout the Church in Scouting, we have certainly been putting forth good fruit. Dr. Wyland told us in our conference yesterday that no church or other organization has done better.

We are aiming to do efficient Scout work in every one of our one thousand wards in the Church. The Scout program is an essential element of the work offered in our Mutual Improvement Association. Practically every ward has in it a Scout troop.

Elder Richards spoke yesterday of his own son—one of five remarkable Scouts in my own ward, the Twenty-seventh. Few troops in the city or, for that matter, in the entire country, have the record of our Troop Thirty-nine. Scout James Bean was one of the four boys from Region Twelve, which includes Utah, Nevada, Arizona and California, to win the Harmon Foundation Scholarship. Five boys in the Ram Patrol of this Troop to which the son of Elder Richards belongs, another being a grandson of Francis M. Lyman, have each from sixty to seventy-five merit badges. Our Scout Executive, Mr. D. E. Hammond, says that "they are the ranking Scouts of the United States."

If the tree is to be judged by its fruit, what must we say of this outstanding work?

THE CHURCH'S MISSIONARY SYSTEM

Recently I was asked by a great scholar to name outstanding characteristics of our people. I named first our missionary system. I am looking to see someone wise enough, philosopher enough, scientist enough, to explain how, with little opportunity for scholastic education, Joseph Smith could devise an educational institution of such merit as this missionary system.

How precious are the lives of young people eighteen, nineteen, twenty and twenty-one years old!—the critical ages in their careers. What do thoughtful folks think of an institution that teaches boys and young men at this the most critical period of their lives, to devote one, two, perhaps three years to spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to a study of his life and labors?

The Christian world is agreed that there is no other life, that there is no other example, like that of Jesus, the son of God. The historian, H. G. Wells, said:

"Being myself not a Christian, I must, without hesitancy, when I have been asked to name the seven greatest characters of all time, name as the first greatest, the character that has helped humanity most and best—Jesus of Nazareth."

Had Joseph Smith done nothing more than establish this missionary system, which sends young people out in the world unselfishly to teach others the Christian religion, would that work not bear the stamp of divinity? Remember, too, that these young people pay their own expenses. They are not teaching for hire, nor are they divining for money. This is another of the fruits.

FRUITS OF MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT WORK

There came recently into my hands "The Vigilante"—the official organ of the M Men's and Gleaner Girls' organizations of the Hollywood and Los Angeles stakes. These young people are fruits of the Church. What must be the verdict of history as to the Church which produces young people who in an editorial publish the following:

"The man who succeeds must pay the price of success. He must save when he would like to spend. He must work when he would like to be asleep. He must take the kick when he is tempted to kick back. He must be patient when his nature wants him to be impatient. He must call all his faculties to reason when they want to be unreasonable."

These are the sentiments of the young people of the Church who have gone on through Scout work to "M" Men's work—their own ideas, expressed in their own way, in their own publication. Is the tree which produces such fruit a good tree? "By their fruits," says Jesus Christ, the Son of God, "ye shall know them."

SENTIMENTS OF GREAT LEADERS

I would like to have you look for a moment at the man, President Heber J. Grant, who stands at the head of the Church. When the Prophet Samuel was looking for a king of Israel, he said: "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." It is on the character, the heart, of President Heber J. Grant that I desire you to look.

As I walked into his office the other day he handed me a paper. I found on it such words as these, which express his views of life:

"A man is a man when he knows how to sympathize with men in their sorrows. Yea, a man is a man when he knows how to sympathize with men even in their sins. A man is a man when he knows that each man fights a hard fight against many odds, when he has learned how to make friends and how to keep them. A man is a man when no voice of distress reaches his ear in vain, when no hand seeks his aid without response, when he finds good in every faith that helps any man to lay hold of divine things, whatever the name of that faith may be."

These are the feelings, these the sentiments, of the man who has been produced by this Church and who at present stands at the head.

Having known him since I was ten years old, I say with certainty that these views mirror his daily life as he has lived and as he still lives it.

I quote from another product of the Church—words spoken by that scholarly man, John Taylor, on the 12th day of June, 1852—a man who afterwards became President of the Church. Search where you will, and find, if you can, principles any higher or more liberal than these, declared by President John Taylor:

"If any man under heaven can show me one principle of error that I have entertained, I will lay it aside forthwith, and I will be thankful to him for giving me the information. On the other hand, if any man has any principle of truth, whether moral, religious, or of any other kind, if he will present it, I stand ready to embrace it. On the other hand, if I have principles which are out of the power of man to prove false, I stand upon these as a sure, safe foundation."

That is the teaching of the Church; is it good fruit?

A CLEARNESS OF VISION

Why is it, as Elder Whitney asked this morning, that those who are, and those who are not, members of the Church can not see alike? One with a certain mental power and another of equal capacity—why does one believe, the other reject?

Do Church members see more clearly because they belong to the House of Israel? This may be one reason.

It has, however, for a long time been my thought, that a clearness of vision has come to us because those having authority have laid their hands upon our heads, and with authority have said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost"—a blessing which seems to enable us, by the power of faith, to see, to feel, to know, and to say, with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

This is the Church and Kingdom of God. Repent, as has been said to all the world, be baptized, receive the Holy Ghost, and you shall know.

A duet, "O God, our help in ages past," was sung by Margaret Stewart Hewlett and Pearl K. Davis.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

Of the First Council of Seventy

I was not able to be at conference yesterday, but, as I lay on the lounge and listened to the radio, I am glad to say to the people, I heard every word that was said, even at that long distance. I listened with great interest and partook of the spirit of the conference. As far as I am concerned, my brethren and sisters, I feel that it is victory or death. I haven't a vision of any kind whatsoever. I have no ambition to achieve honors, and I have only one viewpoint, and that is salvation. I desire most fervently to walk in the footsteps of my father and to emulate, as far as I am capable, his example, and to be one among the number who are loyal and true and faithful to the Church.

I listened with much pleasure and a great degree of happiness to the reports of the presidents of Missions as to what is accomplished in the world through the preaching of the gospel. I do not know that I ever felt quite so intently as I do now, notwithstanding my own missionary work and the hundreds of elders I have assisted in setting apart, the importance of this labor, because of its influence upon our youngest son, who is now in France.

You know I am rather peculiar in my thoughts and imaginations. I get to thinking along certain lines. I pick up ideas here and there. It is not original. I haven't been able to get hold of anything original for a long time.

All the passion I have had for the past forty years I have put into this work, with all the mistakes and blunders, and my spirit has worn out my body. As I grow older, I become more silent, with a desire to be alone. To me, one glimpse of immortality would mean that death would lose all cause of fear and would hasten my desire to go home. As someone has said: "Why fear death? It is the most beautiful adventure of life."

What is the good of all this education and science if it cannot tell us that there is a survival after death? What is the good of it all if it cannot answer a simple question like that? Science seems not to know what lies beyond the "No man's land," so we must turn our faces and our desires to God for an answer. It has been remarked very often that when we meet a really big man, we almost invariably find a simple man, devoid of pride and arrogance. One reason lies in the fact that every man holding a big position knows in his own soul, if he be honest, that there are forces entirely outside of himself that have led him onward to do big things. The man of the world calls it luck, just a series of accidents, but Latter-day Saints feel that great men and good women succeed because the front door of their intelligence is always open to inspiration and because of their dogged determination and effort to carry out what God has inspired them to do. What a man is worth in this world depends on the kind of life he leaves behind him as he passes. His riches consist, not of what he brought with him, but of what he left behind him as he bestowed his goods and influence to uplift and help the poor.

Heber C. Kimball had the superb gift of living in the hearts of the people. He taught me by his good behavior that while equality is often impossible, brotherhood and friendship is the great possible thing. I cannot but feel that all that is beautiful and virtuous, all that is great and noble, will be for my father. God and Christ, and the Prophet Joseph and his brethren, in time, will assemble, and he will be among that number. His personality was as simple as a child's and he had the priceless gift of a forgiving and loving heart for the people, for his wives and for his children.

The fact that Heber C. Kimball was my father need not, I think, with fair-minded people who are considerate, convict me of immodesty in telling his story. It is not as if I were claiming anything for myself. I had nothing to do with his creation, but I speak of a real man, the personification of a great prophet, a great pioneer in American life. I ask why should I not, at the closing of my life, give in my way an authentic picture of him, with the hope that it may be faith-promoting and convincing to others as it has been to me? When I read of those 143 pioneers who landed in this valley on July 24, 1847, and in one short month they accomplished more for the beginning of a great work than other men have accomplished in a lifetime, I marvel at it. I can remember reading a discourse preached by President Brigham Young at the funeral of Jedediah M. Grant, wherein he said: "This man who lies before you accomplished more in ten years than some men accomplish in one hundred."

I now desire to call to the attention of the Kimball race what was accomplished by President Heber C. Kimball and others in preaching the gospel in England.

Heber Chase Kimball was born in Sheldon, Vermont, June 14, 1801. When he was eleven years old, his parents removed to West Bloomfield, New York, where his father, who was a blacksmith, established a large shop in which Heber was taught blacksmithing. At the age of nineteen, he was thrown upon his own resources, his father having failed in business. Heber was relieved by his elder brother, Charles, who taught him the potter's trade. Heber C. suffered severe poverty to the extent of actual hunger at this time, but it was largely brought about by his shyness and timidity.

"With all his trials, hardships and persecution he was a singular compound in his nature, of courage and timidity; weakness and strength, with a penchant for mirth and a proneness for melancholy, and blending the lion-like qualities of a leader of men with the bashfulness and lamb-like simplicity of a child.

"Men like Heber C. Kimball are not accidents. They are, emphatically and in the truest sense, children of destiny. What is true in this respect of ancient prophets, like Abraham and Jeremiah, is true also of modern prophets.

"This wondrous triad of spirits, known to the world as Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball, of "Green mountain boys" of Vermont, went forth in the name of the great Jehovah to plant the banner of gospel truth."

In the spring of 1837, Brother Kimball was informed by Brother Hyrum Smith, one of the Presidency of the Church, that he was designated by the Holy Spirit, at a conference of the authorities of the Church, to go on a mission to Great Britain.

Brother Kimball felt his weakness and unworthiness and could not help exclaiming, "O Lord, I am a man of stammering tongue, and not fit for the work."

In June, 1837, he bade adieu to his family, friends, the town of Kirtland, in company with Brother Orson Hyde and others, and arrived in England July 15, 1837.

They were moved upon to go to Preston. It was a day on which representatives were chosen. On one of the flags that were unfurled was this motto: "Truth will prevail." The brethren exclaimed, "Amen—so let it be."

They arrived in Kirtland in May, 1838, having been absent about ten months.

There were great numbers initiated into the Church. Those who were sick flocked daily to be healed. The brethren slept but little, and some nights and days were taken up in baptizing, confirming, administering to the sick and teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. They baptized ten, twenty and as many as twenty-five in one day. In Preston, fifty were baptized in one week and one hundred in four weeks.

Referring to the vision of the legion of evil spirit in England, on the opening of the mission, Joseph Smith said, "Brother Heber, at that time you were nigh unto the Lord; there was only a veil between you and him. The nearer a person approaches to the Lord the greater power does the devil manifest."

On September 18, 1839, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and others started on a mission to England. Their wives and children were sick.

Charles Hubbard sent a boy with a span of horses and wagon to start them out on their journey. Brigham and Heber were both sick and, with difficulty, got into the wagon. Reaching Kirtland, they had $13.50 on hand and had paid out $87. They had traveled 400 miles by stage and paid eight to ten cents a mile, had eaten three meals a day at fifty cents a meal and had paid fifty cents for lodgings. Brother Brigham suspected that Heber had put the money in the trunk, but Heber said a heavenly messenger provided the money.

Elders Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, John Taylor, Orson Pratt and R. Hedlock took ship for England, March 7, 1840, arriving April 6, 1840. On April 20, 1841, they returned to New York. They established the work of the Church in almost every noted town and city in Great Britain; baptized between seven thousand or eight thousand; printed 5,000 Books of Mormon, 3,000 Hymn books, 2,500 volumes of the Millennial Star and 50,000 tracts; emigrated 1,000 souls to Zion; established a permanent shipping place, and sowed in the hearts of thousands the seeds of eternal truth.

The fall and winter of 1838 was one of the darkest periods in Church history—mobocracy on one hand and apostasy on the other. It was first a city, then a county, and a whole state rose in arms against God's people.

Agreeable to the terms of the anti-"Mormons," whom the commissioners represented, the Saints, trusting in God, were now preparing for the exodus of the Church and its pilgrimage to the Rocky mountains, an event foreseen by the Prophet Joseph Smith and predicted by him in August, 1842.

Heber C. Kimball accompanied President Brigham Young to Illinois, and was with President Young and the 143 pioneers that found their way to the Salt Lake Valley in 1847.

On returning to Winter Quarters, Brigham Young was chosen and sustained as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, with Heber C. Kimball as his first counselor, in the fall of 1847, a position my father occupied until his death in June, 1868.

I honor my father for his faith, courage and integrity to God the Father and to his Son Jesus Christ. He was one of the first chosen apostles that never desired the Prophet's place—his hands never shook, his knees never trembled and he was true and steadfast to the Church and to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

He built homes for his wives and children, two flour mills, carding machine mill, molasses mills, a linseed oil mill, school buildings, barns, cobble stone walls. He beautified gardens and farms and laid out his inheritance, and laid out city blocks and named the streets. He located hundreds of people who built homes, and he never speculated.

At a council meeting held at the Prophet Joseph's house, Sidney Rigdon remarked that he had some feelings against Elder Kimball who prophesied of Nauvoo: "It is a very pretty place, but not a long abiding place for the saints." Sidney said: "I should suppose that Elder Kimball had passed through suffering and privations and mobbings and drivings enough to learn to prophesy good concerning Israel." With a mixture of meekness and humor, Heber replied: "President Rigdon, I'll prophesy good concerning you all the time if you can get it."

Brother Brigham, Heber and others were enroute to Kirtland. Heber had chills and fever and was very ill. A doctor said he could give him something to relieve him. The doctor was drunk, and gave Heber a tablespoonful of morphine. He reeled and fell to the floor. Some of the brethren wept and said, "We will never see Heber again." Brother Brigham cared for him. Heber said: "Don't be scared. You brethren go ahead, for Brother Brigham and I will reach Kirtland before you will"; and they did.

During the famine of 1856, which was likened unto the famine of Egypt, Heber C. Kimball played a part like unto that of Joseph of old. He had prophesied of the famine. He, by his providence and foresight and anticipation of the famine, had saved his grain, filled his bins and storehouse, and he fed a hungry multitude, kindred, strangers and all, who looked to him for succor. His own family were put upon short rations, though he had thousands of bushels of wheat, with bran, shorts, corn and barley in abundance. Several hundred bushels of wheat were loaned to President Young, to help feed the hungry and the poor of Salt Lake City.

Bishop John B. Maiben gives an interesting link in the historic chain at the time of the famine. "Some individuals who had flour sold it at $25 to $30 a 100 pounds. Not so with Heber, for at no time did he charge more than $6 a 100 pounds, then the standard tithing-office price. He distributed in various amounts, from five to fifty pounds to the poor, amounting to about 30,000 pounds. His acts of generosity, mercy and charity, during this time of sore distress, are worthy of the man. He kept an open house and fed from twenty-five to one hundred poor people at the tables daily, with bread, flour and other necessities that were worth their weight in gold."

It is related that during the famine, a brother, sorely in need of bread, came to President Kimball for counsel as to how to procure it. "Go and marry a wife," was Heber's terse reply, after feeding the brother. The man thought Brother Kimball must be out of his mind, but when he thought of his prophetic character, he resolved to obey counsel. He wondered where such a woman was and, thinking of a widow with several children, he got busy and proposed. As widows generally do, she accepted him. In that widow's house was laid up a six months' store of provisions. She surely grub-staked him. Meeting Brother Kimball soon after, the prosperous man of a family said: "Well, Brother Heber, I followed your advice." "Yes," said the man of God, "and you found bread."

About this time, they had to meet the wants of the immigration, which had commenced pouring in from Europe. The crickets had played havoc with the crops, in spite of the interposition of the gulls. Great wisdom and the broadest charity had to be exercised to relieve suffering and hunger. The people were put upon rations, all sharing the same, like members of one family. As filling, they dug roots and ate them, like the Indians, or cooked and ate the hides of animals.

It was during this time of famine, when the half-starved, half-clad settlers scarcely knew where to look for the next crust of bread, or for rags to hide their nakedness, that Heber C. Kimball, filled with the spirit of prophecy, in a public meeting, declared to the astonished congregation, that, within a short time, states' goods would be sold in the streets of Great Salt Lake City cheaper than in New York, and that the people should be abundantly supplied with food and clothing.

As soon as the spirit force had abated, on resuming his seat, he remarked to the brethren that he feared he had missed it that time. President Young said: "Never mind, let it go." Charles C. Rich, an apostle, said: "I don't believe a word of it." Heber said: "Neither do I, but God hath spoken." The words of a prophet, when spoken by the spirit of God, are the words of God, as he is the dictator.

The advent of the gold hunters, on their way to California, set on fire, as it were, the civilized world, and hundreds of richly laden trains made Salt Lake City their resting place. Thus, the Prophet Heber's words came true, for states' goods were actually sold in the streets here cheaper than they could be bought in New York.

Heber, a few years later, said, "That is the way I prophesy, but I have predicted things I did not foresee and did not believe anybody else did, but I have said it, and it came to pass. The Lord led me right, but I did not know it."

"Thou shalt go to Upper Canada, even to the city of Toronto, the capital," said Heber C. Kimball, to Parley P. Pratt, in April, 1836. "And there," continued Heber prophetically, "thou shalt find a people prepared for the gospel, and they shall receive thee, and thou shalt organize the Church among them, and it shall spread thence into the regions round about, and many shall be brought to a knowledge of the truth, and shall be filled with joy; and from the things growing out of this mission shall the fulness of the gospel spread into England and cause a great work to be done in that land."

This pointed prophecy was strikingly fulfilled. The Fieldings, who were among the people that Parley found in Canada, ready to receive his message, had a brother in England, a minister, to whom they wrote concerning the rise of "Mormonism," and thus prepared the way for Apostles Heber C. Kimball and Orson Hyde, who, with their associates, including Willard Richards and Joseph Fielding, carried the gospel across the Atlantic. The Rev. James Fielding, the minister referred to, received them kindly (though he afterwards turned against them) and it was from his pulpit in Vauxhall chapel, Preston, Lancashire, July 23, 1837, that these elders preached the first "Mormon" sermons ever heard in Britain.

In August, 1853, Heber addressed the Saints in the Salt Lake Tabernacle: "I know you will prosper and live in peace in the mountains of Great Salt Lake and be perfectly independent. You will live in peace and God will be your defence. The Lord can turn the nations, as I can an obedient horse. They are governed and controlled by the Almighty. There are a few other things I wanted to say: Take care of your grain; for it is of more worth to you than gold and silver." This theme he stressed for the next three years, but they heeded him not and they suffered the consequence. He further said later: "I would like to see the people manufacture their own clothing, machinery, knives, forks and everything else, for the day will come when we will be under the necessity of doing it, for trouble and perplexity, war and famine, bloodshed and fire, thundering and lightning will roll upon the nations of the earth, insomuch that we cannot get to them nor they to us."

Brother Brigham said: "This is the place." Brother Heber said: "Here it is on high. It is the best country I ever saw."

At family prayers, just a little while before his death, he remarked that the Angel Moroni had visited him the night before and had informed him that his work on this earth was finished and he would soon be taken.

He died the morning of June 22, 1868.

No wonder we are thrilled and rejoice and glorify the name of God, that his servants, messengers of life and salvation, have a message to deliver unto his children.

God bless you one and all. I sustain and uphold the hands of the priesthood, and I desire, as you do, to be saved and exalted in the presence of God, which, if I know anything, I know it must be the greatest gift of God to his children. God bless you. Amen.

ELDER JOHN H. TAYLOR

President of the Northern States Mission

I desire, my brethren and sisters, to express my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the many blessings and opportunities that have come to me during my life. Two of these opportunities I desire to mention. I was grateful for the appointment that came to me a number of years ago to inaugurate in the Church and to develop in a way, two programs: an organized program of athletics and the Boy Scout program. I was grateful for the kind and wise counsel that was given to me from time to time by the General Superintendency of the Mutuals. I say that I was grateful for this opportunity, not for the position, but because of the opportunity it gave me to labor among the young people of the Church. Among the young people is that vitality, enthusiasm and desire for progress that make them do things. To have an opportunity to help guide that enthusiasm and love of life into channels of righteousness, so that our young people might take their place in the work of the Church a little better than they could otherwise do, was a privilege and blessing.

The other opportunity that came to me was the privilege of laboring as president of one of the Missions of the Church. And again I say, not because of the position, not because of the honor—for it is an honor to preside in a mission, to preside in anything that has to do with God's work—but I was grateful for the privilege of again laboring with the young men and women who have faith sufficient to bring them out into the world to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I have seen them grow and increase in faith, in testimony and in power, and I have realized that God has been with them. I have been grateful when a boy or girl could go home at the end of his or her mission firmly established in the testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In leaving the mission field I do so with a degree of regret, because I love the work and I have enjoyed laboring with the boys and girls who have been sent out to do missionary work under my direction.

In our message to the people of the world we are not questioning the sincerity of the thousands and thousands of honest men and women, we are not questioning their devotion or their love of God or their purity of life; but we are questioning the correctness of their interpretation of the principles of life. We are questioning the correctness of their interpretation of the scriptures which have been given unto us by the servants of the Lord who wrote and spoke by the inspiration and power of God. When men and women can look upon the laws of nature, express their admiration and reverence for God because of the orderly way in which he works in this great creation of ours—orderliness in astronomy, in mathematics, in chemistry—it seems strange that they cannot also see that it is quite as necessary that there be an order in the spiritual phases of life. Is it possible that God shall be orderly in all other things except his way of saving men and women and bringing them back into his presence?

I am convinced that the unbelief and division that we have in the world at the present time are the result of an incorrect interpretation of the word of God, and because of such interpretation men and women and young people especially are beginning to wonder just how far they can go in religion, and whether it is possible to find out God at all. In our interpretation of the scriptures we have faith, but we are not interpreting faith as some interpret it, namely, that by faith we are saved without works. We are not interpreting baptism as something which can be accepted or rejected as we may please to do. But the gospel of Jesus Christ is one of completeness. It has in it all things necessary for our salvation. We do not believe in faith to the exclusion of all other things, or as many of the people of the world believe, "By grace are ye saved."

So I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for the gospel of Jesus Christ that has come to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet

Joseph Smith. It is so broad and so complete that it has an appeal to young people; it has an appeal to older people; it has an appeal to scientific people and to educators. It matters not who the person may be who comes in contact with the gospel, as he studies it he discovers that splendid appeal.

May the Lord bless us and help us to do the work that he desires us to do here upon the earth, may our boys and girls continue to grow up to be splendid men and women, that they shall have a desire in their hearts to go out and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in plainness and simplicity, and above all in humility, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

Presiding Patriarch of the Church

I am very grateful for the privilege of being present at this conference, to partake of the good spirit here manifested, and for the wonderful experience which comes through the personal association at a conference of this character. A number of important subjects came to my mind while sitting here, listening to my brethren, but, it seems, they have now all disappeared. I trust, however, that I shall be enabled to recall something of interest during the few moments that I may stand before you.

DESIRE FOR GREATER STRENGTH

I am very grateful for the blessings that have come to me in my ministry in the Church. I have often desired to have greater strength, realizing that the responsibility which has come to me is of such a character that it needs strength, both mental and physical, to discharge it acceptably to the Lord. Like Elder Kimball's, my body has not been strong enough to carry out the work that my spirit has been willing to do. I have often wished that I might have the strength that was enjoyed by some of the former officers in the Church, those especially who have held the office that I now hold.

From reading the history of the Church, I have learned that the first patriarch of the Church weighed three hundred pounds, more than any of the present general authorities. I have also observed that only a small percentage of the men who have been very faithful in the Church for a number of years as bishops or as presidents of stakes, and have been called to the office of patriarch, are able to conduct the affairs required of them for any great length of time.

THE PASSING OF A PATRIARCH

The desire expressed by Elder Kimball was realized by one of these good men only the night before last. I do not know the exact age of the brother, because I did not refer to the records, but Patriarch Joseph S. Larkin, a very faithful man in the Church, had prepared himself only last Thursday to attend this general conference, and retired that night with a smile on his face and a sweet good-night to his family. When the family looked upon him in the morning his spirit had gone. He passed on without disturbing anyone. This might be a peaceful way to go; but death seems sad in any way that it comes.

HONOR AND RECOGNITION DUE STAKE PATRIARCHS

I want to express my appreciation, my sympathy and my testimony relative to these good men who have been called to this important work in the Church. From experience, I have learned that there are many individuals in the Church who do not know their local officers sufficiently to honor them as we would like to have them honored. Many of our missionaries, desiring to get their blessings before going away from home, fail to call for them at the hands of their own fathers, and their own kin, and their own neighbors—men who have been tried and found faithful—men of faith, devotion and integrity for the work. I should like to urge these young people to take advantage of their opportunities, realizing that these good men hold the Priesthood of God and that they are authorized, with the keys of power, to function just the same as the Presiding Patriarch; the only difference being the extent of jurisdiction.

I desire to instill in the minds of the Latter-day Saints, both old and young, a respect and honor for the men who hold the office of patriarch in the stakes of Zion. I testify that these men hold the keys of power to bless the people, and that their calling is just as important in their field of labor as mine is in the field in which I have been called to labor.

BLESSINGS OF ETERNAL CHARACTER

As far as the strength and power of the Priesthood is concerned, a priest, a young man who may be honored with the Priesthood of Aaron, can lead a convert into the waters of baptism and baptize him in the name of the Lord, and that baptism is of an eternal character; nothing will take the place of it. Yet, many of us, both old and young, forget that a man who is advanced in years and experience and bears the Melchizedek Priesthood has the power to confer upon us a blessing and a promise; to advise and counsel, all of which also is of an eternal character. All our blessings are of an eternal character when they are administered by proper authority, and I testify that these good men do bear that authority and that they are willing, as far as their strength will permit, to function in their calling, and they are very much encouraged when members of the Church apply for their blessings in their home stakes.

I pray that the spirit and the blessings of these good men may increase; that many more may be caused to seek out these men and honor them, as they should be honored, throughout the stakes and wards of the Church. These good men hold offices of a stake capacity, and are limited to the stake in which they reside. I should like to encourage the members of the Church to honor them in their position.

TESTIMONY OF POWER IN THE CHURCH

I bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I have discovered, through experience, that the Priesthood is in the Church and that it is held by those to whom it has been given. I realize that there are certain gifts and powers that come to us about which we do not know very much, because we do not cultivate them, we do not use them as perhaps we might do; but I have discovered that I possess the Priesthood of God. I have seen its fruits. I know that, by my faithful labors, the Lord has given me some very comforting experiences. The experiences of the elders of the Church, if published, would be a large volume. Through my experiences, I have been convinced that I do possess that power which has been given to me and has been given to other men, and I desire that I might have strength to honor and use it further for the blessing of the people.

My heart is filled with a love of the work, and I pray that the Lord will continue to bless me, in body as well as in spirit, that I may continue faithful so long as the Lord requires my labors.

BLESSING PRONOUNCED UPON THE PEOPLE

I pray that the spirit of this conference will go with us to our homes, and help us to keep the commandments of the Lord; help us to be faithful in the discharge of our duties; help us also to avoid falling into error—the breaking of the Word of Wisdom, the breaking of the law of tithing, and the breaking of other commandments that will shorten our blessings or cause them to be withheld from us. I desire to leave with you the blessings of the Lord; and to inspire greater diligence and greater faithfulness on the part of the members of the Church, not only to secure their blessings, but to live for them, observing that all our blessings are predicated upon obedience to law, and that the laws are plain and for our benefit. I bless the people; I bless the officers of the Church who have gathered here to receive instructions of the leaders; and I pronounce upon them all, leaders and followers alike, the blessings of God, according to their needs, and pray our Heavenly Father to bless you one and all in health and in strength and in wisdom and in gifts, according to your needs, both temporal and spiritual, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "Zion stands with hills surrounded."

The closing prayer was pronounced by Elder Clyde Lindsay of the San Francisco Stake Presidency.

The conference adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Sunday, April 8, 1928.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Sunday, April 8, 1928. The tabernacle was crowded, every seat in the galleries and main hall being occupied, and hundreds were standing in the doorways and aisles.

The meeting commenced promptly at ten o'clock a. m.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Praise to the man."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder George W. McCune, president of the Hollywood stake of Zion.

The choir sang "The morning breaks," led by Brother George Careless, who composed the music for this hymn and who is now in his eighty-ninth year.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. NIBLEY

I think, my brethren and sisters, that we are to be congratulated on this blessed Easter Sabbath morn in having the great privilege and honor as servants of the Lord in his Church, to meet together under such favorable circumstances, knowing that the work of the Lord is spreading, increasing and becoming a great power for righteousness and for the well-being of mankind in the world.

I am findful that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; that my parents heard this word gladly from the elders who were delivering the message of Mormonism; that they received and accepted it with full purpose of heart, and that they remained faithful and devoted to the end. I am proud of this organization, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the great American Church, the Church that had its birth in the land of freedom, where men's minds were permitted to expand, to debate, to question, to tell their thoughts without let or hindrance, and not where the mind of man, as in some of the older countries, had for ages been so "cribbed, cabined and confined" that it was not safe to advance thought or to express opinion freely and frankly.

I am glad that the birthday of the Church, the 6th day of April, is also the birthday of the nation, for on the 6th day of April, 1789, the two houses of Congress met and, in the way that the Constitution then provided, declared George Washington elected as president and John Adams as vice president of the United States. So we are proud that the Church is American-born and does not have to receive any instructions or orders from any foreign power or potentate whatsoever.

"Freedom and reason make us men.

Take these away, what are we then?

Mere animals, and just as well

The beasts may think of heaven or hell."

We live in a land of freedom, and a land of liberty, a glorious land. And in these last days the Lord has established his Church upon the earth for the last time.

MANY SIGNS OF THE TIMES

How do we know they are the last days? There are many signs of the times by which we may know of this fact. I haven't time to go into all that fully, but just hastily call your attention to the prophecy of Daniel, twelfth chapter, 4th verse. Speaking of the time of the end he said: "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." Now imagine what there was in the way of running to and fro in his day, and all the succeeding centuries down to the last one hundred years when the revelation from Almighty God came to the Prophet Joseph Smith. There were not many running to and fro in the earth in those days. Now, in contrast, how many run to and fro on the earth, on the sea, under the sea, and in a couple of months from now probably half of the people of the United States of America will be on wheels running to and fro all over the country. What a change, what a marvelous change from the slow old movement of even a hundred years ago or less!

Then again, knowledge, he said, would be increased. How wonderfully has that been fulfilled. It was to be increased in the latter times, as distinctive from the former times. We have books by the millions, newspapers, periodicals, magazines, knowledge on every hand. Then look at the last one hundred years, or one hundred eight years, since the first revelation, the great revelation and manifestation came to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Even the railroad was not in existence in 1820. From that time on, how knowledge has been increased on every hand! Inventions by the tens of thousands, going on and on, until we have the marvelous and wonderful radio—my voice going out now on the air. It goes around the world seven times in a second! So that people in any part of the United States who are within hearing distance of this ether wave, as we call it, will hear my voice as instantly as you hear it in this building. A marvelous and wonderful invention! It is not because the mind of man is more acute in this age than in any former ages, for the scientists all agree that the mind of man was quite as acute in the days of Abraham and in the days while the Savior was upon the earth as it is now. But those are not the days and times mentioned in the scriptures, which were called the last days and the fulness of times.

THROUGH THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD

The Lord, through Joel, the prophet, said: "I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh." The Lord has poured out his spirit upon the people everywhere. And his spirit is intelligence. "The glory of God is intelligence." Any man, even an unbeliever, whose mind is operated upon to invent this or the other for the benefit of mankind, is acted upon by that intelligent influence which we name the Spirit of the Lord, whether it is an Edison or any other man. All intelligence comes from God. In other words, light and truth, as our scriptures say. So that these inventions which have been multiplied in a most marvelous manner, have been brought about through the operation of the spirit of the Lord.

In the 14th chapter of the Revelation of St. John, we read of the coming of this latter-day work by the hands of an angelic messenger. John the Apostle, the beloved, banished on the Isle of Patmos for the testimony of Jesus, was then the only one remaining upon the earth, the other disciples by this time having gone to the great beyond. The angel of the Lord told him: "Come up and I will show you things that must come to pass hereafter." What did the angel show him? Marvelous things. Among others was this, which was to come to pass after that time:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

"Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."

This was to be in the hour of God's judgment—drawing near to the end, you see—in the days spoken of by Joel and Daniel, when knowledge should be increased and many should run to and fro. In other words, in the last days—the set time in which all things are to be consummated.

THIS CHURCH STANDS ALONE

In 1820 there was no divinely organized Church of Jesus Christ, with power and authority of the priesthood, on this earth. The organization of the Church did not take effect until some ten years later—April 6th, 1830. From the time of John the Revelator up to 1820, we affirm, we make the positive declaration, we are convinced in our hearts and souls, for we have had it revealed unto us by the power of the Holy Ghost, that there was no organized Church of Jesus Christ upon the earth, with the authority of the priesthood to take a man down into the water and baptize him, that his sins might be remitted, or to lay hands upon his head and confirm him a member, and confer upon him the gift of the Holy Ghost. So that this Church stands alone with respect to that.

We have no contention against any church or any people. There are many, many thousands of good people in the world, millions of them, indeed, who are faithful believers in their own way. But the Church of Christ as an organization—something through which the Lord operates, by his power and spirit—did not exist until this Church was organized. So that we may say that any other church claiming that authority, claiming the authority to bind on earth and it is bound in heaven, is not recognized by the Lord, for he himself has declared that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is "the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth."

NOT FOUNDED ON MEN

I know it is claimed that there has been direct succession from Peter, the great apostle. Peter, the president of the Twelve, the head, the leader, than whom in many respects there was no greater apostle. We honor him. The latchet of his shoes, I would say, I am unworthy to unloose. But he was human. This Church is not built upon Peter. It is not the Church of Joseph Smith, nor the Church of Brigham Young, nor the Church of President Grant. It is not founded on men. It was founded by direct revelation from heaven. Let me read what the Lord said with respect to this:

"When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked the disciples, saying: Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?"

"And they said: Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

"He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?"

"And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

"And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

"And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

What rock? The rock of revelation; for flesh and blood had not told Peter, but it had been revealed to him that Jesus was the Christ.

"I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." Of course he did. He was the proper man to give them to, the President of the Twelve.

"And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

"Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

"From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day."

THE HUMAN PETER

Now right here, Peter, the human being, on whom was conferred this great authority, just as today by divine appointment, is conferred that same power, on President Heber J. Grant, the president of this Church, a human being like you and me, and like Peter—right at this point I read: "Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him" (Peter the human being, undertaking to rebuke the Savior!) "saying, Be it far from thee, Lord, this shall not be unto thee." We will not allow these men to take you and kill you—no sir. What was the answer of the Savior?

"But he turned, and said unto Peter: Get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offense unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."—Matt. 16:13-23.

That was the human Peter, as all men are human. Joseph Smith, great as he was, the forerunner, the man chosen probably before the foundations of this earth were laid to usher in the great and last dispensation of the fulness of times, was human. He was Joseph Smith; he was not God. This Church is not founded on him any more than on Peter, to whom the Savior had to say: "Get thee behind me, Satan." You don't know what you are talking about, Peter.

So I repeat that the rock upon which this Church is founded is the rock of revelation. What is revelation? If you will turn to your Doctrine and Covenants, in the eighth section, you will find this definition of revelation. The Lord speaks to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery:

THE SPIRIT OF REVELATION

"Yea, behold, I will tell you in your mind and in your heart, by the Holy Ghost, which shall come upon you and which shall dwell in your heart.

"Now, behold, this is the spirit of revelation; behold, this is the spirit by which Moses brought the children of Israel through the Red Sea on dry ground."

Do we have revelations today? Is President Grant guided by revelation? Certainly, just in that kind of way, ready to receive the promptings of the Spirit of the Lord as they shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost. Have we the same power and the same opportunity to receive the spirit of revelation? Certainly we have. Why, every member of this Church, every last one who is living as he should, keeping the commandments of God, receives that testimony, and is thereby founded upon that rock which flesh and blood hath not delivered unto him, but which our Father in heaven has revealed. And upon this rock he builds his Church.

There isn't time to go into further discussion of this matter. I will have to hurry, but I want to read what St. Paul said in his first epistle to the Corinthians (2nd chapter, 1st to 5th verses) in respect to the resurrection of Christ, and I think it fits me and fits every member of the Priesthood, in going out to proclaim the gospel, to stick just to the one great text.

WHAT PAUL SAID

"When I came to you, I came not with excellency of speech, or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God."

We are not depending so much on excellency of speech, though we are glad to hear it.

"For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

"And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

"And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power.

"That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

That is Mormonism. Stick to the one message—Jesus Christ and him crucified; Joseph Smith receiving the everlasting gospel from angelic beings, as John on the Isle of Patmos declared, coming at the time of the end when all these things are being fulfilled.

COVENANTS WITH HOUSE OF ISRAEL

Just one other citation that I want to give you and then I am through. In the Book of Mormon we have a prophecy of the time of the end. You will find it in the 14th chapter of First Nephi. I haven't the time to read the whole chapter:

"And it came to pass that when the angel had spoken these words, he said unto me: Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel?"—the covenants that had been made unto Abraham not yet fulfilled, but in the way of fulfillment. The time is here, the covenants are being fulfilled. General Allenby, in the World War, marched into Palestine and freed that country from its oppressors, and since then that work has been going on. That is what the angel a thousand years ago asked Nephi in that question:

"Rememberest thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel? I said unto him, Yea.

"And it came to pass that he said unto me: Look, and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose foundation is the devil."

I now skip some verses to hurry on.

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth."

THE FIRST WORLD WAR

Let me call your attention to this fact, that until the World War, all the nations and kindreds of the earth had never been involved in one great war before.

When Columbus discovered America, he found the new world. So prior to that time all the nations and all the kindreds of the earth could not be involved in war together. Since 1492 we have the most accurate history of all the wars, and all the nations and kindreds of the earth were for the first time involved in this great struggle.

"And as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations the angel spake unto me, saying: Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things—

"And when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then, at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people who are of the house of Israel."

Now the question will come: Define that Church. What Church is it? The Lord defines it so you can tell. Find any church that is great, that is abominable, whose foundation is the devil, and upon which the wrath of God is poured out in the last days, and then you have it. I can't define it any other way.

The Lord help us to know, by the power of revelation, that this is his Church, that it is not founded upon Peter or Paul or Joseph or Heber, or any other human being, but only upon the power and authority of the living God, and upon the solid rock of revelation from Almighty God. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Certainly Zion is growing. I hope some time we will be able to have an auditorium that will hold all who would like to attend our meetings.

We have learned that the majority of the people prefer to hear the sermons that are preached in this building on Sundays, rather than attend overflow meetings. For that reason we have discontinued the meetings in the Assembly Hall, and are giving the people who can not get into the tabernacle the privilege of sitting in the Assembly Hall and other places and listening to the singing by the Tabernacle Choir and the remarks that are made from this stand, as they are broadcast over the radio.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

This question was put by Paul to King Agrippa when the Apostle stood a prisoner in bonds because of his testimony of Christ, about thirty years after our Lord's resurrection. At that time the Saints were persecuted on account of their persistent testimony of the Christ, crucified and risen. The powerful Sadducees of that day condemned the doctrine of a resurrection; the Pharisees professed vague concepts of resurrection of or from the dead, in the sense of there being some awakening of the Spirit that had been asleep; but only those who had accepted the testimony of the Christ believed in the absolute and literal resurrection.

TRUTH NOT CONDITIONED BY HUMAN COMPREHENSION

This day is observed throughout Christendom in commemoration of the greatest event of history—the coming forth of the crucified body of the Christ as the tabernacle of his immortal spirit, he a resurrected soul, the first man to thus rise from death to immortality upon this earth, "the first fruits of them that slept," "the first-born of the dead." In this day of higher criticism, of skepticism and doubt, there are many of the learned and wise—learned and wise in their own estimation and that of their fellows—who proclaim the impossibility of any process of resurrection. Are not such men seeking to limit the power of God and to make him a falsifier?

Can there be nothing but what we are able to understand and explain as to means, mode, and accomplishment? This would be a poverty-stricken world if it knew nothing but what man can explain and expound. Shall it be that because we cannot do a thing, we shall say it cannot be done, even by a higher power? The resurrection of Christ had been foretold; the predictions concerning his coming forth were literally and actually realized. Even those who were nearest unto him were unable to comprehend his own prophecies concerning his resurrection, and at first doubted the fulfilment. After he had come forth from the tomb there were some of the disciples, aye, even of the Apostles, who treated the report as an idle tale. They could not comprehend that which had never been known to have taken place before. They lacked analogy, they had nothing with which to compare the unprecedented event, and resurrection to them meant much as it meant to the Pharisees.

AT THE TOMB—AS PREDICTED

On that Sunday morn, the third day after the body of the Christ had been laid away in the rock-hewn tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, Mary, the devoted woman of Magdala, and other women, had gone to the sepulcher to give tender ministry by external embalmment of the Lord's body. On the way they questioned how they would gain entrance to the tomb; as to who would roll away the great stone that sealed the entrance to the sepulcher. When they arrived they were astonished and affrighted, for notwithstanding the imperial seal of Caesar that had been placed on the portal, in spite of the guard of soldiery, the tomb was open. There sat upon the stone an angelic being, glorious in appearance. He spoke to comfort them, but they were terrified; yet the angel said: "Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead.

They carried back the gladsome glorious word that the tomb no longer held the body of their Master; but the disciples could not understand, notwithstanding the fact that the Lord had predicted to them, and that but a few days before—the last of many declarations of the sort—that he would be slain, and that on the third day he would rise again. "Let these sayings sink down into your ears," he had said unto them of slow understanding and of seeming unbelief, as he told again of his impending death, with which on other occasions he coupled assurances of his rising from the dead; yet they questioned among themselves as to what he could mean by rising from the dead.

ON THE WAY TO EMMAUS

The events followed one another in rapid succession on that most memorable Sunday in all history. You know the record of the two disciples, not of the Apostles, Cleopas and a companion, who were wending their way along the country road, leading to Emmaus; how another Traveler joined them; how their eyes were holden so that they recognized him not; how he questioned them, not to gain information for himself but to give them opportunity, as every true teacher gives his pupils a chance, to express themselves. He asked them what was the subject of their solemn conversation, and they voiced their surprise that he, even if he were a stranger in Jerusalem, had not heard of the great events of the preceding few days. They told their story; then he expounded unto them the scriptures, even from the first, showing that it was necessary that Christ should suffer death, and that he was surely to come forth from the tomb, as the prophets had foretold—and yet the wayfarers recognized him not. Not until they were seated at table in the little cottage in Emmaus, not until the honored Guest whom they had invited to tarry with them broke the bread and blessed it, did they know him. We are not told whether perchance they caught sight of the nail-prints in his hands, or whether they were moved by remembrance of other similar blessings, voiced by him and heard by them before, or by what circumstance it was, but they knew him, and he vanished from their sight.

MANIFESTATIONS TO THE DISCIPLES

The two men hastened back to Jerusalem, where ten of the Apostles and other disciples had assembled, locked in, by way of precaution against possible intrusion by some of the many enemies who were seeking their lives. They told their story to the newly arrived disciples. He is risen! He has appeared unto Simon, they declared; and while the little company talked and rejoiced together the Lord stood there amongst them, and they were sorely frightened. They had talked of his having been resurrected, of his having come back to life, and yet they were afraid. They thought they saw a ghost! He calmed their fears. "Peace be unto you. * * * Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." And yet they could scarcely believe for the joy of it! The demonstrated fact seemed to them too good to be true. To make plain that he was a corporeal being in the sense of having a tangible body, no mere outward shape or semblance only, he asked if they had anything to eat, and they brought honey and other food to him and he did eat before them, demonstrating that his body was complete, with internal organs as well as external parts.

Can a resurrected being eat food of earth? A resurrected being can function upon any lower plane. A resurrected personage can do anything that a mortal personage can do, and much besides.

One of the eleven, Thomas, was absent; and when they told him what had taken place he could not believe. He was yet skeptical. Don't blame him. We know not what tradition was doing in his mind. We may not know the limitations of his powers of understanding, but he was very much like some people of this day. "I can't believe it," he said in effect, "not until I can see, not until I can feel his hands and his feet—I shall have to examine those wounds and thrust my finger into his side before I can believe." After eight days, that is to say, a week later, the next Sunday, which day of the week thenceforth became the Sabbath, the Lord's day, Christ appeared unto them again and

Thomas was there. It was an affecting occasion: Thomas, come, see and feel! Thomas, convinced, bowed in worship, exclaiming only: "My Lord and my God." "Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed."

IN THE REALM OF THE DEAD

Through the ministration of the spirit of wisdom and knowledge, of light and truth, Christ had predicted what he would do while his body lay in the tomb; read for yourselves those scriptures. But a short time before the crucifixion he had said unto the people: "Verily, verily, I say unto you: the hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. * * Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." A reiteration of the sublime principles comprised in that scripture has been made in this modern day, and the two resurrections are spoken of by the voice of the Lord to Joseph Smith as the resurrection of the just and the resurrection of the unjust. Furthermore it hath been declared that all who have breathed the air of earth, all who have tabernacled in bodies composed of the elements of this planet, shall be resurrected. The separation of spirit from body is but temporary.

LUCIFER'S DESIGN FOILED

You know the great plan that was laid in the councils of heaven before the earth was framed, that men should be sent upon the earth, that is, the spirits of men, to take upon themselves bodies. Lucifer, a son of the morning, and his followers, comprising a third of the spirit-hosts, had opposed the plan that the Father had proposed, and he and his followers, Lucifer and his angels, were cast out upon the earth, and straightway they sought to nullify the Father's decree and to destroy those bodies into which the preexistent spirits would enter to work out their mortal probation. Lucifer, known upon earth as Satan, gained a temporary triumph; he succeeded in bringing death into the world, and doubtless there was rejoicing amongst his demon subjects. What would become of the great plan of giving those spirits bodies upon the earth when death had come in and had forced a separation of spirit and body, and had brought the body to decay, resolving it into its elements? What now would be accomplished by the decision of the council in carrying out the plan of the Father?

CHRIST'S ATTRIBUTES—HUMAN AND DIVINE

Separation of spirit and body was foreseen and provided for, for in due time came the Only Begotten Son of the Father, the only being who has ever walked the earth, from Adam down, not the child of two mortal parents, father and mother. Christ, the Son of a mortal woman but not begotten by a mortal father, combined within himself the powers of Godship and the attributes of mortality. How else can we explain his own declaration that he had life in himself? Consider his words as part of that sublime sermon on the shepherd and the sheep, in which he made plain that he was the good shepherd and the only true shepherd of the Lord's flock. He said unto the people: "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again;" and he added this comment regarding his power, capacity, and ability: "This commandment have I received of my Father"—by which we may understand that from his Father he had derived, by heredity, the power to rise from mortality to immortality.

He could have said: "From my mother I have inherited the power to die, for she was a mortal woman; and from my Father, who was no mortal man, I have received this power to hold death in abeyance. I have power to lay down my life and I have power to take it up again. No man can kill me until I am ready, not until my hour shall come and I shall give up my life. I am here for that foreordained purpose, as a consummation of this part of my work." He followed his work to the end. We read that when he was able to utter those words of triumph—and they must have been words of exultation to him: "It is finished," that he "gave up the ghost."

Oh yes, they killed him, that is, they killed him from their point of view, but not until he had finished his work did he relinquish his life. While he lived among men, he was preeminently the Man among men. So during his period of disembodiment he was preeminently the Spirit among spirits in the realm of the disembodied. To them he went and opened the work of preaching amongst the spirits who had lived in bodies upon the earth, men and women who had died.

ACTUALITY OF THE RESURRECTION

The resurrection of Jesus Christ was absolutely literal. He took up that body from the tomb as it had been laid down, for it had been predicted that he should not see corruption. The body bore all the marks of the crucifiers. So shall the resurrection of everyone be literal in this sense—that although these bodies go to decay, by the power of God shall all their essential parts be brought together again. When we stand before the bar of God we shall stand with spirit and body reunited, inseparably connected, and it is through the union of spirit and body, inseparably united, that a fulness of joy is made possible.

Such is the Lord's plan to bring about the immortality and the eternal life of man. Immediately following, or soon after the resurrection of Christ, many of the righteous dead came forth from their graves and were seen by mortals; other resurrections have followed, according to the appointed order in the resurrection of the just. Christ came thus and robbed the grave of its victory, assuring the eventual resurrection of all the sons and daughters of God who have tabernacled here upon the earth.

Let us rejoice on this Easter day, commemorative of the coming forth of the Christ from the tomb. It falls this year very close to the actual anniversary.

Easter, as you know, is a movable feast, fixed by decree of the Catholic Church. But this year it falls very close to the actual day on which the Christ came forth from the tomb. We have great reason to rejoice in the glorious blessing of the resurrection that is assured unto us. We should know further that during the period of our disembodiment we are not to be inactive. We have to follow up the work of the Lord among the disembodied, even as we are commissioned to do his work here upon the earth. Death is no overwhelming change by which the spirit loses its power of thought, or other of its God-given attributes. The spirit retains such and is active in the world of spirits, and will so exist and function until the time for the reunion with the body, and when the work reserved for that stage of human progress will be taken up.

MAN IS OF ETERNAL NATURE

Great is the plan of God with respect to his children, extending through the eternity that lies beyond. Right thankful should we be for the knowledge that has been given to us through revelation. Man could never have attained to a knowledge of these glorious truths by his own reasoning, by deduction or original conception. There are truths that man cannot find out; they have to be given unto him, cardinal, basal truths, and this is one of them. Forget not that we are eternal! We had an existence before we were born. In that existence you were you and I was I before our spirits entered into these bodies. You will be you and I shall be I after the change called death befalls us. We shall maintain our identity, or it shall be preserved unto us, through and beyond the resurrection; for we are eternal! How could it be otherwise, when we are the children of the Eternal One? Let us rejoice in this knowledge, which surpasses the wisdom of men, and shape our lives accordingly. To this end I humbly pray, in the name of the Resurrected Lord. Amen.

The choir sang two verses of the hymn, "Jesus once of humble birth."

A duet, "An angel from on high," was sung by Laurinda P. Brewerton and Donna Cox Gunderson, the choir and congregation joining in the chorus.

AN ANGEL FROM ON HIGH

An angel from on high,
 The long, long silence broke;
 Descending from the sky,
 These gracious words he spoke:
 Lo! in Cumorah's lonely hill,
 A sacred record lies concealed.

Sealed by Moroni's hand,
 It has for ages lain,
 To wait the Lord's command,
 From dust to speak again.
 It shall again to light come forth,
 To usher in Christ's reign on earth.

It speaks of Joseph's seed,
 And makes the remnant known
 Of nations long since dead,
 Who once had dwelt alone.
 The fulness of the Gospel, too,
 Its pages will reveal to view.

The time is now fulfilled,
 The long expected day;
 Let earth obedience yield,
 And darkness flee away;
 Remove the seals, be wide unfurled
 Its light and glory to the world.

Lo, Israel filled with joy,
 Shall now be gathered home,
 Their wealth and power employ
 To build Jerusalem;
 While Zion shall arise and shine;
 And fill the earth with truth divine.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

If Parley P. Pratt had written nothing else but this hymn to which we have just listened, it would have immortalized him. He has, however, written more of the inspired hymns that are in our hymn book than any other of our writers.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the California Mission

I feel very highly honored, my brethren and sisters, in being accorded this privilege. It is marvelous to me that I should be permitted to stand before you. I feel in my soul that it is good to be here on this occasion, and I most fervently thank the Lord that the teachings that have been imparted to us in this session of our conference find lodgment in my soul, and fill me with that joy that passeth understanding.

I will read a word or two from the revelations of the Lord that I think very important in connection with the great work in which we are engaged. I suppose it is but reasonable that, as a missionary, my own mind should reflect upon matters pertaining to the preaching of the gospel abroad among the nations. There has been much given in the revelations of the Lord concerning the importance of carrying the gospel to the nations of the world. I do not know whether it is common today for men to seek to know the mind and will of the Lord regarding those things which would be most important for them to do that the Lord's work might be forwarded. There are many revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, indicating that in the early days of the Church men frequently sought the prophet of the Lord to know what would be most important for them to do; and the Lord answered. I will read one of those revelations:

"Hearken, my servant John, and listen to the words of Jesus Christ, your Lord and your Redeemer.

"For behold, I speak unto you with sharpness and with power, for mine arm is over all the earth.

"And I will tell you that which no man knoweth save me and thee alone—

"For many times you have desired of me to know that which would be of the most worth unto you.

"Behold, blessed are you for this thing, and for speaking my words which I have given you according to my commandments.

"And now, behold, I say unto you, that the thing which will be of the most worth unto you will be to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father."

The Lord himself has declared the following in relation to the value of the souls of men:

"Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God;

"For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

"And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance.

"And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

"Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!"

The importance of carrying the message of the gospel has not only been declared in the revelations that have been given in the dispensation in which we live, but the same importance was comprehended by the servants of God in the meridian of time. The Apostle Paul declared:

"For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe unto me if I preach not the gospel!"

A dispensation of the gospel had been committed unto Paul, and he knew that woe would be unto him if he preached not the gospel.

Much more might be brought forth from the word of God in relation to this very important matter. I am wondering whether the men of the Priesthood who are at home in the midst of the people in the Zion of the Lord, feel the importance of the commandment of God in relation to the carrying of the gospel to the inhabitants of the earth. I think I would but voice the sentiments of mission presidents if I made the declaration that in every mission of these United States and the countries adjoining our nation, people are perishing for the word of the Lord. There are opportunities abounding on every hand for the proclamation of the gospel, and we are crying out until I suppose we become almost an annoyance to the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: "Give us more missionaries!" That is the cry from California. There is a feeling with some people, that there is not much necessity for the word of the Lord, or for religious doctrine in the state of California, as Californians are supposed to be concerned about pleasure alone. Well, I thank God that there are many earnest, God-fearing men and women in the state of California. We are finding a few of them, and we would find more if we had more men and women to bear witness concerning the truth. We need many more. I would like to plead with the men of the Priesthood, presiding men, that they feel in their hearts the necessity of sending the servants of the Lord abroad in the nations with the truths of the gospel. I would like to make a plea among all men and among women who are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that they cultivate a desire to engage in the proclamation of the gospel. I understand that I am under the same obligation as the Apostle Paul, and that unto me, in connection with my brethren, a dispensation of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has been committed, and woe will be unto me if I preach not the gospel. I want to say, in the name of the Lord, that woe will be unto all men who bear the authority of priesthood if they do not desire to labor and do not labor to the extent of their power, that the glorious gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, be sounded among the inhabitants of the earth. If you desire to bless your sons and your daughters, and to establish them in the work of the living God, give them an opportunity, if they are of proper character, and if they have the proper desire in their hearts, to go abroad as missionaries. If there be anything else in this world that establishes the feet of young men and women in the right path, and reveals to them the truth of the gospel in the same wonderful manner that missionary service does, I do not know what it is.

I listened with very great joy to the testimony of our Commissioner of Education that there had come to him in periods of trial and anxiety the whisperings of the Lord, the revelations of the Lord, establishing in his soul a knowledge concerning the existence of God our Father in heaven. Thanks be to God for such whisperings. I want to say to you that God is no respecter of persons. Men who are educated, who humbly seek the Lord, receive the revelations of the Lord and the testimony of his word; and men who are not educated receive by the same marvelous power the same convincing evidence. It has been my pleasure just within a few weeks to listen to the testimony of the gospel from the lips of young girls and young boys, trembling with fear, their eyes moistened with tears, yet with joy in their souls, bearing witness that God lives, and that that knowledge has come to them by the power of the Holy Ghost. I thank God for that. I am also glad that the Lord, in his mercy, has revealed to me that this is his work, the marvelous work promised by the voice of inspiration through ancient prophets for the latter times. I have that knowledge. I thank God that in my soul, in my heart and in my mind I have been given to know the truth of the record that we have been singing about, the Book of Mormon, that it is true, that it contains the fulness of the everlasting gospel. I thank God for my membership in the Church of Christ, for the fellowship that I have with my brethren; and I bear solemn witness to the truth of the gospel, the truth of the things that have been taught us this day, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Canadian Mission

I rejoice with you, my brethren and sisters, in the testimonies which we have received today. It was inquired of old: "If a man die, shall he live again?" That question has been answered well this morning. I rejoice, and I think you do, in the information given us by our prophet, seer and revelator at the opening of this conference, that Cumorah's hill is now in the possession of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In standing upon that sacred ground on the one hundredth anniversary, I wished then, and I expressed the thought at our last semi-annual conference, that this property might belong to the Church; because in connection with the Hill Cumorah and the revelations to the Prophet Joseph Smith, there has been a flood of information answering that question of old: "If a man die, shall he live again?" What joy must have come into the heart of Job when he was able to exclaim: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

A questionnaire was sent out by a bereaved man a score of years ago, to philosophers and scientists, requesting them to state in brief the outstanding reasons which they had for the hope of life after death, and for the resurrection of the body. These arguments and reasons given were merely corroborative of the clear revelations from our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith in these last days. Our elders of course have strong testimonies, not only of the existence of the spirit after the death of the body, and of the resurrection, but also that Jesus is the Christ—that Jesus is divine. They have all the evidence that the non-Christian Jew had or has that there shall be a Christ. They have all the evidence that the Christian believer has that there has been a Savior and Redeemer. Many of those matters have been very beautifully presented to us today. In addition to all that, there is the scripture that came from Cumorah's hill, the Book of Mormon, one of the very purposes of which was to testify to Jew and Gentile that Jesus was the Christ. I realize that there isn't time to refer to some passages of the Book of Mormon in support of this doctrine, or at least to read them. The story and testimony of the Christ as given upon this continent when he appeared to his people as recorded in the Eleventh Chapter, Third Book of Nephi, is a wonderful testimony. I have had the feeling as I read that chapter time and time again, that no man without inspiration ever wrote that story. We have been studying the Book of Mormon in our mission home in Canada during the past year, and after nearly every lesson I could say, and I have said many times: Isn't that beautiful! Isn't that wonderful! No man without inspiration could produce those things. And that is my testimony to you here today, that in addition to the testimony of the Book of Mormon we have the testimony in the revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the 76th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

"For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

"That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

I thank God for that information, for that revelation, and for the many others along that line contained in the book of modern revelation, the Doctrine and Covenants. I thank the Lord for the testimony that is in the hearts of the missionaries. I remarked last night to our Canadian missionaries: I wonder if the people of the Church realize the very beautiful and splendid growth these missionaries have made during their sojourn in the mission field. I wonder if the bishops of wards and presidents of stakes will so order things that that growth which they have made will continue, that they will continue to grow spiritually and intellectually in a knowledge of the truth and continue in the conviction that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that this is his work, established, never to be thrown down nor to be given to another people. And that is my testimony to you today. I bear it humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "Then shall your light."

Benediction was pronounced by Elder Fred A. Caine, president of the Idaho Falls stake of Zion.

The meeting adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The closing meeting of the conference opened in the tabernacle, Sunday, April 8, 1928, at 2 o'clock.

President Heber J. Grant announced that the choir and congregation would sing the hymn, "The spirit of God like a fire is burning."

After the spirited singing of this song by the great audience, the opening prayer was offered by Elder Oliver H. Budge, president of the Logan stake of Zion.

The choir sang the anthem, "The earth is the Lord's". Pearl K. Davis, soloist.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

Of religious gatherings this is one of the most thrilling sights in all the world, and the most inspirational. To address this vast audience is indeed a weighty responsibility. I pray therefore for your sympathetic, prayerful help and for the inspiration of the Lord.

Our children are our most precious possessions; and the proper training of youth is the most important duty and obligation of society. Impressive and earnest have been the admonitions and instructions in this conference to the people properly to educate their children.

TRUE EDUCATION

True education does not consist merely in the acquiring of a few facts of science, history, literature or art, but in the development of character. True education awakens a desire to conserve health by keeping the body clean and undefiled. True education trains in self-denial and self-mastery. True education regulates the temper, subdues passion and makes obedience to social laws and moral order a guiding principle of life. It develops reason and inculcates faith in the living God as the eternal loving Father of all.

I desire to call attention this afternoon to three groups in society on whom the responsibility rests to give this true training to the youth of the land, and I should like to consider this responsibility in the light of revealed religion.

We heard this morning from President Nibley a most timely and authoritative declaration regarding the restoration of the Gospel and the Priesthood of God on earth. In the year 1820 the Prophet Joseph Smith received that authority, and ninety-eight years ago last Friday the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was officially organized. Thus there was at least one man who had direct authority to represent God in giving to mankind principles of salvation and peace. We heard this morning that before that day there was no such authority either by apostolic succession or by reformation. Granting now, that Joseph Smith received that authority, that he established the Church for the salvation of the human family, I ask you, can you find a safer guide in the education of your child than through the revealed word of God to his prophet?

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

To parents is assigned the first responsibility for the training of children. The Lord through the prophet says:

"And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the Living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents."

Direct responsibility could not be assigned more emphatically and clearly than it is assigned in that paragraph. Parents, there is the word of the Lord to us regarding the proper training of children. Education commences at the mother's knee, and every word spoken in the hearing of little children tends towards the formation of character. Let parents always bear this in mind. Victor Hugo says, "There are no bad herbs and there are no bad men—there are only bad cultivators." If we could have parents who are good cultivators in our homes, which are the gardens of the Lord, our civil officers would have little difficulty in maintaining order, and the violations of law would be less frequent.

There are parents in the world—I hope there are very few in the Church—who say they will leave the educating of their children in religious matters until the children themselves arrive at years of accountability. They will permit their children to choose which Church or which principles of religion the children desire to accept. The Prophet Joseph gives no intimation that any parent has a right thus to leave the religious training of his children until they arrive at the years of accountability.

Coleridge once met a man who made that same statement, and Coleridge said, "I took him and showed him my garden, and told him it was my botanical garden." "How so," said he, "it is covered with weeds." "O," I replied, "that is only because it has not yet come to its age of discretion and choice. The weeds you see have taken the liberty to grow and I thought it unfair in me to prejudice the soil toward roses and strawberries."

The application is clear. It is said that Plato one day, seeing a child do mischief, called immediately and reprimanded the child's father. He, too, recognized the fact that one of the great potent factors in the education of childhood is the parent. "Whatever parent gives his children good instruction and sets them at the same time a bad example, may be considered as bringing them food in one hand and poison in the other."

RESPONSIBILITY OF PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS

The second group upon whom the responsibility of training children rests by divine revelation, is the quorum of the priesthood and other helps in government. A few years ago when I was attending conference in the Carbon stake, President Horsley and I discovered a little child that was lost. President Horsley wiped away the little one's tears, and carried her to his home and placed her in the hands of Sister Horsley, through whose gentleness and tenderness the child soon fell asleep. Efforts were made to discover the parents, and at about five o'clock in the afternoon, the distracted mother was found. Her tear-stained eyes showed what anguish she had passed through since the little one had wandered from her side. But she was at peace when she found her darling sleeping by the fireside.

I think this incident illustrates the relation of the quorums to the parent. There are boys and girls wandering from the parental hearthstone. In the world, outside the Church, hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of them are crouching today behind steel bars.

Even here in our own stakes some are wandering carelessly, aimlessly away from the influence of home standards and home teachings. It is the duty of quorum members to extend the hand of fellowship, the hand of guidance to these young men and young women wandering towards the downward path. Can you find any more potent influence in all the world than the quorums as established in the Church of Christ? Time will not permit me even to define them for you. You all know, and while I am speaking you have in your minds the quorums of Deacons, one thousand or more; you have in mind over nine hundred groups of Teachers, and approximately an equal number of groups of Priests, young men between the ages of seventeen and twenty. Seventy thousand young men thus grouped, whose duty it is to extend the glad hand to those of their companions who have not glimpsed the privilege given to these members of quorums.

QUORUM POTENCY

I wonder how many parents have stopped to realize how potent these quorums are in the lives of boys! In the first place, quorum membership awakens in the boy the pride of fellowship and membership. Entrance into that group means that the boy has attained to certain standards of excellence of character, and the more distinctive we can make these entrance requirements the greater will be the pride in the young boy's heart.

Second, the quorum influence arouses or satisfies the call of the boy for the inspiration of the group. Have you heard of the gang spirit? Have you seen the boys out on the ditch bank gathering in groups in answer to the call of their souls for companionship? Then can you see the wisdom of God in gratifying this natural inclination by grouping the boys under an influence that is educative in the highest sense of the term?

Third, that group throws upon the youth responsibility. Tell a young boy that you trust him, and you have one of the greatest means of guiding him uprightly that can come into your hands. Young boy, I trust you! To be trusted is a greater compliment than to be loved. Boys are few indeed who will not hold inviolate an implicit trust.

Fourth, grouping in a quorum offers service. The Presiding Bishopric, holding a presidency over these seventy thousand young men, have outlined as they have hitherto done, a plan of service into which these young men are invited, not just on Sunday, but on every day of the week.

Finally, into that group is introduced faith in God the Father, in his Son Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of the world, and their service and acts are all done under the cognizance and realization that God is approving of their acts. It is sublime. It is divine. Fathers and mothers, let us unite with the priesthood in extending the influence of these groups.

I have mentioned only the Aaronic Priesthood, but our fathers are grouped in like manner, and we have one hundred and thirty thousand men and boys working for the true education, working to train the youth in parenthood and faith in God and in the restored gospel. I tell you, this grouping in Priesthood Quorums has the mark of divinity. It is divine. And Joseph Smith, a young man not twenty-five years of age when he gave that revelation, gave it by the inspiration of God for the salvation of the youth of Zion.

OTHER CHURCH EDUCATIONAL FACTORS

Now I cannot say anything this afternoon about the other educational factors furnished by the Church for the education of our boys. Our Church schools—O, what they mean in true education! Our seminaries, correlating as they do the gathering of facts in science, literature and art, introducing these high elements, faith, integrity, obedience to law, respect for order, purity of life. Our Religion Classes, the Sunday Schools, the Mutuels, the Primary—I cannot do more than merely mention them, because I want to pass to the third group very seldom mentioned as a means of influencing youth. I find reference to it in the Doctrine and Covenants in these words:

"We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same; and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people."

COMMUNITY INFLUENCE

You will recognize this third group in the influencing of boys is the community—our civil officers and social functions. It is said the pulpit only teaches to be honest; the market-place trains to over-reaching and fraud; and teaching hasn't a tithe of the efficiency of training. Christ never wrote a tract, but he went about doing good.

The press dispatches this morning report the results of a survey made recently by W. F. Burton of the Department of Education of the University of Chicago. Many of you no doubt saw it. He made a survey of thousands of young children in the sixth grade in our public schools. That means the boys and girls ranging approximately from ten to twelve years of age. He said the six things they all know most about, in their order of knowledge, are "bootlegging, divorce, alimony, sheriffs, juvenile courts, jail and jury." Now you may say of course they were in Chicago, but the same examination was given to the children of the schools of Salem, the capital of the state of Oregon, where 63% of the people own their own homes. The result was exactly the same. "Next in order," Burton averred, "the children know most about mayors, elections, polling places, ballots, taxes, and insurance; and third, bank deposits, rents, bankrupts, pioneers, and sanitary inspectors." We do not know just how these questions were given to the children. Perhaps they were so worded as to call forth these answers, but I think it is significant that the fundamental things in education are not named—not even mentioned.

I call attention to this merely to drive home the fact that our community is a great factor in the teaching of our children. Our officers, public servants, are teachers of the youth and they carry the responsibility of teachers. It is our duty, therefore, as citizens of this great republic, to exercise our right at the ballot box. It is our duty to see that men in both our great parties are chosen who will teach not only by precept, but by example, obedience to law; that these men so elected will appoint men under them who will not scoff at the law against liquor, who will not themselves indulge in bootlegging, or who will not in any way protect those men or women who violate moral laws.

I said that the greatest obligation upon society is the proper training of youth. The home, our quorums, our officers in the community are three great educational factors, and all three subject to our sentiment, our approval.

"It matters not what I shall gain
By fleeting gold or fame,
My hope of joy depends alone
On what my boy shall claim.
My glory must be told through him,
For him I work and plan—
Man's greatest duty is to be
The father of a man."

And each one of us may be the father of a man, as Paul spiritually was of Timothy, and Peter of Mark, who as a young man undoubtedly was a witness to Christ's betrayal, and who, if he did not see him resurrected, wrote in after years:

"Ye seek Jesus who was crucified; he is not here, he is resurrected."

God help us to get our young boys to feel and to know not only that Christ has risen, but that he has appeared again to men, and restored the gospel of Christ, the power of God through which youth and all mankind may receive salvation and peace. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

Senior President of the First Council of Seventy

My brethren and sisters, in all the conferences of the Church that I have attended, I cannot recall a time when I have felt that we have had a greater spiritual feast than we have had at this conference, because of the outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord upon his servants. The spirit of testimony has been very strong, and it appears to me that it has been colored by the spirit of testimony as exemplified in the declaration of the Christ upon one occasion—that occasion when he taught the mysteries of the new birth to Nicodemus. After his explanation about the second birth, and having expressed some surprise that Nicodemus, a teacher in Israel, was not acquainted with these truths, the Savior said:

"We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen."

And then he appears to have been under the necessity of saying this rather sorrowful thing:

"And ye receive not our witness."

I trust that that reflection will find no place in our experience in this conference.

At another time the Savior struck a more hopeful note connected with the fact that he himself was a witness to the truth. That occurred in his conversation with Pontius Pilate just before he was condemned to crucifixion by that officer. Pilate was seeking justification for letting the Savior go, and when that seemed to be hopeless, he sought for justification for signing the death warrant enacted by the Jewish Sanhedrin against the Christ. Among the charges made against Jesus was that he claimed to be a king; and of course I suppose it occurred to Pilate that if he could attach that claim directly to the Christ he would feel some justification in condemning him to death, as such a claim would be a challenge to the sovereignty of Rome. Hence he brought up that question and said unto Jesus:

"Art thou a king?"

The Savior replied: "My kingdom is not of this world."

"O, then, thou art a king?" exclaimed Pilate.

"Thou sayest I am a king."

As if he saw the hopelessness of continuing the discussion, "Thou sayest I am a king," so we will let it go at that. Then he turned to a more serious matter and said:

"To this end was I born, for this purpose came I into the world, to testify of the truth."

Something more than a kingship; something of higher importance than being a king: I am a witness of the truth. "And they who are of the truth, hear my voice." (St. John 18:33-37.)

From which we gather that there is a force and power in truth itself apart from any bolstering up by arguments or reasons a direct power in truth itself that carries conviction of the effect of it to those who are "of the truth." I think that is the spirit that has characterized so splendidly this conference—The Spirit of Truth.

Among the many important subjects that have been brought to our attention I think there is no item of more importance than the subject that was discussed by President Ivins in tracing the records of the Nephites from the centers of their civilization northward, and the long pilgrimage of the people as they moved northward until they came to the land of Ripliancum, the land of many waters, and the Hill Cumorah. I was deeply interested in what he said, and I believe that his remarks make a very important contribution, not only to this conference, but to the literature of the Church. It will at least be preserved in the minutes of this conference, and will be of permanent record.

As he closed his remarks the thought that flashed through my mind was this: O, what the world would have lost, if the Book of Mormon had not been brought forth!

I wish I had the time to consider the things that would have been lost to the world but for the bringing forth of the Nephite scriptures, the American volume of scriptures. I remember in my early days coming in contact with opponents of the Book of Mormon who charged, for instance, that it had no aphorisms of any importance, and that it was in this respect in strong contrast with the Jewish scriptures. I want to call your attention, however, to a few aphorisms that are of great worth, and that enrich the sacred literature of the world.

For instance, there is that sharp-cut sentence:

"Wickedness never was happiness."

I think it would be difficult to find an epigram more important than that, and a truth that the world ought to know.

Again: "All things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things."

A beautiful utterance; and a declaration of confidence in the perfect knowledge of God; and builded upon that perfect knowledge—and it can only be builded upon perfect knowledge—perfect wisdom. And that beautiful declaration is followed by this announcement of the great truth, giving us clear vision of the purpose of God with reference to the earth-life of man, the like of which is not found elsewhere, neither in Jewish nor Christian scriptures; nor in the philosophies of men:

"Adam fell that men might be; and men are that they might have joy."

That is the thing that God is working out, and what a lesson of cheer and good will and of hope it is!

Here is another:

"The Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he prepares a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them."

You who are starting to bring to pass the high purposes of God, with reference to this creation of his, what comfort that assurance brings! "God will require nothing at the hands of the children of men save he prepares the way for them to accomplish that thing."

Again, Moroni, near the close of his record, seems to tremble for the success of his work, and as he reviewed it and became conscious of the weaknesses in it, he was very deeply sorrowful and he wrote in substance—and all these quotations are but in substance:

"Lord, the Gentiles will mock at our weakness in writing."

And the answer of the Lord was:

"Fools mock, but they shall mourn; and my grace is sufficient for all who humble themselves before me, saith the Lord."

I remember having a very rich bit of experience with that passage in the younger days of my ministry when I was on my first mission. It fell to my lot to engage in a three-day debate with a seasoned man in that line of work. I was but twenty-three and had had no experience. He was fifty-four and had the reputation of having driven all his opponents from the platform. He mocked considerably at the Book of Mormon, and brought up this very question of its lack of incisiveness and clear-cut aphorisms, and challenged me to produce anything that could be comparable with the sharp, clear-cut aphorisms of the Bible scriptures.

I told him I could think just at the moment of but one, and that was, "Fools mock, but they shall mourn."

I am not very much acquainted with his history after that debate, but after three days' discussion he utterly refused to go on with the debate, when it was really but half through, and notwithstanding he had previously driven every opponent from the platform. I had his promise also that I should have the opportunity of examining his doctrine after closing our debate on the Book of Mormon, but he refused to go on with it, and left the platform with an unfinished job on his hands. By the way, let me say, not by way of boasting, but because of the blessing of the Lord on our labors, immediately following the discussion, we began baptizing, and within two months had raised up a branch in the neighborhood of more than sixty members. The Lord so blessed us on that occasion.

After calling this gentleman's attention to that passage, "Fools mock, but they shall mourn," he did not ask for any more aphorisms.

"Fools mock, but they shall mourn!" And then this richer statement follows it:

"I, the Lord, give unto men weakness that they may be humble; and my grace is sufficient for all men that humble themselves before me."

Have you in your moments of trial or deep sorrow felt the hand of a friend steal quietly into your hand, and by pressure express sympathy and brotherhood to you? I have fortunately had a few friends with whom I have had such experience as that, both men and women, a recollection that is among the precious treasures of my experience. But this passage, "I give unto men weakness that they may be humble; and my grace is sufficient for all those who humble themselves before me,"—in this, it seems to me, that I feel the hand of God slipping gently into my hand, and giving me the pressure of assurance that there will be mercy, that there will be helpfulness, that there will be encouragement from God. He will remember that we are but men and women in the making; and while not yet perfect, yet perhaps perfectable—which is the important thing. In that utterance in the Book of Mormon, I feel the richness of the grace of God, and assurances of success in hungering and thirsting after righteousness, for it shall be given unto us.

The Book of Mormon is important because of its correction of some errors that have crept into the philosophies and religions of men. You see perhaps the most perfect expression of God's law unto men in the sermon on the mount. That sermon as it stands in Matthew is vulnerable, at least at one point; and that is where the Savior admonishes men without any limitation, apparently, as expressed by Matthew, to take no thought for tomorrow, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed; and calls attention to the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet Solomon in all his glory is not arrayed as one of these. He refers to the very birds of the air, that they are under the care of the Father, and will have his attention, and not one falleth to the ground without his notice. "Are ye not of more worth than many sparrows?"

Now those who enter into arguments against the doctrines of Christianity, and who try to condemn even this sermon on the mount, say that this doctrine of taking no thought of tomorrow is utterly impracticable in life. That if men generally tried to live as the birds do, and to receive their clothing as the flowers are clothed with beauty, the result would be not civilization but savage life as we know it among the undeveloped races of the children of men.

In the Book of Mormon account of Christ delivering that sermon on this continent among his people, when coming to that part of his sermon which he repeated here in this land, he turned directly to the Twelve Disciples unto whom he had given authority to preach the gospel and administer the Sacraments thereof, and it was to them, and to them alone, that he addressed that part of his sermon. They were to take no thought of the things of tomorrow, nor the things of the world; for the Father knew beforehand what their needs were. And then he admonishes them to take encouragement from his reference to the birds of the air and the flowers of the field, how they were fed and clothed; and gives them encouragement that the Father would so care for them. From the fact that this part of the sermon was limited to the Twelve Special Disciples on this western hemisphere, it is a reasonable conclusion that the same limitation was fixed in his sermon on the mount when he delivered it in Palestine, as it was recorded by Matthew.

Civilized man must of necessity take thought of tomorrow, and plan for it, and practice self-denial, that in the future greater things may be accomplished, through the thinking and the sacrificing of today. These things are the very keynote of building up civilization. But out of a community you could call twelve ministers, dedicated to a certain purpose in life, that requires all of their energies and all of their thought, and enjoin upon them self-consecration to a given special task, without injury to the development of civilization; they could take no thought of tomorrow, and trust in the providences of God for their maintenance, without affecting industrial, or economic conditions.

There is no apparent effort to make a correction of Matthew's account of the Sermon as it appears in the Book of Mormon. It relates simply the incident, and from it you see how this point in the sermon on the mount may be clarified.

So with several of the beatitudes in that sermon. Changes here and there made which give them point, and make them more definite and beautiful. For example, in this one, Matthew says:

"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

The Book of Mormon version of that beatitude is:

"Yea, blessed are the poor in spirit, who come unto me: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

To be poor in spirit is no doubt a very excellent quality, but it requires more than that to enter the kingdom of heaven: They must come unto God in order to enter the kingdom of God. And so throughout. I can only give you just a brief example of these things.

Since this is Easter day, let me call your attention to one other thing in the testimony of the scriptures of the western continents—the Book of Mormon—in relation to the resurrection of Christ. What a wonderful testimony that book contains for the thing that is celebrated this day throughout Christendom, namely, the resurrection from the dead of our Lord the Christ! In all the accounts that are given of the reality of that resurrection—and it has been beautifully expressed to our thought during this conference, the absolute reality of it—how well the testimonies of the Christian scriptures and the prophetic parts of the old Bible, too, are sustained by that wonderful appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of this western world! After the awful destruction by storm and tempest and earthquake, which very much changed the character of the face of the land, even mountains arising from plains, and mountains shaken to their foundations, covering wicked cities upon whom God had decreed destruction; after the awful three days darkness which seems to have been even more terrible than the storms and earthquakes, and which has become enshrined in the legends of the native people of this American continent; after that dreadful experience of storm and tempest and destruction—then a voice was universally heard in the land proclaiming the mercy and willingness of the Savior to forgive; proclaiming the truth that he was the Creator of the heavens and the earth, and had made his sacrifices for the redemption of men. Following that, some time after the close of the storms, tempests, whirlwinds and earthquakes, came to pass the wonderful appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, when a few people in the Land Bountiful stood by a temple that happened to have escaped destruction—then, as they wondered upon the changes that had been wrought in the lands about them, and were recovering somewhat from their own errors, they heard a voice, but knew not whence it came nor what was said. They looked about at each other wondering whence it came. The second time they heard it, but there was no definite communication in the sound. The third time they heard it they recognized that something was said, and that something was this, and it thrilled them:

“Behold my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name—hear ye him.”

Looking in the direction whence that voice came they saw a man, all glorious, descending in white raiment, and down he came until he stood upon the earth in their presence. Stretching forth his arms—it seems to me it must have been with wonderful majesty—he said unto them:

“Behold, I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world.

“And behold, I am the light and the life of the world: and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things from the beginning.”

What a message of the Deity to the world; a message and testimony of the Christ; of the fact that he had suffered for the sins of the world, of the fact that he had risen from the dead, and now stood before them clothed with all authority in heaven and in earth, come to establish faith in the hearts of these people who had been tried by their severe experiences, and had survived because they were the worthiest to survive! To them also he granted the privilege of St. Thomas, to behold his wounds in hands and feet and side. And when they had thus confirmed their faith, on their faces they fell and shouted aloud: "Hosanna. Hosanna to the Most High God!" And so they worshipped the risen Lord.

Now, tell me in what church or cathedral in the world, in what sacred grove, in what place among the habitations of men, will be found a more glorious Easter vision of the Christ than this? And the world would have lost this if it had not been for the Book of Mormon coming forth, and there is a hundred more such glorious things that have come to the world in that book to enlighten the children of men, all of which would have been lost had not this American volume of scripture been brought forth.

My brethren and sisters, we have had a most glorious conference. Will you not permit me to close my remarks according to the desire that is in my heart, and what I would like to say to express my own feelings of gratitude for the things that have been reviewed before us in this conference? Do not think me presumptuous, but if I might follow the promptings of my own heart on this occasion, I should do so in this manner:

O God, the Eternal Father, in the name of thy dear Son Jesus Christ, we worship thee! We worship thee as the Creator of heaven and of earth, and of the seas, and of the fountains of waters. We worship thee not only as Creator, but also as the World-sustaining Power of the universe. We revere and honor thee as the Intelligence-inspiring Power in the world, also as the Vital Force of the world, and the Sustaining Power of Life. We honor Thee also as the Love-manifesting Power, as expressed through Jesus Christ our Lord. To us he is God manifested in the flesh—God incarnate.

We thank thee for that glorious line of patriarchs from Adam to Noah, and from Noah to Melchizedek, to Abraham and Moses and all the prophets in Israel. We thank thee for the service and labors of that majestic man who stood at the head of the Aaronic priesthood in his day and time, John called the Baptist, who was the forerunner of Christ, in the meridian dispensation. We thank thee from full hearts for the Christ himself, and for the sacrifice that he made for us. Also we thank thee, our Father, for the Apostles of that dispensation, and for the honor and integrity in which they discharged their high duties in bearing special witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We thank thee for the great prophet of the New Dispensation, the servant in thy house, Joseph Smith, the Seer of the last days. And also, Father, we thank thee for that flood of knowledge that has come into the world, the testimonies from the Nephite scriptures, as well as those which have come from the Jewish scriptures. And, O Lord, far and above all, the most excellent of all, and to whom we are directly indebted for hope of eternal life and redemption from sin and union with Thee through thy Spirit and our baptism into it, that Spirit by which we "may know the truth of all things," even the Holy Ghost. We thank Thee for this.

And now, O Lord Jesus, if thou couldst but come into the consciousness of our souls this day, as thou didst come into the vision of the ancient Nephites in the Land of Bountiful, we would join their great song of praise and worship, saying—"Hosanna! Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God!" And we, like them, would fall down at the feet of Jesus and worship him this Easter day! Amen.

A duet, "The morning land," was sung by Mrs. Dolores Fernstrom and Miss Jessie Evans.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

"Zion's welfare is my portion,
And I feel my bosom swell
With a warm, divine emotion,
When she prospers, all is well."

My soul has rejoiced in the spirit of this conference and in the hope that we have in the completion of the Lord's work according to his plan and purpose. I am in full sympathy and accord with all that has been said concerning the marvelous work and a wonder which the Lord has established. My great anxiety is that it shall continue to be a marvelous work and a wonder. I feel constrained to make an appeal to the Latter-day Saints, particularly my brethren who bear rule in stakes, wards and quorums, to see to it that we do preserve all our sacred privileges by complying with those requirements which the Lord has made for the future welfare of Zion.

A BOOK OF MORMON MESSAGE

Reference has been made frequently to the Book of Mormon, during this conference, and to the messages it contains. I should like to read from it, to call to your attention a message that comes to us from Nephi (II Nephi, Chapter 28). He saw this day as clearly as his own, and he gives us this warning:

"And now, behold, my brethren, I have spoken unto you, according as the Spirit hath constrained me; wherefore, I know that they must surely come to pass.

"The things which shall be written out of the book shall be of great worth, * * * and especially unto our seed, which is a remnant of the house of Israel.

"For it shall come to pass in that day, [in the day when this book should come forth], that the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, when the one shall say unto the other, Behold I, I am the Lord's; and the others shall say: I, I am the Lord's; and thus shall every one say that hath built up churches, and not unto the Lord—

"And they shall contend one with another; and their priests shall contend one with another, and they shall teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.

"And they deny the power of God, the Holy One of Israel; and they say unto the people: Hearken unto us, and hear ye our precept; for behold there is no God today, for the Lord and the Redeemer hath done his work, and he hath given his power unto men;

"Behold, hearken ye unto my precept; if they shall say there is a miracle wrought by the hand of the Lord, believe it not; for this day he is not a God of miracles; he hath done his work.

"Yea, and there shall be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die; and it shall be well with us.

"And there shall also be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God—he will justify in committing a little sin; yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this; and do all these things, for tomorrow we die; and if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God.

"Yea, and there shall be many which shall teach after this manner, false, and vain, and foolish doctrines, and shall be puffed up in their hearts, and shall seek deep to hide their counsels from the Lord; and their works shall be in the dark.

"And the blood of the saints shall cry from the ground against them.

"Yea, they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted.

"Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted, and their churches are lifted up; because of pride they are puffed up.

"They rob the poor because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor because of their fine clothing; and they persecute the meek and the poor in heart, because in their pride they are puffed up.

"They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men."

DANGERS THAT THREATEN THE WORLD

I shall not read the remainder of it; I commend it all to you. Here is a message to the Church, a message to the world. Nephi saw most clearly these things which threaten the world, and the dangers that threaten the Church. I see no dark clouds gathering against the Church, but I do see most clearly that which Nephi declared, that in this day Satan would stir up the hearts of men, and he would rage in their hearts against the truth, and he would seek to gain power and control over the kingdoms of this world.

THE LORD'S PROMISE TO THE CHURCH

I recognize, my brethren and sisters, that the Church has attained a right to exist. I fear neither kings nor potentates so far as the future destiny of this work is concerned. The only fear and anxiety that I have in my heart is that the Latter-day Saints will not keep the commandments of God.

I read in the Doctrine and Covenants words of precious promise to this Church on conditions found in the one hundred and third section, wherein the Lord, even in the midst of the trial and suffering of the Church following the days of their sorrow in Missouri, said:

"But verily I say unto you, that I have decreed a decree which my people shall realize, inasmuch as they hearken from this very hour unto the counsel which I, the Lord their God, shall give unto them.

"Behold they shall, for I have decreed it, begin to prevail against mine enemies from this very hour."

And here are the conditions:

"And by hearkening to observe all the words which I, the Lord their God, shall speak unto them, they shall never cease to prevail until the kingdoms of the world are subdued under my feet, and the earth is given unto the saints, to possess it forever and ever.

"But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdoms of the world shall prevail against them,

"For they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men."

This precious promise is ours, on condition that we continue as faithful as our fathers and mothers were. We live in the time when men begin to say, It is all right to sin a little, to lie a little, to begin to pay little heed and attention to those strict requirements of the Lord, to begin to break the Word of Wisdom a little, to begin to neglect the payment of our tithes and offerings, to begin to treat the moral law lightly, and to look upon it as a thing not binding upon us. That is the spirit that is in the world, and the Lord said that influence would actually affect the Church itself—the few who were the only ones in the world acceptable, and yet, in some instances, they were stumbling because of these false doctrines and precepts of men.

CAN OUR CIVILIZATION ENDURE

I heard recently, as some of you did, an eminent philosopher deliver an address, in the Assembly Hall, on the question, Can civilization endure? He recited the rise and the fall of empires, and said that all the glory of Babylon had gone the way of the world, as was the case with other civilizations that had arisen. And yet, out of it all, there has come unto our civilization all the blessings and benefits of former civilizations. But he also called attention to the fact, that if the glorious civilizations of the past had not been destroyed and could have gone on building, what might be our status today! He also said, there is, of course, a possibility that, glorious and wonderful as this civilization is, it, too, may perish and go the way of the world. He asked the question, Will the day ever come in the lives of the children of men when a civilization shall be established that will stand forever and will not go into decay as those great civilizations of the past have done? He hoped that day would come, he believed it would. While listening to his remarks, I saw, more clearly than ever, the hand of God in laying a foundation in fulfilment of that promise made through Daniel, in the interpretation of the dream given to Nebuchadnezzar, that that day would come. He saw all the kingdoms that have risen and have fallen, and foretold their future as accurately as the historian has recorded it since the events have happened; and, with as much accuracy, he foretold the day to come when, after all this period, the God of heaven would set his hand to establish a new order of things in the earth, to build up a kingdom that would stand forever, and that never would fall.

A KINGDOM THAT WILL NEVER FALL

Our attention has been called, during this conference, to the establishment of the Lord's work in the founding of these American institutions, and that God inspired the men who wrote the Constitution. We believe that his hand has been over it. I believe myself that it is part of God's great work in the building up and establishment of a kingdom for himself when he will come, for come he will, to reign as King of kings. All the kingdoms of the world shall go on, attempting to solve their problems and utterly failing, until, in desperation, after the days of their sorrow, they will turn to him and elect him to be their King. He will reign as Lord of lords in his Church—this Church, builded and established by him, and which shall go forward and never fail. Wonderful, is it not, to think that we are favored above all other men in the world, privileged to live in an age when we are contributing towards the establishment of that order of things that will never perish.

This government, its principles and doctrines, will never perish from the earth. Neither will this Church nor the principles and the doctrines that it announces. They are not competitors, they are hand-maidens preparing the way for his coming. It is glorious to know that he has risen, and more glorious to know that he will come again and will live and rule and reign with his saints for a thousand years, and peace shall be here. This is the mission and the destiny of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. What then is our duty? My brethren, it is to go to our stakes and wards and rally our forces as watchmen upon the towers of Zion, to see the dangers that threaten, and while they are not disastrous now, being forewarned, forearm ourselves, and induce our brethren and sisters not to be weary in well-doing, but to subscribe their lives to these simple gospel principles, for in abiding by them is all this future glory assured to us. By keeping the commandments of God, we shall never cease to prevail until the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ.

SATAN SHALL BE DEFEATED

My only anxiety is that, when the day comes, we shall be found with oil in our lamps. I bear witness to you that the devil is raging. He never has had such an experience in all his existence, in seeking to obtain power and authority over the things of this world, as today. He never has been so completely defeated as in the successful establishment of this Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He has sought by every power and means at his command to destroy it, and he has failed. And he will fail in the future. He is gathering his forces for the great conflict and struggle, even Armageddon, when the living righteous and righteous dead shall be arrayed on one side against the living wicked and the wicked dead, in a mighty conflict, to settle the question as to who has the right to rule and reign; and he shall be defeated, no matter how great his forces.

GOD'S POWER TO BE MANIFESTED

I bear witness to you that God is speaking through the elements in the midst of the nations of the earth. He will manifest his power as never before. This Church will have the opportunity to demonstrate its power and its influence in the world. If only we will adhere to these principles, we shall rise and shine, and no power on earth or in hell shall stop the progress and growth and development of this work. The power to make it succeed is in our hands. God give us the vision to see clearly our glorious destiny, to recognize the principles by which we may, through adhering to them, reach that destiny, and come off victorious, to rejoice in the day of the triumph of God's work in the earth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

My brethren and sisters, this conference is drawing to a close. Before we separate I desire to make a few remarks, and as a preface to what I wish to say I will read a few lines from the Book of Mormon. These are the words of Christ our Lord:

"He that believeth these things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestations of my Spirit, and he shall know and bear record. For because of my Spirit he shall know that these things are true; for it persuadeth men to do good.

"And whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do good is of me; for good cometh of none save it be of me."

My brethren and sisters, during the sessions of this conference a great variety of topics have been touched upon. The doctrines of the gospel, the moral obligations which are upon us all, to be observers and exemplars of righteousness, the foundation upon which the Church is builded, and the circumstances under which it came into existence in this dispensation have all been referred to by the speakers.

THE GOSPEL NOT SOMETHING NEW

The one thing which I wish to impress upon your minds is this: The opening of this gospel dispensation, the restoration of the gospel of Christ in the day in which we live, did not come as an incident connected wholly with our day and time. It is not something new that has come into the world in conflict with other truths that exist in it, but it is a restoration of that which was commenced with the very beginning of the human race, and is intimately connected with that which shall continue unto the end.

It is true, as has been stated, that the priesthood of God our Father has come to us through the ministry of angels whom he has sent to the earth. It is true that there was no other church, as has been stated, where this authority existed. But that does not mean and I would not have you understand that other men in times past, and other men at present, may not be inspired of God our Father to perform the work which they are doing. The Church has no conflict with men who are thus discharging their mission.

GOD'S PROMISES TO BE FULFILLED

The covenants entered into by God our Father with his people appear to have been almost lost, and absolutely so, for the mission of Christ himself at the time of his death appeared to have been a failure. The promises made to the house of Israel had not been fulfilled. They were scattered, their whereabouts unknown to the people at large. And yet the Lord had said that those promises were eternal. That means that they should live forever. After the dispersal of Israel there came a period, centuries of time, in which we have little authentic history. When we emerged from it we found ourselves in a world that was dominated by kingcraft and priestcraft. We found a people uneducated, untaught, untutored, without knowledge of the word of the Lord as contained in Holy Writ, for that was a book which had been sealed to them.

THE WORK OF THE REFORMERS

Then there came such men as John Wycliffe. Do you think that God called him? Yes, just as definitely as he called Joseph Smith, not to perform the same work; but this great personage, amid a time of confusion and ignorance, declared that the word of God should be published to the people, and the church said, "It shall not be published. We have the Pope, and we had better be without the law of God than without him." That is a historical fact. But Wycliffe went on. He did publish a Bible, and he was hounded and persecuted to his death for having done it, and after he died a petition was presented asking that his remains be buried in a dunghill because of this great sin that he had committed. He had actually published the scriptures. Finally, after a rather decent burial, his body was disinterred, burned, and the ashes scattered in the river Swift, and carried by that into the Severn, and thence into the ocean, in order that his work might be obliterated.

One hundred years later came William Tyndale with the same message, meeting with the same opposition. The church would not permit that the word of God be published. Tyndale said, "I will make every ploughboy in England to understand the scripture better than the Pope himself." Do you think that the Lord called that man? Yes, as definitely as he has ever called a man to do His work.

Then came Martin Luther, that great soul, who had the courage to stand against priestcraft and kingcraft, and declare that his conscience was a captive to God's word. That was his declaration when he stood before the Diet at Worms. "There I take my stand; I can do no otherwise. So help me God." That was his answer to his accusers.

Tyndale was strangled by order of the church because he assumed to publish the Word of God. It was at a time when the Duke of Alva went into the Netherlands, authorized by the church to put to death all who were not orthodox, and he himself was the judge of their orthodoxy, who afterwards boasted that he had executed eighteen thousand men, and women were not spared. Any person who had the effrontery or the courage to say that the Eucharist was not actually converted into the body and blood of Christ, when he ate that piece of bread, and drank a swallow of wine, was put to death.

Those were the conditions which existed. The Lord raised these men up and associations were formed protesting against such abuses. Thank the Lord for them, paying the way for the opening of this gospel dispensation, when righteousness might prevail.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the friend of every man or woman, every association of men or women which is formed that has for its purpose the accomplishment of good. The words of Christ are true: That which is good comes from God, and that which is evil and tends to lead men away from the truth comes from that evil one.

But when it comes to associations of men and women, whether they be ecclesiastical or whether they be civil, that are bound together either secretly or openly for the accomplishment of a selfish purpose, or for the accomplishment of a purpose that is contrary to the word of the Lord as it is contained in the scriptures, against all such the Church is opposed.

I thought I would like to make that plain. Thank the Lord for good men and women whether they are in the Church or out of it. Thank the Lord for the efforts which are put forth to incline men to faith in Christ and to bring them to him. But we are irrevocably opposed to any association, whether it be religious, political, or social, which denies these eternal truths, which binds men in the bonds of ignorance, which shackles them as the people of the world were shackled in the middle ages, which slays men because they do not accept their point of view. It is anti-Christ, and not the doctrine of Christ our Lord. Those millions of people in Mexico who are fighting today for personal liberty will no longer be held in bondage, kept in ignorance of the word of God, and denied those privileges of progression which everyone is entitled to.

This is the attitude of the Church. We do not want to be at enmity with any good man or woman, or with any good institution. But we are against that which leads men and women into evil.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters, and send us away from here with a renewed determination to establish righteousness, to give our sympathy to everything that leads to the intellectual and spiritual development of mankind. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Before closing this conference, although the time has expired, I desire to say a few more words. I realize that there are people here from all our stakes from Canada to Mexico, and I feel assured in my heart that they will be perfectly willing to stay a few minutes beyond the allotted time.

GRATITUDE FOR SPIRIT OF THE LORD

I desire to express my gratitude for the rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord during our three days of conference, for the splendid music, for the inspirational prayers, expressive of the heartfelt devotion of those who have prayed for us, for the gospel of Jesus Christ, and for the Lord's many blessings unto us.

TIME INSUFFICIENT TO HEAR ALL AUTHORITIES

I am truly grateful for the inspiration of the Lord to each and all of those who have spoken. It would have been a source of pleasure to me to have heard from all of the General Authorities of the Church; also from some of the stake presidents and others that I had in mind to call upon; but time forbids. As I have remarked upon several occasions, I think we ought to have at least one more meeting of two hours in addition to the six meetings we now have in our conferences; there are so many that we should like to hear; but, to date, we have been contented with twelve hours of general conference meetings. Twelve hours once in six months is not a very long period for the people to stay together, and yet we notice considerable restlessness in a meeting the moment the two hours are up. But, even at the risk of wearying you, there are a few things more I desire to say.

A BLESSING FOR AUTHORITIES AND MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH

I wish to endorse the remarks that have been made at this conference from start to finish. I wish to say to the Latter-day Saints that I believe God is blessing every one of us who is keeping his commandments, beyond even that of which we are worthy. I know he has blessed me beyond all that I could have asked or expected in my ministry, from the day that I was made the President of the Tooele stake of Zion to this moment. And I, as the President of the Church, standing at the head of the Church, pray God our heavenly Father to bless each and every one of the general, stake, ward, auxiliary, temple, school and mission authorities, all over the world, all men and women who are striving honestly and conscientiously to fulfil the duties and the obligations that rest upon them. I pray that all men and all women who hold any place of responsibility, no matter how high or how low, may magnify their callings and preach the gospel by their example of righteousness, that they may grow and increase in influence with God, and with those over whom they preside. I promise every soul holding any place of responsibility that the blessings of the Almighty shall be and abide with him if he strive, to the full extent of his ability, to magnify his callings.

A BLESSING FOR GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

I pray God to bless his Saints all over the wide world, and I bless them by the authority of the priesthood which I hold. I pray for our country and ask the Lord to bless those who preside in the nation, in the states, in the cities and in the counties. I pray God to inspire the people that they will obey his commands, and elect good men to office; that they will bury their political differences and seek for good men to hold office, and not men who connive with those who are breaking the laws of our country. It is one of the articles of our faith to obey and uphold the laws of the land. May God help us to do it. May the sweet influences of his Spirit attend every honest-hearted soul the world over. And I pray for their welfare and particularly for the welfare of all who are striving for the spread of the gospel, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir and a quartet sang the anthem, "Let the mountains shout for joy," led by Professor Evan Stephens who composed the anthem.

The choir and congregation sang "Doxology."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder J. Fred Corbett, president of the Idaho stake of Zion.

Conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by B. Cecil Gates. Accompaniments and interludes were played on the great organ by Edward P. Kimball, Tracy Y. Cannon, Frank W. Asper and Alexander Schreiner.

Stenographic notes of the conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

JOSEPH ANDERSON,
Clerk of the Conference.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The first session of the conference commenced at 10 o'clock Friday morning, October 5, 1928.

The great tabernacle auditorium and galleries were well filled with people from all parts of the Church.

President Heber J. Grant presided and announced the opening of the conference.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Come, come, ye Saints."

Elder Willard Young offered the invocation.

The congregation sang, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice in having the opportunity of again meeting with the Saints in general conference. I am delighted to see the splendid audience that is here this morning.

CHANGES IN STAKE AND MISSION OFFICERS SINCE LAST CONFERENCE

I am sure that it will be of some interest to those who are here assembled to learn regarding the changes that have been made since our last conference.

New Stakes Organized: The Alpine stake has been divided into three stakes, to be known as the Alpine, Lehi and Timpanogos stakes.

Stake Presidents Appointed: John E. Magleby has been released as president of the South Sevier stake, and James R. Ware has been appointed to succeed him.

John M. Baxter has been released as president of the Woodruff stake, and William R. Smith appointed to succeed him.

Stephen L. Chipman has been released as president of the Alpine stake, and Clifford E. Young appointed to succeed him.

Anchor Carlos Schow has been appointed president of the new Lehi stake.

Wilford W. Warnick has been appointed president of the new Timpanogos stake.

Frank Y. Taylor has been released as President of Granite stake and Hugh B. Brown appointed to succeed him.

John A. Beckstrand has been released as president of the Millard stake, and T. Clark Callister appointed to succeed him.

Joseph B. White has been released as president of Hyrum stake and Danforth M. Bickmore appointed to succeed him.

Mission Presidents Appointed: J. A. Cahoon has been released as president of the Tongan mission, and Newel J. Cutler appointed to succeed him.

Charles H. Hyde has been released as president of the Australian mission, and Clarence H. Tingey appointed to succeed him.

Ernest C. Rossiter has been released as president of the French mission, and Peter Rulon Christensen appointed to succeed him.

New Wards Organized: Elberta ward, Tintic stake. Echo ward, Summit stake; Midvale ward, East Jordan stake, divided into two wards to be known as Midvale First and Second wards; Green River ward, Carbon stake; Compton ward, Los Angeles stake; Hurricane North ward, St. George stake.

Bishop who has passed away during the past six months: William A. Stringer of Milburn ward, Lyman stake.

Stake clerks who have died: Nelson J. Hansen of Uinta stake; F. C. Mickelson of Shelley stake.

All of the retiring stake presidents retire with the confidence, love, respect and good will of the General Authorities. They have done most excellent work, some of them serving over a quarter of a century.

The Church today has 101 stakes of Zion; 940 wards; 72 independent branches.

When we speak of an independent branch we mean a branch with a president and two counselors. There are many small branches of wards in addition.

We have 1,012 organized wards and branches in the Church, from Canada on the north to Mexico on the south.

We have at the present time 27 missions in different parts of the world.

EXPENDITURES FOR CHURCH EDIFICES

The building program of the Church is progressing as rapidly this year as it did last year. There was expended last year for the erection of Church buildings and amusement halls throughout the Stakes of Zion over one million dollars of Church funds and a like amount by the people.

There has been expended in the first nine months ending October first, this year, $868,892.54. During the same period last year there was expended for stake and ward edifices $742,282.40. So that over $125,000 more money has been appropriated by the Church for the nine months ending October 1st this year, for the erection of public buildings, than for the same period last year. And the Saints have contributed a like amount. Therefore, over $1,700,000 has been expended up to date from the tithes and by the people in the various stakes for these purposes.

VISITS MISSIONS

It has fallen to my lot during the past six months to visit the following branches in the missions: Chicago, Ill., Washington, D. C., New York and Brooklyn, N. Y., Charleston and Huntington, West Virginia. I have had the pleasure of meeting the mission presidents and many of the elders and holding meetings in the places in the mission fields that I have mentioned.

BUILDINGS DEDICATED

In addition I have had the pleasure of holding meetings in many of the wards and in some of the stakes, and of dedicating meeting houses and amusement halls. I dedicated a chapel and amusement hall in Kirtland, New Mexico, in the Young stake of Zion. There has been erected there a very beautiful little ward meetinghouse, one of the finest in the Church. The people there are very much more prosperous than they were some years ago.

I was reminded of the wonderful change that has taken place since I went over the mountains from Alamosa down to Durango and then by wagon to Kirtland, with the late Brigham Young, Jr., forty-five years ago. We covered the same ground on this recent trip in between three and four hours, that it took us four or five days to cover with a team on my first visit.

I dedicated a splendid meetinghouse and amusement hall at Smithfield, in the Benson stake, a very fine building in the small town of Mapleton, in the Franklin stake, and a meetinghouse costing between sixty and seventy thousand dollars at Mar Vista, one of the wards of the Hollywood stake. The last named ward was organized only five months ago, its members having originally belonged to the Ocean Park ward. It is remarkable that in less than five months from the time the erection of the building was commenced, it was completed and paid for. Men, women and children worked on this building. The little children carried tiles for the roof; the good sisters nailed on laths; and some of our non-Mormon friends devoted time and attention to laboring there. The people did more than one-half of the total cost of erecting this building. I think it is the most remarkable accomplishment in that length of time of any building we have erected in the various wards. There were one thousand people in attendance at the dedicatory services, and by opening the doors between the amusement hall and the chapel, they were all comfortably seated. When the building was commenced the membership of the ward was less than four hundred people, and few of them have large means.

The Los Angeles stake has built a large amusement hall which is utilized for conference purposes, adjoining the Huntington Park ward meetinghouse. The combination of the meetinghouse and stake hall gives them one of the finest plants in the entire Church. This building for stake purposes and recreation has cost about $110,000, as I remember it.

BUILDINGS IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION

The Hollywood stake, in connection with the Wilshire ward, is erecting a most magnificent chapel and ward building and recreation hall combined, which will cost, I would say, in the neighborhood of $120,000.

We are now erecting in Portland, Oregon, a magnificent chapel that will cost us over $100,000. We own an entire block there.

The work that is being accomplished in erecting meetinghouses with the funds that the people pay into the various missions as tithing is very remarkable.

In the California and other missions many meetinghouses are being erected at the present time, and many have been erected. Several hundred thousand dollars have been expended in the last few years in the California mission alone.

It fell to my lot recently to attend the conference of the San Francisco stake held at Oakland, and also to hold a meeting at San Francisco. That stake is growing very rapidly indeed. So also are both of the stakes in Los Angeles.

I also had the privilege of attending a three days' hike or outing of the Mutuals of the San Francisco stake at Stinson Beach on the Pacific ocean, enjoying a very splendid time there.

We have erected a fine seminary building at Moscow, Idaho, facing the university buildings there. It is a very creditable structure, and the president and other officers of the university are very much delighted with it, and speak in the highest terms of our having done something along religious and educational lines for the members of our Church who are attending the university.

We are erecting a similar building near the Agricultural College in Logan.

The building program of the Church during the past nine months I feel is all that we could have asked or expected.

AN INTERESTING AND PROFITABLE TRIP

It fell to my lot with President Anthony W. Ivins, to be one of the guests of the Union Pacific Railroad and of the National Parks, in visiting the Grand Canyon of the Colorado and the scenic wonders of Southern Utah—Zion Canyon, Bryce Canyon, and Cedar Breaks—than which, to my mind, there is nothing finer in the world. There is a great tunnel and road being built, winding up over the mountains to come out of Zion Canyon, that is costing a vast sum of money, the government alone, as I remember it, having appropriated over a million dollars to build this tunnel. It will be the most remarkable and scenic route that any automobile has ever traveled over when it is completed. There will be an abundance of room for two automobiles to pass all through this great tunnel. It will save a vast amount of time which is now spent in traveling over the bad roads and through a strip of Arizona to get to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. Many miles will be saved, and as I say, it will be the greatest scenic road ever traveled over by automobiles, when it is completed.

I need not enter into any details here regarding these four scenic wonders. They are marvelous. They cannot be duplicated in any part of the wide world.

There were about two hundred guests, as I remember it, in the party —a special train from Los Angeles and a special train from Salt Lake City. I wish to express to President Carl R. Gray and to the chairman of the finance committee of the Union Pacific Railroad, Mr. Seger, and to Stephen T. Mather, the sincere gratitude of President Ivins and myself, Mayor John F. Bowman, Congressman Don B. Colton and many other people who were with us, citizens of Utah, for the most marvelous and wonderful trip that it has ever fallen to my lot to take.

The splendid compliments paid to our people for their accomplishments in Southern Utah by President Gray, Chairman Seger, Mr. Mather and others who spoke, filled our hearts with gratitude and thanks to them. We rejoice that the Latter-day Saints are coming into their own.

It fell to my lot after this dedication to travel to Los Angeles with over one hundred of the men who had the privilege of being on this excursion, and they were universally pleased with what they had seen. They spoke in the highest terms of the very splendid singing of our choir at Kanab, of the wonderful singing of our choir at Cedar City, and of the very fine singing of our Sunday School children at Kanab. They also spoke of the healthy, fine looking children and of the fine young men and the fine young ladies that they met on this trip, and I rejoiced in it.

I forgot to say in speaking of dedicating meetinghouses that I had the pleasure of getting up at 6 o'clock in the morning at the Grand Canyon and driving to Kanab where I arranged for the Sunday School to stay in session so that the visitors might meet them and that the children might sing a song for them. I also remained there for the afternoon meeting and dedicated the Kanab meetinghouse. These gentlemen were favorably impressed indeed with such a splendid meetinghouse in such a small town as Kanab. Several of them announced to me in Los Angeles and also in San Francisco, (as I had to go up there for a couple of days on business) that one of the outstanding things with which they were more pleased than anything else in making this trip to Southern Utah, was to become better acquainted with the Mormon people, with their aims, their objects and their accomplishments. Several said to me: "Mr. Grant, we have never seen anything but unfavorable notices regarding your people in magazines and newspapers." More than one of them said: "I am convinced that you will now have a couple of hundred non-Mormon missionaries sounding the praises of the Latter-day Saints and of the fine class of children, young men and young women and citizens generally that you have in your state."

I am very grateful, indeed, for the wonderful expenditure of money by the government of the United States, and by the Union Pacific Railroad of over $700,000 in building a magnificent lodge on the rim of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. It is an architectural dream.

THE LORD'S PROMISES TO BE FULFILLED

There is nothing that I am about to say that I have not said many times to the Latter-day Saints. We find in the very first revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants these words:

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.

"What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself; and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away, but shall all be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice or by the voice of my servants, it is the same."

I wish that I possessed the power to impress upon the hearts and the minds of the Latter-day Saints the necessity of becoming familiar with the commandments contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, and not only becoming familiar with them, but that I might have the power to impress upon their hearts and souls a determination to keep those commandments, to live them in very deed and in their every-day lives.

We find recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants that "there is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—and when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated."

BLESSINGS PREDICATED UPON OBSERVANCE OF WORD OF WISDOM

Some very wonderful promises are made to us if we observe the Word of Wisdom. The blessings will come if we observe the Word of Wisdom, and they will not come unless we do observe it. I feel at the present time that it is very appropriate for all Latter-day Saints to have their attention called (although I have called their attention to it time and time again) to this marvelous and remarkable Word of Wisdom. I shall not take the time to read but very little of it:

"To be sent greeting; not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom, showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days."

Nearly 90 per cent of all the time of the saints is spent in laboring for their temporal advancement, and I have announced before and I announce again that if the Latter-day Saints had observed the Word of Wisdom as a people, every one of them, from the day that they came into these valleys, our temporal salvation would have been assured. The money expended for those things which the Lord says are not good for us, which we have been taught to leave alone—namely, tea, coffee, tobacco and liquor—if every dollar of that money had been kept in our country we would have had one of the wealthiest states in this Union, and more of the circulating medium, namely, the hard coin, so to speak, than most any state in this western part of America.

It is estimated that every single dollar circulates around like the blood in the body of a man, being the vital circulating medium. Every dollar does one hundred dollars' worth of work in a year, and when you stop to think of the hundreds and thousands of dollars, running up I am sure at the present time perhaps to nearly a million dollars a year, that go out of this state by the breaking of the Word of Wisdom, certainly if we desire our temporal salvation and if we have faith in the words of God, every word of which he says shall be fulfilled, we should keep this law. The Lord has not made this an absolute commandment, but when our Heavenly Father, the one to whom we owe our lives and all that we possess and all our allegiance, desires us to do a thing, it seems to me that we as Latter-day Saints should do that thing more willingly even than though it come as an absolute command to us.

To my mind the most remarkable promise that any man can have is contained in this revelation:

"And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones;

"And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures."

Health is one of the first great blessings of God to man, and second only to health is wisdom. These two great blessings are promised to every man, woman and child in the Church of Christ that obeys the Word of Wisdom.

"And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint.

"And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

And I honestly believe that but for obeying the Word of Wisdom, when I was operated upon and the doctors said that blood poisoning in the third and last stage had set in, that I had to die—if I had not been an observer of the Word of Wisdom, so that the blood in my veins was pure and could overcome the poison, I would not be standing here before you, but more than thirty years ago my time would have come to pass from this life.

INFLUENCE OF THE PRIESTHOOD

We hear a good deal of talk and complaint about the influence of the Priesthood in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the domination of the people by those who preside over them. I want to read, more particularly for the benefit of those not of our faith, a revelation of Almighty God to Joseph Smith, when he was in Liberty jail, (and at one time when he was in that jail he was in chains, which shows that even the chains of the wicked could not restrain God from giving his word to the prophet whom he had raised up to establish the gospel of Jesus Christ in these last days). Speaking of the calling of the priesthood, he said:

"Behold, there are many called, but few are chosen. And why are they not chosen?

"Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—

"That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness.

"That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.

"Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the Saints, and to fight against God.

"We have learned by sad experience that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, they will immediately begin to exercise unrighteous dominion.

"Hence many are called, but few are chosen."

This is the part I wish to emphasize.

"No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood only by persuasion, by long suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned;

"By kindness, and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile—

"Reproving betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproved, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy;

"That he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death.

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever."

Is it a terrible thing to exercise the priesthood of the living God in the way that the Lord prescribes: "By kindness and gentleness"? That is the only way, and unless it is exercised in that way, Amen to the priesthood and authority of those who hold this priesthood in the Church of Christ.

COUNSEL REGARDING VOTING

It has been whispered around frequently, and I hear the murmur now, that the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ, standing at the head and holding the priesthood, desire this man or that man or the other man elected to office. The Presidency of the Church so far as they are concerned, allow every man, woman and child, that is old enough to vote, to vote according to his or her own conviction. But we do appeal to all men and women, realizing the responsibility resting upon them, to seek God our Heavenly Father to guide them politically as well as religiously, and to stand for right and for those things that are for the good of this nation. The Latter-day Saints believe absolutely that the Constitution of our country was written by inspired men. We believe in upholding the laws of our country. We believe in being obedient to the laws. One of the Articles of our Faith says that it is our duty to do so.

BELIEF REGARDING GOVERNMENTS AND LAWS

I am going to read a declaration of the belief of our Church regarding the governments and laws, issued by the Prophet Joseph Smith in August, 1835:

"We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man; and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, both in making laws and administering them, for the good and safety of society.

"We believe that no government can exist in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life.

"We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same; and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people if a republic, or the will of the sovereign.

"We believe that religion is instituted of God; and that men are amenable to him, and to him only, for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that human law has a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion: that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul.

"We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments; and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest; at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.

"We believe that every man should be honored in his station, rulers and magistrates as such, being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror; human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man; and divine laws given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.

"We believe that rulers, states, and governments have a right, and are bound to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their religious belief; but we do not believe that they have a right in justice to deprive citizens of this privilege, or proscribe them in their opinions, so long as a regard and reverence are shown to the laws and such religious opinions do not justify sedition nor conspiracy.

"We believe that the commission of crime should be punished according to the nature of the offense; that murder, treason, robbery, theft, and the breach of the general peace, in all respects, should be punished according to their criminality and their tendency to evil among men, by the laws of that government in which the offense is committed; and for the public peace and tranquility all men should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders against good laws to punishment."

I would like to emphasize that:

"All men should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders against good laws to punishment."

"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government."

I wish to emphasize that: "We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government."

—"whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied.

"We believe that all religious societies have a right to deal with their members for disorderly conduct, according to the rules and regulations of such societies; provided that such dealings be for fellowship and good standing; but we do not believe that any religious society has authority to try men on the right of property or life, or take from them this world's goods, or to put them in jeopardy of either life or limb, or to inflict any physical punishment upon them. They can only excommunicate them from their society, and withdraw from them their fellowship."

SENTIMENTS OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

In closing I wish to read a few words that I have read many times, (and I wish that we would get these words in our hearts and in our minds) from that great and wonderful man, Abraham Lincoln, who all Latter-day Saints believe firmly was raised up and inspired of God Almighty, and that he reached the presidency of the United States under the favor of our Heavenly Father, defeating Stephen A. Douglas, and fulfilling a prediction made by Joseph Smith to Stephen A. Douglas when he was an obscure country judge in Illinois.

Lincoln said:

"Let the people know the truth, and the country is safe."

"Let none falter who thinks he is right, and we will succeed."

"Let us dare to do our duty as we understand it."

"Bad laws, if they exist, should be repealed as soon as possible; still while they continue in force for the sake of example, they should be religiously observed."

Notice the language—"religiously observed."

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate, in the least particular, the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of seventy-six did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws, let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the law be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap. Let it be taught in schools, in seminaries and in colleges. Let it be written in primers, in spelling books and almanacs. Let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice. In short let it become the political religion of the nation."

Above all, let it become the religion of the Latter-day Saints. Why? Because it is in absolute and perfect harmony with the word of the living God to us in the revelations, every word of which, according to God, shall be fulfilled.

May God bless each and every one of you. May every soul within the sound of my voice or who may be listening in over the radio, who has received a testimony of the work in which you and I are engaged, who is able to testify that he or she knows that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the true and living God—may we each and all who have this knowledge live the gospel and set an example before all men of integrity and devotion to God and the laws of our country, that will preach the truth, which is of far more value than all the words that we can utter, is my humble prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus our Savior and Redeemer. Amen.

Professor Charles Kent sang a sacred solo, "Consider the lilies."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I rejoice with you, my brethren and sisters, that another opportunity is afforded us to meet together in general conference, in peace and enjoying the degree of prosperity with which we are blessed, as set forth in the report which has been made by President Grant. As a preface to the brief remarks which I desire to make—and I pray that what I say may be directed through your faith by the Spirit of the Lord—I desire to read from the words of the Prophet Jeremiah:

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

"Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

"Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

"Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it."

According to our chronology, my brethren and sisters, more than two thousand years have passed since the Lord, through his servant Jeremiah, delivered this message to the House of Israel. Preceding the paragraphs which I have read, the Lord says:

"To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumcised and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it. * * *

"Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush."

REFUSED TO LISTEN

At the time to which this scripture refers, the Israelitish people, after their deliverance from the Egyptian captivity, after the Lord by the matchless power of his outstretched arm had given them full possession of the Promised Land, had become indifferent to the words of their prophets, had departed from the path which the Lord had marked out for them, and the prophet calls them back to the old paths which is the good way. The promise is that if they will walk therein they shall find peace to their souls; but they said: "We will not walk therein." When the watchmen whom the Lord had set over them sounded the trumpet of alarm, they refused to listen. This attitude resulted in the scattering of the House of Israel to the four winds of heaven, as his prophets had declared that they would be scattered.

Thank the Lord that as the scattering of Israel had been declared so did the Lord definitely promise that they should be gathered again and restored to the promised land, and the fulfilment of that promise is near at hand.

I have been asking myself the question recently: Aren't we at the present time in a condition somewhat similar to that of Ancient Israel at the time to which this scripture refers? From a small number of people at the time they left Palestine and went into Egypt they had become a great kingdom, the influence of which under the reign of King Solomon was felt throughout the then known world. The conditions with which they were surrounded during their early development had changed. They felt the strength of their own power, and depended less upon the arm of the Lord. The old paths had been replaced by modern roads, broader and more easy to follow. They had listened to the blast of the trumpet until the sound had become monotonous. They preferred the timbrel and the harp which brought pleasure without restraint. The word of the Lord to them had become obsolete, supplanted by more modern theories. Are we aware—and when I say “we” I am not applying my remarks to the members of my own Church alone, but to the splendid men and women who make up the citizenship of the United States—that we too live in a land of promise, that it is through the grace and mercy of God our Father that we have been brought here and made participants in its privileges and blessings? Do we people of America know that certain unchangeable decrees of God our Heavenly Father apply to this land as they apply to Palestine? Let us examine and see.

A CHOICE LAND

According to the manner in which we count time, it was four thousand and forty-six years ago, about two hundred years after the deluge, that a small number of people under the leadership of inspired men, left the city of Babylon on the banks of the Euphrates river in the valleys of Mesopotamia and found their way to the American continent. As they started on their long pilgrimage, the word of the Lord came to them as follows:

“And the Lord would not suffer that they should stop beyond the sea in the wilderness, but he would that they should come forth even unto the land of promise, which was choice above all other lands, which the Lord God had preserved for a righteous people.

“And he had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fulness of his wrath should come upon them.

“And now, we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise; and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fulness of his wrath shall come upon them. And the fulness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity.

“For behold, this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God. And it is not until the fulness of iniquity among the children of the land, that they are swept off.

"And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God—that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fulness come, that ye may not bring down the fulness of the wrath of God upon you as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done.

"Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ, who hath been manifested by the things which we have written."

It would be interesting, my brethren and sisters, and instructive, to follow this colony of people in their migration from the Old World until their arrival in America, the land which the Lord had promised to them for an inheritance.

The story of their development into a great nation is told, the building of many cities; how they departed from the way of the Lord to the worship of idols, the wars which ensued, because of conflict for the control of the government which was established, and their final destruction as a nation; but time will not permit.

More than one thousand five hundred years had elapsed since the people referred to had departed from the old world, when another colony, under the leadership of another prophet, left Jerusalem during the reign of Zedekiah, the last king of Judea, and after many wanderings and tribulations they crossed the great waters and came to America. As they landed upon this continent the Lord, through his prophet, delivered the following message to them. I read this because I desire that you shall hear it as it is and understand it. The prophet who had led them out, in referring to their journeys, said:

BLESSED UNTO THE RIGHTEOUS

"Notwithstanding our afflictions, we have obtained a land of promise, a land which is choice above all other lands; a land which the Lord God hath covenanted with me should be a land for the inheritance of my seed. Yea, the Lord hath covenanted this land unto me and to my children forever, and also all those who should be led out of other countries by the hand of the Lord.

"Wherefore, I, Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come unto this land save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord.

"Wherefore this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so, it shall be because of iniquity; for if iniquity shall abound cursed shall be the land for their sakes, but unto the righteous it shall be blessed forever."

As these latter people penetrated and explored the land to which they had come they report that they found a portion of the surface of it covered with the bones of men and animals, with the ruins of great cities and buildings, a land which they say had been populated by a people as numerous as the hosts of Israel. This was all that remained of the colony which had come from Babylon more than one thousand five hundred years before.

PROPHECY FULFILLED

The history of this latter people, who also became numerous and highly civilized, was not less tragic than that of their predecessors. They too were highly favored of the Lord. In their weakness they served him and kept his commandments, but when through his protection and blessing they had become wealthy and powerful they turned from him to the worship of idols, and refused to walk in the old paths or listen to the trumpet which called them back to God. They fought over the control of government until they degenerated into the tribal conditions in which they were found when Columbus landed upon the shores of the new world.

The time had arrived when the Lord would again bring people to this continent, when he was to again undertake the establishment of a righteous nation upon this promised land.

More than two thousand years before Columbus landed at San Salvador, prophets had definitely declared his coming; more than two thousand years before the landing of the pilgrims at Plymouth the Lord had declared that they should come that they might be free from the bonds of religious intolerance and the shackles of kingcraft, that a nation of free men might be established here, a nation over which neither kingcraft nor priestcraft shall ever reign; a nation where the majesty and authority of the law, which God our Father would inspire the people themselves to enact and administer, is to reign supreme.

OUR SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

Have you ever thought, my brethren and sisters, of the miracle of the establishment of this government, and the blessings which you enjoy under it as compared with other people? The Lord did not give the dominance of the United States to a certain race, that the traditions, language and prejudices of the old world might be established here as they were in all of the great country to the south of us.

To the devoted faith of the Puritan separatists of New England was added the industry and patriotism of the Dutch reformers who had settled at New York, the gallantry and chivalry of the English cavaliers of Virginia, and the light-hearted energy and patriotism of the French at New Orleans. Protestants, Catholics and people without church affiliations united together, just the combination of elements to give us the Declaration of Independence which won our freedom, and the Constitution, which is the foundation upon which our system of government rests.

These men, whom the old world referred to as a mob, declared that in this country all men should be equal before the law. They declared that men were born with certain rights which could not in justice be taken from them, among which was the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, or not worship at all if they so desired; that all men were entitled to life, to liberty, the possession of property, freedom of speech and the press, and above all and most important, that they should enact and administer their own laws and that they should not be deprived of any of these privileges without due process of law. The most sacred privilege granted us was the right of franchise by which every citizen was entitled to cast his ballot for the men who were to represent him in enacting and administering the law. It is upon the proper use of this sacred heritage, bequeathed to us by our fathers, that the perpetuity of our government depends. It may declare war or maintain peace, it may bring peace and good order to society, or tribulation, confusion and final dissolution. It controls your property and mine. We come or go at its behest. Our very life depends upon the proper use of it.

A PUBLISHED APPEAL

In January of the present year the Presidency of the Church published an appeal to the members of the Church throughout the world, and to liberty-loving people everywhere, from which I desire briefly to read. It was headed: "Can This Be True?"

"Can it be possible that reports which reach us concerning the lawlessness, immorality and graft which are said to exist in Salt Lake City and other localities in our state, are true?

"Have we among our judges, attorneys and peace officers those who regard these iniquitous offenses against society with apathy and indifference?

"Are we to believe that in this community of ours large sums of money are regularly collected which are disbursed by trusted agents among city, county, state or federal officers, who have been appointed or elected by the voice of the people to hunt down, prosecute and rid the community of lawless disturbers of the peace, violate the trust reposed in them, and for money seek means by which these criminals may be liberated, rather than convicted?

"Do men with brazen effrontery perjure themselves while on the witness stand, in order that the law may be nullified and the guilty go free? Do any of our judges, knowing this, allow the perjurer to go without rebuke or punishment?

"Are we losing our high ideals regarding the honor of men and the virtue of women? Do we ignore the existence of houses of prostitution and assignation into which virtuous women and innocent girls are being lured, or forcibly taken, to be ruined by wicked licentious libertines both white and black?

"Laws which are enacted for the protection of society have no value except when they are administered in righteousness and justice, and they cannot be so administered if dishonest men occupy administrative offices.

"The Lord says: 'When the wicked rule, the people mourn.' Wise men, good men, patriotic men are to be found in all communities, in all political parties, among all creeds. None but such men should be chosen. * * *

"Without beneficent laws, righteously administered, the foundations of civilization crumble, anarchy reigns, decay and dissolution follow.

"We call upon all members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints throughout the world to honor the laws of God, and obey and uphold the law of the land; and we appeal to good men and women everywhere, regardless of creed, party affiliation, race or condition, to join with us in an effort to put into operation the words of Lincoln, the great emancipator, that our country may continue to be a light to the world, a loyal, law-abiding, God-fearing Nation.

"HEDER J. GRANT,
ANTHONY W. IVINS,
CHARLES W. NIBLEY,
First Presidency."

HAVE NOT CHANGED

Since the publication of that which I have just read it would appear that conditions have not changed for the better.

Another period has arrived when the people of the United States are to elect men who are to represent them in both legislative and administrative branches of the government, both state and national; a time when the citizenship of our country are to exercise this divine right of franchise. If reports which come to us are true, vast sums of money are being collected to be used for the purpose of influencing the vote of the people in favor of one or the other of the great parties that are striving for the control of government. We are told that the expenditures will be limited to eight millions of dollars. We are also informed that this limit may be greatly exceeded. Can it be possible that we have reached a point in our history when the ballot, this sacred heritage which has come to us from our fathers, has become a thing of barter and trade, that it can be purchased with money? Are the liberties of the American people on the auction block to be sold to the highest bidder? Have we lifted up a golden calf (as ancient Israel did) to which the American people are commanded to bow down in worship? God forbid.

To my mind the man who would sell his vote for money should forfeit his franchise forever. Is the man who sells his vote less guilty than the man who tenders money for it? Is he who tenders money less guilty than the individual who, having knowledge of the crime, enters no word of protest? I cannot shift the responsibility from one to the other. All are equally guilty.

Is it possible that during the last ten years lawlessness has increased in the United States until statistics show that we are the most lawless civilized nation in the world? Only yesterday the public press, our own press, declared that a large number of policemen in the city of Philadelphia, "the City of Friends," a city established under the religious impulses of one of the most devout sects of the world, the city of my mother's birth, the city that provided the men under whom my early life was tutored, that these policemen, chosen to protect the people from the acts of lawless men, are under arrest charged with levying tribute on gangsters of the underworld for protection guaranteed them by the police who were under oath to bring them to justice. From the halls of Congress to the town constable fraud in public life has found its way.

CONDITION NOT HOPELESS

Do not understand me to infer that the condition of our country is hopeless, or that money has not its place in human welfare. My remarks have no application to the high-minded, honest, capable men who are engaged in public life, and there are many of them in both national and state affairs. I believe in the soul of the American people and that they will rise in their majesty when the truth becomes known and drive dishonest men from the temples of justice. Lincoln said:

"Let the people know the truth and the country is safe." The trouble is that it is almost impossible to get the truth before the people.

In every state in the Union, in every county in these states, there are men who live above this criticism, patriotic, true Americans.

Do not understand that I decry or under-estimate the vast good that comes to humankind from the use of money and the proper acquisition of it through industry and economy, but when it is used to corrupt the politics of our country, to purchase the honor of men, the virtue of women, or to interfere with and influence the public mind away from the paths of justice and righteousness it then becomes the "root of all evil."

I would not for earthly gain alienate the friendship of the many friends which I have and through acquaintance with whom my life has been enriched. They are among Catholics, Protestants, Jews and people professing no affiliation with the church. They are in all political parties; men whom I love because of their manhood and Americanism. I am not talking politics. I have no candidate, no political interests at stake. I am speaking directly to the people of the Church of which I am a member. It is my duty, as a shepherd of the flock of Christ, to warn them of the danger which threatens; and if I fail in my duty and the danger comes upon them and they perish, the Lord has said that he will require their blood at my hands, and at the hands of every other shepherd of the flock, who, knowing his duty, fails to perform it.

THE MORMON PIONEERS

It was the impulse of religion that brought the Mormon pioneers to these valleys. Among them my early life was passed. It was their example and teaching which fixed in my mind the ideals that have governed my life, in both religious and civil affairs. They taught me that an office-seeker, whether for political or church advancement, was a dangerous man. They taught me that offices of trust should seek the man and not the man the office; that men of unquestioned integrity should be selected for public trust.

Profoundly religious, they taught me to hold in reverential respect the religion of other people. They taught me that the institutions of my country were of greater value than human life, and should be upheld and defended against all enemies, be they foreign or domestic. They were not egotists, these men among whom my youth was spent, whose life was confined to their own restricted environment; they understood the past, they lived for the present and saw the future. They knew that other men found the Lord, if they sought him, just as they found him here in the solitudes of these everlasting hills. They were not Pharisees who magnified the faults of others while blind to their own imperfections, but men who acknowledging their own weaknesses, spread the mantle of charity over those of their fellows. They were not men who sought the downfall of their neighbor that they might rise to greater heights, but just brave, God-fearing men who knew that the Lord was knocking at the doors of the hearts of all men, and that if they would only keep the latchstring on the outside, as it always hung on their cabin doors, the Lord would come in and bring peace to their souls. They were men who walked in the old paths, the paths which our Lord and Master had marked out for us, and which, if we follow them, will lead us back into his presence.

TO THOSE OLD PATHS

It is to these old paths, my brethren and sisters, that I call you back; not to endure the hardships which they endured; not to cut the grain which grows in your fields, with a sickle, and to thrash it with a flail, as I have done; not to cut the hay which grows in your meadows, with a scythe, not to study your lessons by a tallow dip or a pine knot, as I have done, because there was nothing better to be had; not to print your daily paper on a handpress, or travel to conference with an ox-team, as many of your fathers and grandfathers did. Progress and development which have come to the world during our life-time have made these things obsolete, and we do not desire to call them back. But the truth does not change with time. It is always the same. The same obligations of righteousness, justice, mercy and charity which have been in force from the beginning are still in force. There is no other path that will lead us back to Christ our Lord, for he is the light, the life and the way, and it is his word that I have quoted to you.

Now, my brethren and sisters, you who familiarize yourselves with existing conditions know that I have not exaggerated or over-estimated the danger which threatens us. The cure is so simple and so easy, it is strange that we do not readily find it—just to return to obedience to the word of the Lord, just to walk in those old paths of righteousness that never change. If we do so they will lead us back into the presence of God our Father, where we will be crowned with glory, immortality and eternal life.

I pray for this, for you, for myself and for all good men and women, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. NIBLEY

It is always a refreshing sight to witness the large congregation of Latter-day Saints who regularly attend these conferences—men and women who come filled with a determination to serve the Lord and to help build up his kingdom; who know in their souls that the Lord has spoken in these last days through his servants, that he has revealed his will through the ministration of holy angels, heavenly beings, and that he has established his priesthood in the Church with divine authority to give guidance to the people.

I endorse most heartily the remarks of our President, Heber J. Grant and President Anthony W. Ivins. They are for our benefit and our blessing if we will follow them. I am always glad to report that the Church is growing, that it is increasing in numbers; and I believe that we as a people are increasing in faith. We have heard from the President as to the good work you are performing in the building of meeting-houses and the amount of tithing of the Church that has been contributed for that purpose. A people no more numerous, no more rich than we are, who will contribute more than two million dollars a year for the building of meetinghouses have a whole lot of good in them. The Latter-day Saints believe their religion after all. We do not practice it as we should. We are not perfect by any manner of means. But we and our fathers before us are of those who have listened to the voice of the Spirit and are really converted to the truth.

A MORE LIBERAL FEELING

During the last week or two I have been away in the Northwestern States mission, visiting with President Sloan, and I have noted with great pleasure the growth and development of the work in that section of the country. I have noted, too, the growth of a more liberal feeling among the people towards the Latter-day Saints. I might almost say there is a spiritual awakening; for in Idaho the governor of the state and other officials in their remarks, made plainly manifest that they desire spiritual thought, spiritual teaching, in connection with their schools and colleges. They said that these things were lacking and they were glad to see that in that state our Church was fostering spiritual development, spiritual thought. Not only is it true in that section of our land, but I think it is true in all sections of it. People are beginning to learn after all that the material alone is not sufficient, and that they must turn unto God.

As we have heard, the Lord has declared that the people, if they are to be maintained on this land, must be a people who will serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ. And I believe that slowly and gradually there is a more liberal spirit growing among the people, with an inclination in their hearts towards the things of God. The Lord will bring testimonies which will foster this feeling. After the testimony of the servants of God comes the testimony of earthquakes, the testimony of the sea, heaving beyond its bounds, through perhaps the force of terrific winds; the testimony of destruction here and there. These I believe will be more manifest and will more and more bring the people to a realization that they of themselves are powerless, and that they must depend as a people and as a nation upon God.

NOT SO FAVORABLE

We are delighted to know that neighbors feel so well towards us. But I want to remark here, my brethren and sisters, that they have told us things not quite so favorable, even material things. They go around through our country (and there will be tens and hundreds of thousands of tourists in the next few years, traveling all over our country, north and south) and they see in some of our villages and towns the poorest kind of fences, the worst gardens, decaying orchards and an abundance of weeds, which they ought not to see at all. We should improve and beautify Zion, so that people can say that the Latter-day Saints are forward-looking, up-to-date people; and that they have their homes, their gardens, their fences, their orchards and all pertaining to them as spick and span as you could find anywhere in the country. That ought to be, but it is not so yet. Therefore, you sisters, get after your husbands to take up or to do away with the old pole fences and put something else there that looks a little more respectable and modern.

THE CALL FOR MISSIONARIES

The favorable sentiment prevailing throughout the country concerning the Latter-day Saints calls for more missionaries. Missionaries are wanted everywhere. You bishops of wards and presidents of stakes, do you hear me? All over the Church the call is to you for missionaries and still more missionaries. Write it down and do not forget it.

DREAM MINES

We have letters coming to us in the President's office concerning mining and mines, and among others, "dream" mines. Too many of our people, after thirty or forty years experience, are still foolish enough to invest money in "dream" mines. If there is any man here or anywhere who will tell me that a "dream" mine has ever made money or is a success financially I would like to be informed of it. I have never heard of it.

SPEND YOUR MONEY WISELY

So our advice to our people now, as it always has been, is to spend your money wisely, not foolishly. Build up and beautify the country; beautify your homes. Spend your money where you know it is going to do some good. But mining, as President Young said in his time, is for those who understand it. Of course mining is good business. We need the metals, gold, silver, iron—they are all good. But if you have a farm, you tend to your farm. If you are in the dairy business attend to that. Build that up. Do not go speculating in something that you know nothing about; you are apt to lose your money every time. I speak from experience, for I have lost some myself, though not much; I was rather cautious, being born Scotch, and did not venture too much. But I lost what I did venture in mining.

I remember talking to Philo Farnsworth at least forty years ago, he was a successful mining man at that time; and I said:

"Philo, I am thinking of investing in a mine out at Baker City (where I was then living); what do you think about it?" I told him of the kind of mine it was represented to be.

He said, "Well, if you want to gamble, it is all right. But if you really want to gamble find a faro game. There are only fifty-two cards in a deck, so that in a faro game you have one chance in fifty-two, because you might hit the right card and there are only fifty-two of them. But in the mining game you have one chance in a hundred."

I took his advice and stayed out of mining. And so, I repeat, let mining or other business that we know nothing about alone, and especially "dream" mines. It is simply a wild dream, and you had better let it alone.

PEACE IS COMING

The winter is coming on, my brethren and sisters. Always we have men out of employment. Let me call the attention of the bishops of wards and presidents of stakes, the leading men of means in the communities, to the importance of trying to provide employment in all your settlements, towns and cities, to help those who are out of employment. Provide work for them if you can. If each one would try to help his neighbor a little, help his brother, we would be a better community and there would be more satisfaction and peace in it. That struggle for peace down through all the ages, which has been sung about, prayed about and prophesied about, is coming still. The world is getting nearer to the millennium. There may be terrible catastrophies, terrible judgments, wonderful things coming upon the earth after the testimony of the elders; but peace also is coming. Our nation is striving for it. Other nations of the earth are signing up contracts, which may not amount to so much now, but it is all in the direction of peace, and I believe that the time will actually come when men will beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks, and nation will not take up war against nation, neither will they learn war any more. That time is coming, that blessed time that Burns, the poet, 150 years ago sang of when he wrote:

"Then let us pray that come it may
As come it will for a' that—

* * * * *

That Man to Man, the world o'er, Shall brothers be for a' that!"

Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "High On the Mountain Top."
The benediction was offered by Elder Joseph F. Merrill, Superintendent of Church Schools.

The conference adjourned until 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The meeting was opened promptly at 2 o'clock p. m. by President Heber J. Grant, who announced that the congregation would sing the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Nathan Ricks.

A solo was sung by Mrs. Mamie Stark, "My faith looks up to Thee."

ELDER HUGH J. CANNON

Former President of the Swiss and German Mission

It will not be possible, my brethren and sisters, to describe my feelings in being called thus suddenly to address this vast congregation. I sincerely pray that the Lord will illuminate my mind while I occupy this position.

As President Grant stated, I have returned rather recently from presiding over the Swiss and German Mission. I can report conditions in that field as being very favorable. It is true the people are not flocking to the Church in such great numbers as came during the distressing years immediately succeeding the war, but still we are making very satisfactory headway there, and the members of the Church are faithful. I think it would not be possible to find anywhere a body of saints who are more exact in the payment of their tithes and offerings than are the Swiss and German people. It would not be easy nor perhaps possible to find a people who are more willing to contribute to the missionaries. Some of the things which we see there are extremely touching. My heart has been made to rejoice, and still it has caused a feeling of humility to come over me, when I have witnessed what our members and friends are willing to do for those who come into their midst to preach the gospel. It is not an uncommon thing for members of the Church to share their last crust of bread with the missionaries. I have known of cases where men and women have sat up all night in chairs so that the elders might have a comfortable bed in which to sleep. That spirit is broadcast among the German-speaking people, both in the Swiss-German and in the German-Austrian missions; and when we see their fidelity, their faith, their willingness to do for us, naturally it is a spur to our missionaries to do the very best they can.

The elders laboring in those fields are sincerely anxious to spread the gospel truth. I have been impressed with the quality of our representatives who have come out into the world. Of course I am better acquainted with those who have come to the particular field where I presided. They proved to be a very faithful and devoted band of brethren, willing to give their all for the advancement of truth. In my opinion there is a noticeable improvement in the quality of missionaries now going into the field, and this thought has impressed me very deeply: the better educated the missionary is, speaking generally, the more faith he has. We have had quite a number of men in the field who were college graduates, men who have taken their degrees from the Universities of the State and of the Church, and those men, I can say, without an exception, were unusual missionaries. It was from their ranks very largely that district presidents were chosen. Naturally this was not always the case, because sometimes, while they had the education, they did not have the gift of handling men as did some others who had not made quite so much progress along scholastic lines. But those who had taken their college degrees were a very fine body of brethren. So I have come home prepared to recommend to all our young boys that so far as possible they should finish their university work, though not necessarily before they go on missions. Sometimes it fits into the scheme of things better if they go before they have finished, but I think our young men should have the ambition to graduate from our universities, or at least go as far in educational lines as it is possible for them to go.

I am impressed, as has already been said, with the excellent quality of the men who go out, and impressed also with the sacrifice which their parents are willing to make in order to keep them in the field. I recall now a mother whose letter to her sons was shown me. It was my practice to write twice a year to the parents of the missionaries in the field. One couple had two sons there, one already a district president, the other subsequently to become one. I wrote complimenting them on the character of their sons and telling of the splendid work they were doing. I saw a letter from the mother written to her boys in which she said, "When Brother Cannon's letter came I was washing. I was tired, and felt as though I could not possibly face the duties that were upon me. But when that letter came I went into the other room and read it and re-read it and cried for pure joy."

"That is a feeling which people in the world cannot understand, how a woman can cry with joy because she, in connection with her husband, has to send her sons about seventy dollars a month and be deprived of their association and the help which they could give on the farm. But she did cry and it was for pure joy. We who have had similar experiences can understand her feelings. All who are here know that her joy was genuine and real. Many cases of that kind might be related if time permitted.

Our missionary boys are hedged about here at home, they are watched over with the utmost care as they grow to maturity. Then they go out into the world, many of them to countries where alcoholic beverages are almost as easy to obtain as water, and yet these boys do not drink. They are surrounded by men, and in this modern age, by women, very many of whom use tobacco, still these boys do not smoke. They come in contact with people whose moral ideals are not high, men and even women who do not look upon virtue and morality as we look upon it. They are shining marks for the dissolute, for the wicked, for those who would lead the servants of the Almighty astray; and still they remain pure and clean and come home with heads erect, able to look any man, any woman, any child in the face. That is the character of missionaries with whom it has been my privilege to labor.

I should like to say a word or two about the missionary after his return. While he is in the field he is watched over by his mission president and by his district president. His parents, his bishop, perhaps the president of his stake, are writing letters to him, urging him to do right. They are praying for him. He is engaged in his Master's service. He realizes that he is no longer representing himself, but is representing a great cause, and he feels ashamed to do things which are wrong. He is careful, is humble. His whole thought is concentrated on righteousness and he learns to live it. Then at the end of his mission he is released to come home. You know what happens. The bishops, I am sure, do all they can to find a place for him. But it is often a fact that this boy who has been the biggest figure in the circle which he occupied, after his return, drops completely into the background, too frequently out of sight. I haven't any criticism to offer to the officers of the stakes and wards. I know from experience how difficult it is to find employment, either secular or in a Church capacity, for this army of men returning from the mission field. It is not always easy, sometimes not possible, to put them into positions of responsibility. But I do think they are deserving of all the thought and care and attention that we can possibly give them. There is a reaction, a relaxation, when they are released. Perhaps many of you know how it is to be engaged in active service and then all at once not have anything to do. You frequently have that experience right here at home. When you have had a difficult task to perform, a sermon to deliver perhaps, which weighed heavily upon your mind and frightened you, a spirit of relaxation came over you when that work was done. That is the situation with our missionaries.

I had a young man in the field say to me once, "If I ever get into serious trouble it will be on Tuesday." I was a little surprised at the statement and asked, "Why?" He said, "Because I am keyed up the latter part of the week. Knowing I have to speak on Sunday, I am humble and prayerful; I plead with the Lord to help me with my work, that it may be done well, and then on Sunday night after that sermon is finished I am inclined to relax. Monday finds me completely relaxed, and after Monday night or Tuesday I am the weakest that I am during the entire week. After Tuesday I begin to worry about Sunday again."

This, in my judgment, illustrates the general condition of our returned missionaries. They are relaxed. They often feel, and of course improperly, that they are no longer representing a people, but are merely human individuals, simply units in the Church, and what they do will not reflect serious discredit upon the Church. That splendid and sustaining thought which was with them during their missions, that they must be true because of the Church, leaves them when they return home.

I would like to suggest to parents that when your boys come home you do not feel that their feet are safely anchored to the rock of truth, but feel that they need your prayers just as much at home and perhaps more than they did in the mission field; feel that you should watch over them, talk with them and plead with them just as much as before they went, or during the time they were absent. I may take an exaggerated view of this matter, but it seems to me that the returned missionary is one of the biggest problems the Church has before it. I would not infer that any large percentage of our missionaries go astray. That is not the case, but if we take time to consider the matter, we will see that more of them become careless after they come home, a far greater number, than do wrong in the mission field. The percentage of those who fall into serious transgression in the mission field is very small, almost insignificant. Of course it is larger than it should be, for as long as one man goes astray the number is too large, but in this particular we have little cause for concern. At home, while the number of delinquents is not extremely large it far exceeds the delinquency abroad. And so I say in behalf of the returned missionary, to bishops and ward and stake officers, to those who preside in quorums, and particularly to parents, watch the returned missionary, try to make him feel that there is a place for him, perhaps not a place where he can preside, but that there is a place in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ here just as much as there is abroad. He comes home full of faith, bearing testimony that he knows this message is true, and he does know it. I have heard boys say that they know just as well as the Prophet Joseph knew, that he saw the Father and the Son. They do not understand the gospel as he did; they do not comprehend its real significance as did the Prophet, but the knowledge of its divinity is theirs. So I pray for them and pray for us all, that we may understand the magnitude of this great work which is entrusted to our care, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH

Of the Presiding Bishopric

I have been very much interested in the remarks of this conference thus far, especially those referring to the Word of Wisdom and the training of missionaries. Last week more than sixty young men and women left the Missionary Home for the mission field. During one examination period, the Word of Wisdom was discussed, and from the statements made it was apparent that such teachings have had a guiding influence in their lives. One young lady, a mere slip of a girl, made this statement: "The Lord cannot work with those who are unclean mentally or physically." Living according to the teachings of the Word of Wisdom gives us a fitting background to prepare us to receive his blessings. I am afraid there are a great many of us who have not learned this one lesson; it is not a new doctrine, but is embodied in the teachings of the Savior and the apostles of old. We read in I Cor. III:16, 17, 18:

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

"If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

"Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise."

If we could be so impressed with these thoughts that they would always be manifest in our thoughts and actions, our faith would be increased and our labors extended to the benefit not only of ourselves but our associates and fellow Church workers. Has it occurred to us that perhaps many blessings needful for our welfare are withheld from us? The Lord has commanded that we support the laws of the land because the constitutional laws of the land make us free. In the days of Kirtland, the Lord said he was not well pleased with many who were in the Church.

"Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the Church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now.

"But behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I required at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, * * * and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom."

Are we as individuals seeking to be united as a Church? Are we exemplary in our teachings by word of mouth and in our actions? We need only to look about us to see on every hand a tendency to break the Word of Wisdom. Perhaps as individuals we feel that because we are trying to live according to this law we are meeting the requirements of the law, but to those who have received the priesthood comes also a responsibility of not only complying with the law as individuals but of laboring unceasingly with those who are careless or indifferent, for Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. Let us remember that we are "temples of the living God" and that God cannot work with us when we are unclean mentally or physically.

The Word of Wisdom makes this clear to us and offers a most wonderful promise, "adapted to the capacity of the weak and the weakest of all saints who are or can be called saints," and we are assured that through obedience we shall be made strong, mentally, spiritually and physically. Let us study it and so apply its principles in our daily lives that the influence thereof will be felt throughout the land. Sometimes we become impatient because the results we hoped for are not apparent immediately; sometimes in our zeal we make mistakes of judgment—it may be in business matters, our farming operations, or in the conduct of our community affairs—if we are living according to the laws of God we shall have the spirit of discernment and under the guiding influence of that spirit will find that such experiences are as bread cast upon the water, for after many days we shall find it to be a blessing, "for the Spirit of God knoweth the things of God and the spirit of man knoweth only the things of man." When we learn as a Church to apply these teachings, we will overcome such difficulties, and happiness will be our lot; for we shall do away with fault-finding, contention, and indifference, and in the spirit and power of the holy priesthood we shall lend a helping hand to those who find it difficult to meet the requirements of the laws of God, especially the young men and women who are now living in an age of freedom, more so than in any other period of the world's history. The Lord never intended that they should not have pleasure, for "man is that he might have joy"; that their enjoyment might be wholesome it is necessary that they be properly guarded, for "truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." We sow the seed in the spring-time but know not what the harvest will be in the fall; the result is generally measured by the faith, the diligence, and the labor we put forth. This has always been the law and will be until the purposes of the Lord are fulfilled. A writer of the Old Testament expresses the thought beautifully as follows in the 11th chapter of Ecclesiastes:

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days.

* * * * *

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

"Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

"But if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness; for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

"Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for childhood and youth are vanity."

That we may more nearly meet these conditions a re-adjustment has been made in our priesthood and recreational activities. The Sabbath morning—the beginning of the Sabbath Day—has been designated as the study and recitation period for religious exercises. During the Sabbath School period we should be free from cares, our labors should be put away and our hearts turned to the things of God. Provision is made that from the oldest to the youngest all may come under this influence; the whole family may go in a body and find spiritual activity suitable to their age and condition in life, with the influence of the priesthood of God the controlling power.

Tuesday night has been set aside as a time for planning and reporting on priesthood, Church, and community activities. It is desirable, therefore, that each person holding the priesthood, whether a deacon or a high priest, have some specific work assigned to him each week, "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."

I thank the Lord for a testimony of his Gospel, that I am permitted to labor in his great cause in authority of his holy priesthood which has been conferred upon me through his authorized servants. I rejoice in this work and in the opportunity I have of working with you in the furtherance of his Gospel. May we ever seek to keep his commandments and strive earnestly to do our part, that we may magnify our calling, is my prayer, which I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may be inspired by the Lord, and to that end I ask for an interest in your faith and prayers.

In the missionary work in which I am engaged it is always refreshing and is a very great inspiration to us to come to conference and to get into contact with the body of the Church and its leaders. You realize, my brethren and sisters, that frequently for six months at a time we are on the firing line. We are away from the wards and the stakes with their activities, and out of contact, except of course by correspondence, with the auxiliary organizations of the Church and that which is going on at home. Therefore, I say again it is refreshing and inspirational, and I think is of great benefit to the work that we are endeavoring to carry forward, that we should assemble with you in conference. I thank the Lord for this privilege.

I feel especially thankful to the Lord today for my membership in this Church. I feel especially thankful to him for the assurance that I have in my heart that the gospel is true. I thank the Lord that I am not in doubt, for I find a great many people in the world in doubt concerning the means and the way of salvation. I wish to bear you my testimony that I do know that the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, is restored to the earth in this day and age. I do know that the Lord spoke to Joseph Smith and that he raised him up and made of him a prophet through whom he effected this great restoration.

I sense the responsibility of preaching the gospel of salvation unto the children of men, for as I peruse the scripture I find that it is the intention of the Lord that the gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and he has decreed that it should be before he should come again to earth. That responsibility rests upon us as a Church. Those who hold the priesthood hold it for the purpose of administering in the things that pertain to the salvation of the children of men, as well as themselves.

I rejoice in the faithful labors of the missionaries who are sent into the field. It is marvelous to me as I contemplate that year after year we keep up the great force that we have out there; that the brethren at home are able to find the young men to fill the vacancies caused by the release of those who are in the field. When I contemplate the conditions of the world today and the environments that encroach upon us as a Church, the evil if you please (not all that is in the world is good—and there are many temptations that our young folks are beset with in their working hours and in their school life and everywhere that they mingle), I marvel that out of this comparatively small body of people, when you come to compare it with the world at large, the Lord is able to select and send out that great number of young men and young women who are worthy to bear his name and to preach the principles of the everlasting gospel to the people of the world. They do not all come prepared, my brethren and sisters. They are not all versed in the scriptures. A great deal of the teaching they have received at home has been along lines that do not particularly qualify them for preaching the gospel. But they come with faith in their hearts, they come with a desire to serve, and the vast majority of them come with a strong testimony that the gospel is true; and they teach it from that standpoint. They teach it as though they know whereof they speak. They have faith that the principles of the gospel that they are sent to teach are indeed true and a means of salvation unto our Father's children.

We have, my brethren and sisters, a message of repentance to declare to the world today. I rejoice in the teachings of this conference so far, and in the not uncertain terms in which we as a people have been made to know the dangers that beset our paths, and the certain call of repentance that has come to us. I feel that we should look things squarely in the face as they exist in the world today and not let ourselves sleep in the idea and the thought that because we are members of the Church we are safe, or that because we are prosperous all is well.

I have rejoiced in the report of the President of the Church today regarding the great prosperity that is attending the Church, making possible the great building campaign that is being carried on. But there are other things in the Church, my brethren and sisters, that touch our lives and we should look to them as well, for the Savior said:

"For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

And again when the disciples asked him which was the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, he placed a little child in their midst and said unto them:

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Become converted to what? Speaking in a large sense, converted to the fact that God is, that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world; converted to that extent that we can exercise an implicit faith in God and in the saving principles of his gospel that he has restored to the earth for our benefit and for our good and for our salvation. Specifically it means, being converted to the gospel. Are we as a people converted to the necessity of living the Word of Wisdom? Except we become converted sincerely and in the same spirit that a little child is converted and is humble and receives without qualification the teachings of his father—unless we become so converted to the Word of Wisdom and the principles of honesty, of justice, of brotherly kindness, of love and of tolerance towards all men—I fear we are still barring ourselves from participation in an ultimate exaltation in the kingdom of our Father in heaven.

I deplore the fact that there is evil existing, but I cannot ignore it, my brethren and sisters. This evil, thank the Lord, does not exist to the same extent among those who are members of the Church of Jesus Christ as it exists in the world. We find unchastity, immorality, lack of temperance, lack of reverence for God, or for man, or for law. We find men imbued with the idea that all is right if they can get by with it. But it is not, my brethren and sisters. The Lord will not be mocked, and he has given us a plan which he expects us to live up to. I pray to him that I may be sincere all the days of my life. The greatest anxiety is that I may not falter by the wayside, that my faith may remain firm and that my testimony may grow and be strong; and after that I pray for my loved ones. I have passed through peculiar experiences in my life and have met sorrow by reason of having to lay away my loved ones. But as I contemplate those who have gone to the great beyond in their innocence I would ten thousand times rather that they should all go than that they should make shipwreck of their faith. What would it profit me if they were to gain all the wealth of the world or all the education in the world or all the honors of the world, and lose their salvation in the kingdom of our Father in heaven? It would bring to me only sorrow.

I rejoice in the testimony that I have of the gospel and the opportunity that has come to me to labor in the ministry for those who are in darkness. My heart goes out to our Father's children who are in the world. I do not censure them because of the conditions which I have explained; I only feel sorry for them and have an overwhelming desire to carry to them the uplifting principles of this great gospel, and to carry them in such a way that my testimony might carry conviction to their hearts that they are true. That is the greatest desire that I have in the world.

In my ministry I have tried to imbue the young missionaries who are laboring with me and who have labored with me in the past, with this thought, that if they will take care of the work in the field and labor for the uplift of our Father's children they need not put in any time worrying about what kind of an impression they will make when they come home. Something has been said here today concerning the danger that besets the missionaries upon their return home, and the thought has been voiced that some provision should be made to give them something to do in the Church. I have tried to impress them with the idea that the Church is very well officered and very well manned, and perhaps there may be no available place for them even as officers in an auxiliary organization when they get home. I try to impress upon them the idea that the Church is very much in need of honest good members. No one can deprive them of being that no matter how little they might be called upon to do. They can labor zealously in keeping the commandments of the Lord. They can set examples worthy of imitation. They can bear their testimony to their fellow men. They can put themselves in a position to be useful. And even in the auxiliary organizations, as I have observed them in the little contact I have had with them, one of the crying needs is for good membership. We are pretty well officered, but we need one hundred per cent good membership in all of these auxiliary organizations of the Church, and each missionary who goes home is qualified, if he will but continue in the spirit with which he has labored out there, to be a splendid member in any organization in the Church or in any society that is uplifting in the world.

May the Lord bless us and help us to understand our duties in the Church and help us to perform them faithfully, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

Of the Presiding Bishopric

There comes to my mind a little couplet that I learned as a child:

"Lord, how delightful 'tis to see,
An whole assembly worship thee."

We who are here this afternoon have come, I believe, with the desire and purpose to worship our Father in humility. No one could be in a meeting of this kind without being deeply impressed with the spirit and power that is here; without being impressed with the counsel, advice, and testimony that have been given regarding the progress of this great Church of ours.

I want to add a little to what my brother has said concerning those missionaries who return home. I called attention to this matter at one time when I was attending conference in a little town in Southern Utah, because I knew of two cases that had happened there, those of a young man and a girl who had returned home. They had been busy, active, laboring vigorously, doing their best work at the end of their missions, and then came home and almost dropped out of sight. A bishop came to me at the close of the meeting and said: "It has never happened in my ward. I have been a bishop for fifteen years. Yes, we have had missionaries out all the time, more than the average share, and we are proud of that too. No boy or girl has had to go out of this ward to find employment, even in spiritual duties." He further said: "When a young man comes home, if I have time, and I find it mostly, I meet him at the station with his parents and get acquainted with him, and I invite him to see me as soon as the greetings of his family are over. I talk to him about his spiritual viewpoint, and his testimony. I inquire of him what he would like to do in the ward. I try to see that he gets that which he likes to do. I do not give him the chance to take things easy or become lazy in the Church. After that if anything happens that he does not get employment, then we all interest ourselves in him, high councilors and bishopric. We never rest until that young man is employed, for his spiritual growth depends upon his temporal well-being." I was glad to hear this.

Yes, we are here today to be taught, to be reminded, to be encouraged. I have a few thoughts concerning a somewhat old subject.

I labor, as you know, in the office of the Presiding Bishop, and there constantly is the application of the law of tithing, that great revenue law. So much superior to that of the world that the world would like to copy it. They make efforts now and again to do so. In their efforts they fail after a while, I notice, because they have not found the people who could handle their tithes. They lack that glorious revelation and belief in it that was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith in 1838, telling the Latter-day Saints that they should pay one-tenth of their interest annually.

I attended a stake conference a short time ago and listened to an interesting discourse on the application of the law of tithing. The speaker stated that a young couple had called upon a certain bishop and applied for temple recommends. The bishop, in a fatherly manner, asked them how long they had been employed at a salary. They replied from two to three years. Then the bishop reminded them that they had not paid any tithing on their earnings. This brought tears to the eyes of the young woman, but the young man said, somewhat defiantly, to his bishop: "I don't see what difference tithing makes anyhow." It set me thinking all the way home: does not tithing matter much anyhow? The law of tithing was revealed in these latter days to the Prophet Joseph Smith, by which means are provided for the support of the Church. It is a voluntary offering. The obligation to pay tithing is a personal one and should be rigidly observed by every Latter-day Saint who is blessed with an income.

I read some years ago in one of the early Journals of Discourses a sermon given by the late Elder Franklin D. Richards, at Logan, when, in urging a better observance of the law of tithing, he stated that every law of the gospel had its particular blessing, and that he had in his possession a receipt signed by the Prophet Joseph and the tithing clerk, which stated that "Franklin D. Richards, having paid his tithing in full to date, is entitled to the benefits of the baptismal font in the Nauvoo Temple." So it appears that in the early days of the Church it was necessary that those who were privileged to enter the house of the Lord should be full tithepayers. Without this law temples could not be built and maintained; colleges and seminaries would be closed; the large sum provided toward the erection of meeting-houses and other buildings could not be paid; the liberal aid toward the support and maintenance of the stakes and wards could not be provided; the missionary work of the Church would be curtailed or abandoned; hospitals, where hundreds of the poor of the Latter-day Saints are treated annually at the expense of the Church, could not continue this service; the poor, the aged and feeble could not be provided for. So I think the payment of tithing matters a great deal. Without the tithes the Church would be like an automobile without gas, a street car without electricity, a railway engine without fuel.

Some time ago a prominent man in the state of Texas, not a Latter-day Saint, who sincerely believed in the payment of tithes, wrote to the Presiding Bishopric, asking if there were on record information to show how many men over the age of sixty-five, who had been consistent tithepayers, had become dependent. This information was secured from several stakes. Of 332 over the age of sixty-five, 274 were and had been consistent tithepayers, and were self-supporting. None was drawing assistance from the Church or from charity organizations. This indicates that when a person observes the law of the tithe he accumulates and provides a surplus for old age and does not become dependent. Tithe paying will never impoverish anyone.

There are many other benefits that will come to those who will observe this law. It will train men and women to be generous; it will develop character; it will strengthen our faith, for faith comes only by works. It will teach obedience. It will add to our testimony; and after all isn't it worth something to have a testimony that the gospel has been restored; that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God; that the priesthood has been given to men in these latter days, and that the Church of God has been established to bring about our Father's purposes?

Tithing is a debt, not a gift to the Lord. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." For the use of his property he requires from his people 10% of all their interest annually. That 10% is not ours to use. Let us pay our tithing not with the expectation of an increase in worldly goods, but as a privilege, to help the work of the Lord. Let us do it cheerfully, feeling that we have been blessed with the privilege of helping in his great latter-day work.

It is characteristic of most men and women to harbor good intentions, and we should always encourage good intentions and good ideals and purposes, but it is better to put one of these into operation than accumulate ten of them. The tithing one intends to pay next year, or the resolve to pay tithing in the future, is not nearly as good for character building as a payment actually made. In order to avoid the temptation to use the Lord's money why not pay our tithing at regular intervals during the year, once a month or oftener if necessary.

I appeal to my brethren and sisters to get into that habit and to teach our young people in our homes to observe that law in their childhood and youth, and get the habit of tithe-paying. Go home with a determination that at regular intervals, not at the end of the year alone, we will examine and find out what we owe the Lord, and pay it. I have always admired the statement of the late Bishop George Romney. I used to receipt him for the tithes he paid into the office of the Presiding Bishop. He came in regularly every month with a good-sized check. He was a large tithe-payer. He said to me one day, "I do not know whether I could gather up enough faith to be absolutely honest with the Lord if I left all my tithing until tithing settlement. I might get into the habit of seeing how little I owe the Lord and not how much. So I balance up with him every month, and that is the first check I pay out each month."

Three months from now the bishopric throughout the Church will announce the time and place for the annual tithing settlement. All Latter-day Saints who have some income are invited to meet in privacy with the bishopric of the ward as common judges in Israel, so that they may examine their tithing record and declare to the bishopric whether it is a full tithing or not. Thousands will accept this invitation and will go gladly because they have observed this law. Many others will go with excuses and regrets and promises to do better in the future.

May we at this season of the year, as officers and members of the Church, observe the payment of our tithes and offerings, teach it in the quorums and classes of the priesthood, so that all the blessings which the Lord has promised his people through the observance of this law may be ours and this goodly land become sanctified and be in very deed a land of Zion to his people.

I want to bear my testimony that Mormonism as it is known, is the work of God, that the Lord has given me a testimony that Joseph Smith is his prophet, that he came in the dispensation of the fulness of times, bringing the gospel with power and authority to establish it. Ministering angels and glorious beings came with authority and power. Oh, his was a wonderful life! As a lad of fourteen years of age he saw the Father and the Son; at seventeen years of age a holy messenger came and told him what was expected of him; and each year thereafter until he was twenty-two the same messenger saw him and admonished and encouraged him. Then he received the plates, and by the gift and power of God they were translated. When he was twenty-four years of age the Book of Mormon was ready for publication. The same year he received the visit of John the Baptist and of Peter, James, and John, and of others, who gave him power and authority to establish the work of God upon the earth. At twenty-four years of age, or a little more, he had by that same power and authority organized the Church of which we are members. At thirty years of age he dedicated the first temple in this last dispensation. At thirty-nine years of age he had paid the penalty that the world had been hungering for for years, paid for his testimony with his blood. As President Brigham Young said at one time, "Forty-six times was he arrested, forty-six times was he acquitted. It cost his brethren thousands of dollars to keep him alive until his work was done." Yes, he died poor. Great leaders of religious movements usually become rich, but he died poor, too busy, as President Young said, in establishing the kingdom of God, to accumulate wealth. He is the man whom I testify was a servant of God, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

"But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry.

"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

So wrote Paul the Apostle to Timothy, his "son in the faith." Timothy was then at Ephesus, presiding over that branch of the Church. Paul was a prisoner in Rome, possibly facing the death to which he refers when he writes, "I am now ready to be offered." Paul seems to have cherished a warm affection for this young man whom he baptized early in his ministry, possibly at the same time as when he baptized Timothy's mother, Eunice, and his grandmother, Lois.

KEEP THE FAITH

The part that I wish to emphasize of this last message to this fellow servant whom he loved may be put in three words: "Keep the faith."

Once before in a letter Paul had urged Timothy to do this very thing—to hold the faith:

"Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." * * *

"Continue in the doctrine: for in doing this thou shalt save thyself and them that hear thee."

As I have listened to the inspirational addresses that have been delivered during the sessions of this conference I have wondered what message I might give to those who have assembled and to those unto whom you will carry the message. It is an important responsibility, this speaking to a conference of the Church. The time for each speaker is limited, but his responsibility to give an important message is not lessened thereby. Just what this message should be has given me prayerful concern.

I am impressed to give this last message of Paul to Timothy: "Keep the faith." To some of you such an admonition might seem trite, as having very little weight, or as carrying with it but little importance, but as I stand before you today I can think of no better message to give to the people of the Latter-day Saints. "Hold the faith." Keep it. When I say this, I am thinking of young men and young women who are perplexed in their minds about the problems of the day, who are striving to harmonize the teachings of the Latter-day Saint Church with some of the teachings which they are receiving in schools and with some of the condemnatory remarks which are made by their associates. These young men and young women are sincere in their desire to do right and I believe they want the truth, but they are perplexed, they wonder sometimes with Pilate, "What is truth?"

In all these perplexities, in all these wonderings, I would have them anchor their souls with this thought: "I am going to keep the faith, I am going to be true to the faith of my fathers until I have proved beyond a doubt that that faith is not in harmony with truth." And I know the day will never come when a sincere soul can prove that this faith is not in harmony with truth. A sincere soul will find it in harmony with truth, for it is truth.

WHAT IT MEANS TO KEEP THE FAITH

What does it mean to keep the faith? It means first, that we accept Jesus Christ, not merely as a great teacher, a powerful leader, but as the Savior, the Redeemer of the world. Now, there is much associated with that, for I know that many students are reading comments from reputedly great educators who say that in order to be a christian it is not necessary to accept Christ as the literal Son of God, it is not necessary to believe in the immaculate conception, it is not necessary to believe in the literal resurrection from the grave. But he who keeps the faith will accept Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. I would have all men keep that faith. I think it is fundamental to man's happiness, fundamental to his peace of mind. I think it is the cardinal principle of the Church of Jesus Christ. A young man who keeps that faith may not in his heart know that all things which Jesus said are true, but if he holds to the truth of Christ's divinity he will keep in harmony with the Savior's teachings by the spirit of faith. And we walk by faith in this world. We are as the little boy who holds his father's hand in the midst of a great city: the little boy is confused by the din and bustle of the crowd, and realizes that if he breaks away he will be lost and may not be able to get back to his father. While he holds that father's hand, however, he is safe. He has an assurance that his father will lead him back to his home. So it is with the young man who keeps his faith in this latter-day work. There may be confusion around him, his thoughts may be distracted, but he has his hand in that of his Redeemer, and with faith in that spiritual inspiration he will be led into truth, his conscience will be awakened to that great spiritual reality which is around us.

MAN'S RELATIONSHIP TO THE INFINITE

Man is a spiritual being, a soul, and at some period of his life everyone is possessed with an irresistible desire to know his relationship to the infinite. He realizes that he is not just a physical object that is to be tossed for a short time from bank to bank, only to be submerged finally in the everflowing stream of life. There is something within him which urges him to rise above himself, to control his environment, to master the body and all things physical and live in a higher and more beautiful world.

It was James Russell Lowell who wrote in his description of that beautiful day in June:

"Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct within it that reaches and towers,
And, groping blindly above it for light,
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers."

So there is in man a spiritual longing, a desire for spiritual communion which attends and which may at all times lift him from that which is physical and sensual to the realm of spirituality.

SAFE ANCHORAGE

I believe that in this day we are coming more to a realization of that great truth. President Nibley referred to it this morning. Young man, keep your faith. Know that the greatest of all teachers, the Perfection of Humanity, the Redeemer of the world, is the only safe guide to all hungering souls. That is what Mormonism teaches. It is not dogma, it is a reality.

Millikan, the great scientist, so wrote when he penned these words:

"The most important thing in all the world is a belief in the reality of moral and spiritual values."

These thoughts I associate with that one safe anchor, keeping the faith; the knowledge that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world. Let neither sophistry nor golden-tongued oratory delivered by men who have lost their anchorage in Christ, lead you away from that truth.

To keep the faith means also to accept the fact that the Savior, a resurrected personal being, has appeared in this dispensation and restored the authority to men to preach in his name, and to officiate in things pertaining to God. That too is a great anchor. Some of the young men say, "We do not know that"; but they believe it, and that belief, with confidence in their parents, with confidence in their own experience, their own feelings, should be sufficient to hold them in anchorage until the real knowledge takes possession of them, as it will. No sincere youth can hold to that truth and live in obedience to what it inspires without receiving an assurance from that spiritual reality that Jesus Christ has appeared in this dispensation. Oh, what that means to an unbelieving world! Who can grasp its full significance? What a revelation to man regarding the Godhead! What it means regarding life after death—the reality and personal relationships after death! What it means regarding God's fatherhood to man and the brotherhood of the human family! All these great questions are involved in that great declaration that Joseph Smith received a personal visitation from the Father and the Son.

IDEALS OF OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

Again, to keep the faith means that young men will strive to keep themselves as Paul asked Timothy to keep himself, "exemplary in action, exemplary in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Such, also, is Mormonism; and our young men believe in it. Just within the last month, I have read approximately one hundred papers written by as many young men and young women on the subject, "What it means to be a missionary." We asked them to write their own honest thoughts. Parents, I want to congratulate you on the part you have contributed toward the excellency of those papers which revealed a training on the part of these young people that is most commendable. The papers were neatly written. The percentage of misspelled words was small, there was not a page which was blotted, every one was a credit to the writer. But the best part of it all was their statements regarding the ideals of the Church, their desire to live in purity and to reflect credit upon the people whom they are representing. You cannot tell me that our boys and girls are not desirous of doing that which is right. Some of them gave expression to thoughts which perhaps are a little surprising, but they were honest expressions. The important thing is that these young people are going out into the world anchored, I believe, in the thought that they want to be true to the faith of their fathers, and if they do, they will keep themselves pure and unspotted from the world. Keeping the faith means just that. I know that I am speaking to fathers and mothers who would rather have their boys and girls do this than to have them accomplish anything else in all the world.

KEEP CLEAN

In confirmation of this, I am reminded of a message that was sent by a mother to her son in Holland. It was written on a little package containing, I think, a present to her boy. The mother sent it over with one of the missionaries, and it was handed to me in Liverpool to be forwarded to the boy in Holland. On the outside of that package, written in the mother's hand, was this message: "Quinn, keep clean."

In those three words was expressed a mother's most sincere hope and prayer for the boy she loved better than her own life. "Keep clean." To keep the faith of our fathers we must be clean from the sins of the world, young men as well as young women. Is there anything which will contribute more to the peace and happiness of mankind than chaste living? The perpetuity of our government depends upon the stability of our homes, and the stability of our homes depends upon the purity of the parentage in those homes, the fathers as well as the mothers.

Youth of the land, when we say, keep the faith, we are but asking you to be patriots as well as to be true men, to be strong in your youth, that you may be worthy of fatherhood; young women, that you may possess the beauty of honorable and worthy motherhood. Thus you will contribute to the strength of your community, to the strength and perpetuity of the nation you love.

TRUE MANHOOD AND TRUE WOMANHOOD

Oh, I love the Church that stands for these high ideals, not in theory only but in practice; and I love the boys and girls who are inclined to protect themselves from the evils with which they are surrounded, who are anchored in the faith of their fathers. We are not outgrowing it, we cannot outgrow it. Our point of view may be somewhat different, and the application of the teaching may vary from the application made by our parents, as President Ivins pointed out this morning, but the faith is sound, it is eternal. Gospel principles are truly the "power of God unto salvation."

This summer, ninety-six young men and young women went out for a party. They belonged to an organization in one of our Church schools. They were properly chaperoned and stayed over night. When they returned home next day one of the anxious fathers very wisely questioned his boy as to the actions of the crowd, and among other things asked: "Son, how many boys were tipsy?" "Why, what do you mean, father?" "I mean how many of the boys drank whisky?" "Not one." "How many of them smoked?" The son hesitated a moment, then said: "I cannot recall one." Then, turning to his brother he asked, "Did you know of any boys or girls who used cigarettes?" "No," said his brother, "there was not one. If there had been he would be expelled from the society."

I think those ninety-six boys and girls are cherishing the ideals of true manhood and true womanhood, and they are keeping the faith. God bless them in doing it.

OBSERVANCE OF LAW REQUIRED

Finally, to keep the faith means to keep the laws of our country. No man who keeps the faith will participate in the making or in the distributing of "bootleg" whisky. He who indulges in such illegality is disloyal to his country and to his Church. For nearly a hundred years the Church has preached and plead with men and women to keep themselves free from intoxicants and the excessive use of stimulants. Today we heard that plea repeated by President Grant when he urged all to keep the Word of Wisdom.

To accept Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Savior of the world; to believe in the resurrection and in the immortality of man; to be tolerant, charitable, benevolent, chaste; to defend the purity of the home; to be loyal to our country, and true to our God—these are some of the virtues connoted by Paul's admonition to keep the faith.

God help us as young men and women, as members of the Church, to do this, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Canadian Mission

I have been thrilled, my brethren and sisters, not only by the songs that have been sung in our hearing today, but by the testimonies of the brethren. I recognize the wise statesmanship involved in the speeches delivered by the First Presidency of the Church this morning.

May I paraphrase the declaration of Apostle Paul to the Romans, when he said: "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and say, "For I am not ashamed of the restored Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

There was a time when the name "Mormon" was used as a term of derision. Indeed an early decision by one of the appellate courts of New York went so far as to decide that the Court would take "judicial notice" that it was libelous per se for one to falsely publish of another that he was a member of the Mormon Church. Of course that decision was erroneous. At most it would be a question of fact. It might in some quarters be injurious to an individual to falsely say of another that he was a Mormon. But fortunately the number of individuals who would feel themselves so aggrieved is becoming fewer every year.

I am pleased to hear the report of President Nibley that there is a kindlier feeling existing towards the Latter-day Saints in the Northwest than heretofore. I can say the same thing with reference to the Northeast, in the region of country where I am doing missionary service, in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and in the states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine.

The term "Mormon" first applied as an epithet in derision, is now accepted by the Latter-day Saints as a compliment. Those who best know what this Church stands for are not ashamed of this honored nickname. Mormonism stands for a sane and rational interpretation of the Bible, declining to discard the so-called miraculous and refusing to spiritualize away the literal. At the same time it makes due allowance for the figurative and symbolic. In addition to the Hebrew scriptures, so believed and interpreted, we have a volume of ancient American scriptures and still another book of nineteenth century revelations. Since the coming forth of these two volumes of scripture, many erroneous doctrines and creedal statements have been, and are being, laid away in the cemetery of worn-out creeds, exploded dogma and false theology. For instance, the truth was revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith that little children are not capable of committing sin, that baptism is unto repentance for the remission of sin, and that sinless children have no need of repentance, either of baptism, but are alive in Christ, are without the law and have claim on the mercies of God. After these teachings go forth, the doctrine of infant damnation becomes less popular in the world, and there are fewer unbaptized infants refused burial in what is called holy ground. With the further understanding that "eternal punishment," "endless punishment," is God's punishment and that these terms are used because "more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men;" allow a reasonable time for the dissemination of these truths, and we cease to hear of unbaptized infants suffering the torture of an everlasting fire in a lake of brimstone.

The very first revelation in this dispensation disclosed the fact that man is in the physical image of God. It was learned anew that in the beginning God had said: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" that man is in the highest form of creation known to the universe; that in potentiality and possibility of development he is of the same lineage as his Heavenly Father. The leaven of this doctrine has not yet expelled the error still taught that God is a being without body parts or passions. Would it not have been un-Godlike to have created man, God's masterpiece, lower in potentiality than the highest form of being known to the universe? The power of endless progress is a sufficient reason for endless life.

For centuries it was believed that the canon of scripture was full, that our Heavenly Father had no new word of counsel, encouragement or admonition for his struggling, misguided children; that one of the present century was to be less favored than one living in the first century. To believe there is no new revelation is to believe that God does not answer prayer, at least a prayer for information or instruction. Gradually the thought is gaining ground in the world that divine instruction adapted to a race in one stage of its growth may not be adequate for more mature development, and that an all-wise Father will not refuse or neglect to give progressive instruction suited to the progressive needs of his children; that the Eternal Father would be at least as considerate of his offspring in this respect as an earthly father. From the fact that it was necessary to have the revelations of the Old Testament supplemented by the revelations of the New Testament, there can be no objection a priori, to the revelations of the Old Testament and of the New Testament being supplemented by a still later revelation.

Mormonism is pre-eminently an American religion, as was more fully presented by the First Presidency this morning. It stands for America, North and South, and particularly for the government of the United States. It teaches that this western hemisphere is a land choice above all other lands—a land of liberty dedicated to freedom and righteousness. The Constitution of the United States is believed in with religious devotion, that its framers were heaven-inspired. And well may such a belief be cherished. Gladstone, the great English premier, said of it:

"As far as I can see the American Constitution is the greatest and most wonderful work ever struck off at one time by the brain and purpose of man."

Our Constitution has rightly been called the "bond of our union, the shield of our defense, and the source of our prosperity." While the name of Deity is not mentioned in the Constitution, yet, in a sense, ours is a Christian government and country. Religious liberty is guaranteed in that Congress can make no law respecting the establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution such a thing as a written constitution was scarcely known; certainly nothing of the nature of the one devised. England had a constitution but it was an unwritten one, embodied in the laws and practices of more than a dozen centuries of time. It was to be found in such documents as Magna Charta, The Petition of Rights, The Bill of Rights, the Habeas Corpus Act, Act of Settlement, and other great enactments. The idea of a written constitution was soon taken up by France, spreading to most of the European countries; also to other continents and to the islands of the sea. While this wonderful document can be read through in less than an hour, there are already many thousands of references to distinct points decided by the Supreme Court construing the Constitution.

In view of all this, it is but natural that the leaders of our Church in various stages of its history have expressed themselves warmly in support of the Constitution of the United States and laws passed in conformity thereto.

Our system of proselyting is unique. It is the re-establishment of the early missionary system so far as the same is applicable to present day conditions. Gratuitous service of months and years at a time is given by our men and women. There are now missionaries representing our Church to the number of about twenty-five hundred in the foreign missions. Where else can you find so many volunteers in foreign lands or States preaching without purse or pay? Their consolation is the thought embodied in the lines of Longfellow in his poem entitled, "The Arrow and the Song":

"I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

"I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong,
That it can follow the flight of song?

"Long, long afterward, in an oak,
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend."

Now we sometimes feel that it is a perplexing task to deal with the different problems that arise in perfecting new missionaries, yet there is always a joy attending our labors, and that joy brims over when we see souls come into the Church. Quite recently I have had instances of that sort. In one of our provinces four of our Elders baptized within the eight months of this year some twelve converts, among the number being two entire families. There is great joy in bringing a single soul into the Church and much greater when many are brought into the fold.

May the Lord bless the missionary service, and all those who take part therein, that they may go forward in faith and power in proclaiming the truth to the children of our Father who are in darkness and who need the message which the Elders have to bear to them, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang, "O say, what is truth?"

Elder Joseph Eckersley pronounced the benediction.

The conference adjourned until 10 o'clock, Saturday morning, October 6, 1928.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The meeting commenced at 10 a. m., Saturday, October 6, 1928, President Heber J. Grant presiding.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Guide us, O Thou Great Jehovah."

Elder Mark Austin offered the invocation.

A soprano solo, "Eye hath not seen," was sung by Sister Pearl Kimball Davis.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, notwithstanding there are many attractions in Salt Lake City to engage the attention of the people, there is still a very large gathering in this tabernacle this morning. I greatly rejoiced in the spirit and teachings of the conference yesterday. I trust that the Lord will continue to be with us today, by the influence and power of his holy Spirit, that it may be a time of rejoicing and thanksgiving.

A PERPLEXING QUESTION

I am reading in part from one of the daily papers, a message wired from Glasgow, Scotland, September 10, 1928:

"The great mystery of the origin, nature and purpose of life, always will remain to tease, stimulate or humiliate mankind. Professor C. Lovatt Evans told the physiology section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science today.

"Professor Evans is a fellow of the Royal Society, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, a doctor of science and one of the best known physiologists in the world. His remarks were made in the course of the presidential address for physiology section of the science association. * * *

"'Matter, energy, time and space are in the melting pot,' he said, 'and out of it will come, we know not what kind of strange relations, one to another. One thing we may be sure, no final explanation will follow'."

The position taken by this learned professor is extraordinary. He assumes that man will never come to know the purpose of life. And if that be true, I take it that there would be very little or no satisfaction in living. Man is fearfully and wonderfully made. He is the marvel of creation, he is the noblest work of God. Nevertheless, Professor Evans, by the study of man, could never ascertain the purpose of life.

THE AUTHOR OF LIFE

If this mystery is to be solved at all, it would be well for Professor Evans and all others interested in the subject to go back of man, back to the beginning, and there become acquainted with the Author of life. Who is the Author of life? I take it that this is a pertinent question.

The answer is, God, the Father, the Creator of the heavens and the earth. He is the Author of life. That such knowledge is vital to the consideration of the subject before us, is made clear by the following scripture, a saying by Paul the Apostle:

"This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

How shall we come to know him, that he may reveal to us the purpose of life? We can only know him by rendering obedience to the Gospel, the plan of life and salvation which he has given, and through such knowledge by obtaining the Spirit of God. This is clearly indicated in the following passages of scripture:

"But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

"But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

"For what man knoweth the things of man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.

"Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." (1 Cor. 2:9-12.)

Having progressed sufficiently to get possession of the Spirit of God, our minds will be illuminated so that we can comprehend the things of God.

WHAT IS MAN?

The scriptures teach us that mankind are the children of God, or in other words, that God is the father of our spirits, while our earthly parents are the fathers and mothers of our bodies. If this be true—and it is true—it follows that there was a great family of spirits in the spirit world, God himself being at the head of said family. The earth was created then that these spirits might come down and get bodies. This is clearly and beautifully set forth by the following quotation from the 2nd Chapter of Genesis:

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

What was the breath of life here referred to? Why, it was the man's spirit that God put into his body. He never was a living soul prior to that first great creative act, but now that he has a body combined with a spirit, it constitutes him a living soul. We begin to see something of the purpose of life. The spirits of men and women came down to the earth to get bodies, and I take it, my brethren and sisters, that this was indeed a great and glorious privilege.

THE PURPOSE OF LIFE

Man stands upon the threshold of life. The question might well be asked: Following his birth, what is the purpose of it all?

The following significant language will be found in the Book of Mormon, a record of sacred scripture:

"Adam fell that man might be and man is that he might have joy." (Book of Mormon, page 54, paragraph 25.)

Men are here upon the earth then that they might have joy. Is there anything more desirable than happiness or joy? We are all seeking it; we all want it. How is it to be obtained? It can only be obtained through the Church and Kingdom of God. How may one get into this Church and Kingdom of God? The answer is: he must be born into it. He was born into the world to begin with, and now if he comes into the kingdom of God he must be born into it.

Christ said to Nicodemus upon one occasion:

"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God.

"Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." (John 3:3, 4, 5.)

So that it becomes in a sense a real birth. Baptism by water and the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost is the door that leads into the Church and Kingdom of God.

MARRIAGE FOR ETERNITY

It might be said of man that after coming into the Church and Kingdom of God the purpose of life could not be fully realized without marriage—marriage for time and eternity. In the beginning, when man was formed from the dust of the earth and became a living soul, he was alone. God said: "It is not good for man to be alone," and he then formed the woman and brought her to the man, and gave her to him in wedlock. Jesus said, speaking of marriage:

"Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together let no man put asunder." (Matt. 19:6.)

A man cannot grow to the full measure of a man without a woman, and conversely a woman cannot grow to the full measure of a woman without a man. They were created together and God intended them to be together in wedlock.

If men and women are to enter into a fulness of joy it must needs be that the family relationship should continue throughout eternity. That it will so continue in the Church and Kingdom of God is the firm belief of the Latter-day Saints. To be born into the world in the first place, and then to be born again, born into the Kingdom of God, and finally to enter into the eternity of the marriage covenant—these three conditions explain with clearness the very purpose of life. Surely, brethren and sisters, life is worth living.

I testify to you most earnestly that I do know that the work in which we are engaged is the work of God and that this is the Church of Jesus Christ. It is so denominated. It is called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to distinguish it from his Church in the meridian of time. I know that Christ was and is the Savior of the world, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and the instrument in the hands of God in founding this work, by organizing the Church as he did in 1830. I rejoice in this knowledge. To me it is a glorious testimony, and I am determined, if possible, to hold on to it all the days of my life.

I pray God's choicest blessings upon you my brethren and sisters, the Latter-day Saints, the general authorities of the Church and the local authorities, that this work may go on and be successful. This is my humble prayer and I ask it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SYLVESTER Q. CANNON

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I have been deeply impressed, my brethren and sisters, by the splendid instructions of the First Presidency and others who have spoken during this conference thus far. I rejoice with you in the favorable conditions which prevail, and the measure of prosperity and progress in evidence among the Latter-day Saints. I realize the vast work that is before us to do. I appreciate the tremendous responsibility that rests upon the Latter-day Saints, both temporally and spiritually, to accomplish that which the Lord has in view for us. It is incumbent upon every one of us to do our part and to strive to qualify ourselves to accomplish the work assigned us. For the building up of the Church depends, not upon one or two or a few, but upon every one of those who have received the gospel.

The responsibility is upon each one of us to learn our duty and then endeavor to do it. If we all take part, if we all perform our work, if we all sense that responsibility and endeavor to live up to it, we shall unitedly receive the blessings and the benefits. This great and important work is divine in its nature, and is intended to fulfil a great destiny. It is to prepare the way for the coming of the Son of Man and the establishment of righteousness, to build up Zion, and to do all those things which the Lord has declared unto us. So it means that every one of the Latter-day Saints, both young and old, should seek to prepare himself or herself to do his part, and to achieve the work before us.

TEMPORAL AND SPIRITUAL AFFAIRS

I was greatly impressed, as I am sure you were, with the statement made by President Grant, at the opening of this conference, regarding the material achievements of the Latter-day Saints, in one respect alone, and that is the building of meeting houses, amusement halls, and stake houses, during the year 1927, and during the nine months of this year. The Latter-day Saints recognize that material progress and temporal affairs are bound up with the spiritual; and we cannot dissociate one from the other; for they both, temporal and spiritual, affect our welfare. We can not live by the material things alone, neither can we live entirely by the spiritual things. In a sense all things are spiritual, because all things which contribute to the welfare and progress of mankind in this life, make for their eternal progress, and are in conformity with the will of the Lord. The Lord has promised the Latter-day Saints that they should enjoy prosperity—material as well as spiritual. If we live in such a way as to merit the blessings of God, he will prosper and bless us. However, the possession or absence of wealth by men does not, of itself, evidence the attitude of the Lord toward them.

When we think of what is required in the way of the building of these meeting houses, which is only one of the activities of the Latter-day Saints—one of the responsibilities which are placed upon us—we realize that it is the result of a great deal of labor and money. Money, in fact represents labor. So the money spent represents the accumulation of labor previously done in the way of production, and which is now so much capital. In like manner the tithes used for this purpose represent the accumulation of labor by the Latter-day Saints, which have been dedicated to the Lord. The members themselves in their own wards and stakes have given a tremendous amount of labor, and of means, which also represents labor.

LABOR—A COMMAND OF GOD

We appreciate the fact that labor is one of the means whereby we progress. It is one of the things every one of us must learn to do. It is one of the great factors of growth. In the early history of mankind, when the Lord sent Adam out of Eden, he declared to him: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." From that time down to the present time this charge has been binding upon mankind, that we should labor diligently, first, that we may provide sustenance for ourselves and those who are dependent upon us, and, second, that we may also give or dedicate a part of that labor, or the returns therefrom, for the welfare of our fellowmen and for the accomplishment of God's purposes. If we keep these things in mind we shall appreciate the fact that our labor will be profitable.

You remember many centuries later that the Lord, through his prophet, Moses, gave to the children of Israel the commandment: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Six days are sufficient each week in order to accomplish the things that are necessary for the sustenance of mankind, and the seventh day should be a day of rest, set apart for the worship of the Lord, for the consideration of things that are of a purely spiritual nature. Nowadays, with the increased use of machinery and the consequent greater efficiency and returns of labor, it is coming to be realized that five days of such labor each week will be sufficient to take care of needed production, and will be instrumental in overcoming unemployment. Under such an arrangement the two remaining days could be profitably used for rest, improvement and recreation.

BENEFITS OF PHYSICAL LABOR

Now, of the benefits that come to us from labor, there is a distinct advantage that comes from the fact that in the sweat of our face we learn to value the things of life. It brings health to us, it brings satisfaction, it brings an appreciation of our responsibilities. The wise man, Solomon, has declared, with regard to labor: "Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but he that gathereth by labor shall increase." Again: "He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough." Again: "The sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep." These all testify with regard to the benefits that come to us from physical labor.

SPECIALIZATION OF LABOR

In the centuries that have elapsed since the time when these men in the early history of mankind pursued a simple, pastoral life, there has been a gradual change until the present time. Particularly in the last century, however, has there been a very marked change in the labor conditions that prevail throughout the world. It is true that the pastoral or agricultural pursuits still prevail in large measure. They are just as dignified and important as they ever have been, if not more so. But in addition thereto there has been a multiplication of industries which have brought about notable changes and great progress in the conditions of mankind. They have produced, especially in this country, a material prosperity that is unsurpassed in all the history of the world. Now, if, along with that material prosperity, produced by improvements in labor conditions through new developments and specialization, we can keep our feet firmly planted on the ground, and not be carried away by the idea that prosperity is the end desired, but only a means to that end, we shall enjoy the blessings which the Lord has promised.

It is important that every one of our young men and women, and our boys and girls, shall learn, first, to understand the importance of work, and second, to specialize in their labors. It is an age of specialization. That is especially true at the present time. "There is no excellence without labor." There is an old Brahminical saying, something to this effect: "A parent who does not teach his son a trade teaches him to be a thief." Whether that be true or not, the fact remains that it is important that every one of us should learn to do some particular thing well. Every one should learn some trade or profession. The complex conditions of today are such as to practically force us to develop and qualify in the variety of industries that prevail throughout this country and the world. In the matter of agriculture, for instance, it is recognized that in order to place this great industry upon the proper basis of economical production and distribution, it involves the application of those principles of efficiency in connection with the employment of men and machinery whereby the most profitable results will be secured. Scientific agriculture is a profession and it involves thorough study and practical preparation to insure the greatest success.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR EMPLOYMENT

Complaint is made at the present time of considerable lack of employment. This is a condition that deserves careful attention on the part of employers and Church officers, and earnest efforts to remedy it as far as possible. This condition, however, is partly caused by those without employment lacking training for particular jobs, and partly, also, by failure to get back to first principles. Many men, out of employment, could largely feed and support their families from the products of the farm, if they would diligently apply their minds and bodies to such work. I know of men living on a few acres of land, not generally considered most fertile, who have produced a comfortable living for their families, through dairy products, poultry, hops, orchards, and kitchen gardens.

A recent instance of the opportunities open to those seeking progress and independence has come to my attention. I visited recently at the home of a young man, with a wife and two little children, in an outlying section of this state. Two or three years ago he was working, when work was available, at small wages. He determined to start for himself in dairying. He had no home and practically no credit. His wife and he made considerable sacrifice in a very humble home on a farm, which they leased. He managed to get one or two cows as a start. By strict economy, hard labor and mental effort he now has a fine dairy herd of about thirty cows, is getting a monthly cream check of about $400.00, and is feeding calves and hogs of good quality. He is living in a comfortable home and has an automobile. He is a bishop's counselor.

NO CLERGY—NO LAITY—ALL TO LABOR

In connection with this matter of labor the attitude of the Latter-day Saints is vastly different from that of the world generally with respect to the occupations of those engaged in Church service. With the exception of a very few engaged entirely in Church work, the thousands of men in this Church bearing the priesthood have their individual vocations. Whereas the clergy in other churches are dependent upon the laity for their support. those engaged in the ministry of this Church give a part of their time voluntarily for the service of the Lord while they, at the same time, provide for their families by their own efforts. Among the advantages of this divine plan are that there is developed in them the spirit of service; self-reliance, sympathy, practicality, a desire for knowledge and brotherly kindness. You remember the statements of the apostles of old, how they labored. Paul, especially declared repeatedly how he had worked for the welfare of the people and yet supported himself. In his epistle to the Corinthian saints, he says: "We labor, working with our own hands;" and again, to the Thessalonian saints, he says: "For ye remember brethren, our labor and travail: for laboring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God."

MENTAL AND PHYSICAL EFFORT

It is important that everyone should learn the value of hard work. The Lord commanded Adam, and through him, all his descendants, that we should eat our bread in the sweat of our face or, in other words, by earnest effort, whether we labor physically or mentally. Mental labor is often just as strenuous, and just as important, if not more so, than physical labor. Ordinarily, whether our vocation is chiefly physical or mental in character, we have occasion to use both powers in that which we have to do. Well-balanced development involves sustained physical as well as mental efforts. Paul the apostle declared: "Be not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

IDLERS HAVE NO PLACE IN ZION

Solomon says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." The Apostle Paul says: "We commanded you that if any would not work, neither should he eat." And, again: "Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." In the revelations which the Lord has given in these times it is declared, "Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."

President Brigham Young on one occasion, speaking on this subject, declared: "The non-producer must live on the products of those who labor. There is no other way. If we would all labor a few hours a day we could then spend the remainder of our time in rest and the improvement of our minds. This would give an opportunity to all the children to be educated in the learning of the day and to possess all the wisdom of man." Every member of this Church ought to have some vocation and proceed to do that work with purpose and energy. "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men." We need to learn the benefits of concentrated effort. Our purpose should be to gain sufficient resources to enable us to give more effective, whole-hearted service to the work of the Lord, besides maintaining satisfactorily those dependent upon us.

DEDICATING OF OUR LABOR AND TIME TO THE LORD

I would particularly like to stress the idea that we should all willingly and gratefully set apart a considerable portion of the fruits of our labors for the furtherance of God's purposes with respect to mankind. That is a law established of the Lord for our blessing and benefit. It is not sufficient that we should help only in community activities. That is a proper and appropriate thing. We ought to take part in those movements that really promote the community welfare. As a matter of fact, all the things that we are doing which we consider we do for the Lord, are in reality for the welfare of our fellow-men. The tithing which we pay is actually for the benefit of mankind. We dedicate a portion of our means to the Lord to be used by his servants in the promotion of those things that concern mankind—in the preaching of the gospel of salvation, the building of places of worship for the spiritual training and recreational welfare of all who desire to take advantage of the same, the education of the young people, the help and welfare of those in need, the erection of temples for sacred ordinances, and many other things.

The apostle declares: "I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." All of these things we ought to do. We ought to be diligent in our labors in order to obtain the greatest material and spiritual advancement, keeping in mind always the counsel of the Lord Jesus Christ: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you."

I pray that the Lord may guide each one of us to a sense of our responsibilities, whereby we may strive to qualify in the most effective way to be helpful in the building up of the work of God in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Do what is right."

ELDER NOAH S. POND

President Northern States Mission

My Brethren and sisters: I deeply appreciate the blessed privilege of being associated with the missionary force of the Church. I bring to you an excellent report of a hundred or more elders and sister missionaries who are laboring in the Northern States Mission. The blessings of the Lord are attending our labors, and we are receiving progress through conversions and in a chapel-building program. It might interest you to hear a few of the experiences of some of your sons and daughters, brothers and sisters.

Recently a young elder had an excellent conversation with a gentleman who propounded questions and presented arguments in a very kindly, christian-like spirit, and then invited the young elder to dine with him. After they had dined and visited and exchanged views for an hour or such a matter, the gentleman revealed his identity. He was a minister of the gospel, and it was his first contact with a Mormon elder. Both the minister and the elder appeared to have enjoyed the experience.

At another minister's home an elder was given the privilege of holding a gospel meeting in the minister's church.

Another elder was given the privilege of holding a gospel meeting in a large community hall, through the fine impression that the elder had made upon the mind of the gentleman who had the authority to let the hall.

Two elders were entertained in the home of a mayor of an eastern city who had visited Salt Lake. He had been received so kindly in the temple grounds and had received the hospitality of the people to such an extent that he went home with the resolution that he would extend similar hospitality to the Mormon missionaries when they should come to his home, and this he did.

Two elders were refused entertainment in a very unfriendly and in fact a hostile attitude at a well-appearing residence, but a change of sentiment came over this man and after the elders had departed he sent his son in an automobile to overtake them and bring them back. He gave them entertainment, something to eat, a good bed upon which to sleep, breakfast in the morning; and when they left him he placed a dollar bill in the hand of each of the missionaries with an invitation to visit him when they should come that way again. This change of sentiment was an immediate answer to prayer by these two elders.

Recently a good but aged brother died in the State of Wisconsin. Before his death he wrote into his will a donation of five hundred dollars to the Church for the furtherance of the building of a chapel. In his immediate locality there had existed bitterness and prejudice against our people, and for this reason little if any missionary work had been successfully carried on. This good brother requested that the elders should speak at his funeral. He died in a few weeks time, and the large public hall of the town was placed at their disposal for the funeral service. Half of the population of eight hundred people assembled in that hall. Of that congregation of four hundred people, less than a score were members of the Church. It was a wonderful incident, for we could verily feel the vanishing and the disappearance of the spirit of prejudice and bitterness that had existed, and a spirit of friendliness and sympathy taking its place. A few Sundays thereafter the elders were invited to return. They went there and organized a Sunday School, and we now have hopes of conversions and finally the establishment of a branch in that locality.

Intolerance has played its part in the experiences of the missionaries of the past, but it appears now that indifference is our great obstacle. When the minds of the people are aroused, frequently the question is asked of us: "Why devote time and effort and money in such a highly educated and christianized nation as the United States? I answer with a quotation from the Luther Burbank book, "The Harvest of the Years," in which Mr. Burbank says:

"After more than thirteen centuries of Mohammedanism, twenty centuries of Christianity, twenty-five centuries of Buddhism and Confucianism, and four thousand years of Hebrew religion, we are still greedy, selfish, cruel, short-sighted and ready to go to war at almost any pretext and fritter away the savings of decades, the flower of our youth and the friendliness that it has taken a half century to build up."

Only the living of the gospel of Jesus Christ can make men better. With only forty per cent of the population of the United States identified with any church or ecclesiastical organization—Catholic, Jewish or Protestant—the answer to that question is clear; the necessity of preaching the gospel in the great nation of the United States. The virtues of courage, generosity, loyalty and willingness to sacrifice are fine. People may be highly educated, but yet be wicked, cruel and ruthless. People may be wealthy and prosperous and yet without that higher level of a spiritual life. And so it is necessary that we preach Jesus Christ and him crucified, and the principles of his gospel.

May God bless the people of this nation and of our Church. May the kindly blessings of the Lord be showered upon the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve and all the presiding authorities of the Church, upon the authorities of the wards and the stakes, and upon the wonderful missionary forces throughout the world. My dear brethren and sisters, presiding authorities and saints—do all in your power to send your sons and daughters out into the mission field, and may God add his blessings, is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER ELIAS S. WOODRUFF

President of the Western States Mission

My brethren and sisters: I sincerely trust that the Lord will assist me in making a brief report of conditions in the field of labor to which I have been called. It has been, practically, six months time since I went into that field—a short time more than that. At the present time we have ninety-six missionaries in the Western States Mission laboring in the states of New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming and Nebraska, with a few in the southwestern corner of South Dakota, and two elders and two sisters in Council Bluffs, Iowa—a Church population of about six thousand, six hundred members—with twenty-one more or less well organized branches, and quite a number of scattered families. As you know, the Western States Mission lies close to the Church at home, and in some of our districts, particularly Western Colorado and Wyoming, conditions are about as they are at home, except for the scattered condition of the people. Practically no prejudice to overcome, perhaps a good deal of indifference, but the great task the missionaries have, as I see it, is to teach the people the principles of the Gospel; for many of them are in a receptive attitude. Many of them are friendly and willing to listen to our message.

The experiences of the missionaries are interesting, to be sure. I want to pay tribute, if I may, to these young men and women who come to the mission field, converted in their hearts to the principles of the gospel, not altogether aware of the fact that they are converted, but genuine and sincere in their desire to do the will of the Father. The principal thing they need is just to be taught, guided and led into the way of their duty, for they are all willing and anxious to learn; and it is a remarkable thing how fast they do learn when they can have competent supervision. I have in mind, for instance, one district in which it so happened that six young men were laboring, only one of them having been in the field longer than a year, the rest of them not longer than six months, four months, and three months. It so happened that the elders formerly laboring with them, the experienced elders, had been released all at once. Fortunately for us we had an elder sent to us as a short-term missionary, the superintendent of one of our seminaries, a wonderfully strong character, humble, intelligent, wise; and it was my privilege to send him into that district for two months time to labor with those young missionaries. Two weeks ago I followed him up and came through there. He had been released, but the transformation in those six missionaries was wonderful. Each of them was able, with considerable ability, to express himself, to teach the gospel; because they had had a competent teacher to give them a start. In other districts experienced elders fill such places, and the young elders and sisters, who come out are laboring under their direction, and they improve themselves very quickly. They are anxious, as I have said, to learn, anxious to teach.

We came to the conclusion as a result of a conference of district presidents held in our mission, that it would be wise if every elder in the mission could have at least two weeks every year, traveling without purse or scrip, in the summer time. We felt that it would bring them nearer to the Lord and nearer to the people; with the result that I can report every elder in the Western States Mission has had that experience this year, and without exception they come back reporting that they have had a splendid experience. Perhaps not altogether a pleasant one, but they are delighted with their experience. It was their testimony that it was a good thing to do. Two of them started out with great confidence; when they discovered that the Lord was blessing them and raising up friends for them they were over-confident, with the result they had to spend one night in a corn field and eat the green corn, but they were soon humbled and thereafter in response to their appeal they were never without friends.

Perhaps another interesting experience that has come to the elders in New Mexico might be worth relating. A very unusual thing, and for it I have no explanation. A woman with Lamanite blood in her veins became interested in the elders and their message. She purchased a Book of Mormon and read it partly through, laid it up on top of her library, put a portable typewriter on top of the book, locked up her house and went away to visit her daughter. In her absence her house burned to ashes. When she came back and was searching among the ruins of her home the spirit seemed to say to her, "Go get your book." She went over to where the library had been and poked among the ashes and found the typewriter burned and twisted. Under the typewriter she found her Book of Mormon, covered with a white paper cover, as we cover the fifty cent edition that we send out. The paper cover was scorched but the book was unharmed. All of the rest of her books were entirely burned. The woman brought the book out and came to the elders in great astonishment and showed them what had happened, how it had been miraculously saved. I saw the woman, I saw the book, and I felt a certain amount of reverential awe when I held it in my hand. We wanted to purchase it from her, but she would not part with her wonderful relic. She has since become a member of the Church.

I have to say to you that your missionary sons and daughters who are laboring in the Western States, with two exceptions are all well, enjoying good health. The two who are not well are lady missionaries, one in the Latter-day Saints Hospital in Salt Lake City and the other at Council Bluffs. That you may not be concerned or think it is your daughter, let me say that the mothers of these girls know where their daughters are. The missionaries are happy in their labors and are enjoying their work.

One thing I would like to say to you is that when you write to your missionary sons and daughters write them encouraging words and do not worry about when they are going to be released. I have noticed in some cases where the fathers and mothers anticipate the release of their missionaries, the missionaries themselves become so interested in their release, about ninety days before it happens they let down in their work and lose to some extent the spirit of their mission. You do them a great injustice when you make them feel that they should come home, or that you are anxious to have them come home. Write them encouraging letters and tell them you want them to remain as long as they can. If you have any financial worries write to the mission president and not to the missionary. The mission president I am sure will always be sympathetic with you in your troubles, but keep your troubles away from your missionary sons or daughters.

We have one missionary in our mission who I am told is about ready to come home because he does not get encouragement from home; he feels discouraged. That is very serious and ought not to happen. If you will encourage them you will bless and help them wonderfully.

I want to testify that the hand of the Lord is over us to protect us and inspire us in all that we do. As long as we remain humble we enjoy a wonderful spirit. We are very happy in our labors and we are trying in our humble way to carry the gospel message as plainly and simply as we can. May God bless you, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN G. ALLRED

President of the Northcentral States Mission

My brethren and sisters, it is a joy to me to be able to report conditions in the Northcentral States Mission. We are the youngest mission in the United States, and the smallest mission in numbers. We have been organized only about three and one-half years. Our mission includes the State of Montana east of Great Falls, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota; then passes over into Canada and takes Ontario west of the Great Lakes, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and part of Alberta. When the mission was organized we numbered only about nineteen hundred people. I should like to say in behalf of the young men and young women who come to our mission that they have been very loyal and faithful in the performance of their duties. I should rather change President Pond's invitation wherein he solicited that you send your boys and girls into the field, I should like to say to you, brethren, come yourselves, we need some more older brethren in the work, to go with these young elders, men who have wisdom and discretion and who can lead out in the work of the Lord.

Not long ago, during the cold winter months, four missionaries came to our mission. We left headquarters in Minneapolis and traveled five hundred miles north to the city of Winnipeg. We started up the street on a street car. When we got off the car to go to a restaurant just across the road, there was a bitter wind blowing, and the weather was exceedingly cold. These elders, four of them, had a grip in each hand. We had not gotten very far from the street car when every one of them had dropped his grips and was holding his ears to keep them from freezing. I went back to help them along and got them into the restaurant. After we had given our orders for our dinner I said: "I will see if I can get in touch with the elders here." One of the elders turned to a companion and said: "Wouldn't this make you ask for your release?" and he said other things but I don't know what they were. When I got on the train with two of these missionaries to go to Saskatoon (the other two went to Regina)—one of them said: "When you get to Regina that elder will not be there." I said "Why?" He replied: "This country is too cold for him." He was an office man and had been working where it was warm all the time. When I arrived in Regina we held a priesthood meeting, and this young man was given an opportunity to express himself. He arose and said: "I am prepared to give all I have, even to my life, for this work." That is the kind of integrity that is in the hearts of these young men and young women who go out from Zion to preach the gospel. That integrity is not confined to the missionaries only, but it is in the hearts of the parents. Only yesterday I met two parents and I was asked: "How is my boy?" He is a very fine, splendid young man. Not long ago I said to the president of his district: "We must take this elder out and make a president of him." And he said: "Before you do it I want to talk to you. Don't take him away; he is the finest man we have in our district. We can't get along without him." I said to those parents: "How long has he been in the field?" "Two years this month." "How are your finances to keep him longer?" "We haven't any, but we have as much now as we had when he went out;" and then the father said, with tears in his eyes: "Everything we have is on the altar, and you keep him as long as you want him." That is the kind of faith that has permeated this work from its inception. That is the kind of faith that will consummate this work.

Not long ago two of our elders sat in the rear of a building where a meeting was being addressed by the Governor of the State of Minnesota. At the close of the meeting the Governor went down the aisle and said to these young elders: "I understand you are Mormon elders from Utah." "Yes." "Well, I received a Book of Mormon from the headquarters of your mission not long ago, and I want to thank you personally for the teachings of that wonderful book. Whenever you come to St. Paul come in and see me. I would like to have you visit me in my office." The people of Minnesota and those states where we are laboring, are many of them of good old Scandinavian stock, and they believe the gospel when it is properly put up to them.

We feel encouraged in our work, and are determined to go forth with all the power and zeal that God has given us for the accomplishment of his purposes among men; and our greatest need is more missionaries. We have whole cities with only one pair of elders in them. What can one pair of elders do in a big city, to make proclamation of the gospel of the Son of God? I pray that God will inspire the people of this Church, that we may look more abundantly to the prosecution of this great and important work that the Lord has given us, in that we will not only send our boys, but that we will break away occasionally and come ourselves. Presidents of stakes, bishops of wards, men of experience, it will make you bigger men and you will be able to render valuable service in the world preaching the gospel. I pray that the Lord will bless you in your finances and in your desires, that you may be able to do this, that we may have in the mission field more of the older brethren.

I can't speak too highly for the young ladies of our mission, young ladies who have come into the world to preach the gospel. They can get into the homes of the people and find an opportunity for explaining the gospel where the elder cannot go. Send us more lady missionaries. We have had no trouble with a single lady missionary in our field. I was not wholly in favor of lady missionaries when I first went out, because I thought they would cause so much trouble; but now I am always glad to see them come, because my experience has taught me that they can do a great work.

I bear witness to you, my brethren and sisters, that this is the work of God, that he has established it and that he will carry it on, through his servants and handmaidens in the earth. The faith of this people, both at home and abroad, is sufficient to carry this work successfully through, and the Lord's purposes will be brought about and his righteous designs established among men. I am grateful in my heart for the privilege of laboring in the ministry of the Lord. I would like to be able to perform the duties devolving upon me in a manner that shall be acceptable and pleasing to him. May God grant us his Spirit and his influence and power in the preaching of the Gospel, and in the building up of his kingdom, both at home and abroad, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

GOD'S WORK AND MAN'S

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a wonderful organization. And it ought to be, for it is the work of God and not of man. It used to be said that the "Mormon" Church was the most perfect organization in existence—excepting the German army. In rhetoric this would be called an anti-climax; in common parlance a let-down. As if one were to say, The sun is the brightest luminary in the heavens—except the moon.

There is no possible comparison between the work of God and the work of man. The German army at its best represented, perhaps, the quintessence of military wisdom, drawn from the experience of the ages—but it was man's wisdom. The Church of God is a product of Divine Wisdom, and there is nothing like it in all the world.

THE CHURCH ON EARTH AND IN HEAVEN

I believe, and think I have good reason to believe, that this Church, so far as it has been developed, is a replica or duplicate of a Church in the heaven of heavens, a Church presided over by the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, the great First Presidency over the Universe. Joseph the Seer, having beheld in vision that heavenly Church, undertook by divine command to reproduce it on earth; and did so as far as possible amidst the crude and primitive conditions under which he labored. It had a humble beginning, this infant Church; but it has been growing and developing ever since, approximating nearer and nearer to the perfection it is destined finally to attain. Some day we shall have in the midst of mankind the fully matured and perfect Church of Christ, and the will of God shall then be done on earth even as it is done in heaven.

STAKES AND MISSIONS

President Grant, in his opening address yesterday morning, drew attention to the fact that the Church today comprises one hundred and one Stakes of Zion and twenty-seven outside missions. The stakes extend through the Rocky Mountain region from Canada to Mexico, and to parts of the Pacific Coast; while the missions cover the various States of the Union and most of the countries of the globe. These constitute in area, membership and organization, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

INDEPENDENT AND DEPENDENT

Each stake is officered and equipped in such a way as to constitute almost a church in itself. The stakes are all independent of one another, yet subject to the stake authority—the spiritual “binding pole” that makes of them one stake. Even so with the missions and their subdivisions; each is subject to the authority above it—the branch to the district, the district to the mission. And the missions, like the stakes, are all under the General Authority which holds them together and makes of them one Church.

THE EASTERN STATES MISSION

I have recently returned from visiting the Eastern States Mission, presided over by Elder Henry H. Rolapp, in whose company I traveled through nine States of the Union and the District of Columbia, holding conferences in seven of those commonwealths and preaching the Gospel in the principal cities, including Washington, Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia and Boston. I greatly enjoyed my travels in that very interesting region—the land of the Sacred Grove, where Joseph the Prophet beheld in vision God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, and received from them instructions relative to the opening of this Gospel dispensation; the land of the Hill Cumorah, where the record of the Nephites was unearthed by divine direction, that the world might know the truth concerning the glorious past and yet more glorious future of America; the land where Zion, the New Jerusalem, is to rise, and where a work has already begun that will prepare the way for the coming of the Lord in his glory. In that great mission also is the town of Palmyra, where the Book of Mormon was first printed; and the little village of Fayette, where the Church was organized on the sixth day of April in the year 1830.

I enjoyed my association and labors with President Rolapp, as I previously enjoyed the companionship of President Callis in the Southern States, and of President Quinney in Canada—all zealous and honorable men of God.

WORLDLY AND HEAVENLY THINGS

What most impressed me during my travels was not the beautiful and sublime scenes through which I passed, not the many objects of historic interest presented to my view. New York, with its towering sky-scrapers—that busy Babel of many tongues, where modern men, like their ancient prototypes, seem trying to get to heaven in some other way than the God of heaven has appointed—"The Great White Way," for instance; the spacious and splendid railroad depots, where one is almost lost in the multitudinous concourses of people crowding to or coming from the outgoing and incoming trains; the glittering palaces, stately monuments, magnificent public buildings, and all the other evidences of wealth, power and civilization that are to be seen on every hand—these were not the things that most impressed me. For I thought, with Shakespeare, as I gazed upon them:

"The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself—
Yea, all that it inherit, shall dissolve,
And like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a rack behind."

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT

In that day one thing will remain. What is it? Eternal Life, God's greatest gift. That will abide when all else has passed away.

The millennial reign of Christ will sanctify the earth, and help to prepare it for celestial glory; but it must first undergo a baptism of fire, in which its elements will "melt with fervent heat," and all the dross of its mortality be consumed. Then, by the power of the resurrection, Mother Earth will rise again, changed into a glorious sphere, a heaven, and the righteous will inherit it eternally.

WHAT MOST IMPRESSED

What most impressed me was the love of Truth, the love of the Gospel, in the hearts of the Elders, our boy and girl missionaries; in the hearts also of the scattered Saints; and manifested to a degree by the honest investigators of our doctrines and claims, those who attend the meetings of the Saints and listen respectfully and appreciatively to the testimonies of the servants of the Lord. Their love for the Gospel and their reverence for those who preach it, beamed from every face and lingered in every hand-clasp.

I don't wonder that they love the Gospel. I love it. We all love it. It is the greatest, grandest and most glorious thing under the sun.

THE GOSPEL OF COMMON SENSE

Next to the beauty and sublimity of the Gospel, I appreciate it for its plain, sound common sense. It satisfies the cravings of the soul; answers every question that needs answering and solves every problem that ought to be solved. It makes clear life's meaning and purpose, and reveals to man his origin, duty and eternal destiny. It tells the truth about God and enables one to comprehend the things of God.

THE TRUE GOD

The God we worship—who is he? What is he? He is the God of the Bible, the God of Adam, of Enoch, of Noah, of Melchizedek, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; the God who made man in his own image. He is our God; but he was not the God that the churches were teaching and their congregations worshipping when Joseph Smith and “Mormonism” came forth. The Christian world had conjured up an impersonal god, a bodiless deity, a spirit that:

“Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glowes in the stars and blossoms in the trees,
Lives through all life, extends through all extent, Spreads undivided, operates unspent.”

A very beautiful description—of something, but no correct portrait of the true and living God. There is indeed a spirit that proceeds forth from him and is immanent in all things. It is the power by which the grass grows, the flowers bloom, and the trees bear their fruit. It is the light of the sun, moon and stars, and the lamp of the human understanding. All men and women have a portion of it, are born into the world with it. It is the principle of life and light throughout all creation.

But that is not our Father in Heaven; no, nor our Savior, Jesus Christ; nor the Holy Ghost as a personage; it is not even the gift of the Holy Ghost, which is the exclusive possession of members of the Church of Christ. It is not God, but a spirit sent forth from God, not Divinity, but an emanation from Divinity; and it was what the Christian world was worshipping, or what Christian teachers were teaching, when Joseph Smith and the restored Gospel came.

Joseph knew God, for he had seen him, had conversed with him, and received from him instruction. He declared God to be in human form, an exalted, glorified Man, and that was his first great service to humanity. He brought back the lost knowledge of the true and living God.

MAN IN THE DIVINE IMAGE

And how reasonable, how logical it is. What simple, plain common sense. For if God made man in his own image, then God must be in the image of man. And if men and women are indeed God's children, his sons and daughters, what more reasonable than the conclusion that we have a Mother as well as a Father in Heaven, in whose likeness we are, male and female?

NOT CREATED OUT OF NOTHING

The churches were also teaching that God made this beautiful earth and all that it contains out of nothing. Why, a ten-year old boy ought to reject such a dogma as that. How can something be made out of nothing? Think of it a moment! God never gave such a doctrine; Jesus never taught it; neither did his apostles. Neither did Joseph Smith. In the Book of Abraham, translated by him, the Lord is quoted as saying, "unto those who were with him" on the morning of creation: "We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell."

That is "Mormon" doctrine and it is plain common sense, true philosophy, in perfect accord with true science. Science declared long ago that it is impossible to create or destroy an atom of matter; and divine revelation proclaimed it long before science did. The elements are eternal; matter as well as spirit is uncreatable, indestructible. Out of the eternal elements God created the earth spiritually and temporally, with all that it contains.

LIFE'S PURPOSE

And this earth is for God's children, for you and me and all the rest of the race. We are placed here as spirits to take bodies and thus become souls, capable of endless increase and eternal progression; to be tested in this our second estate, as we were tested in our first our spirit estate. Here we walk by faith, whereas in the spirit world we walked by sight. We kept the first estate and won the privilege of coming into this second estate, with the promise that if we manifest equal integrity here, we shall have glory added upon our heads forever and ever.

WHERE WE SHALL SPEND ETERNITY

What is the Lord going to do with this beautiful world? Did he create it merely to destroy it? No. He is going to change it into a heaven, a home for the righteous. I picked up a card on a railroad train one day, a card on which was printed this question: "Where do you expect to spend eternity?" A very interesting query; and a very difficult one for some people to answer. But "Mormonism" answers it, and it is the only religion that can answer it consistently. "Mormonism" says that when we pass out of the body we are in the spirit world, and will remain there, the righteous resting from their labors—not in idleness, but in doing, working without weariness, without pain, while awaiting a glorious resurrection, when they are to have the privilege of coming back to spend their time on this planet, when it is celestialized and converted into a heaven.

HOW SHALL WE SPEND ETERNITY?

About the time that I picked up that card and read the question thereon, a similar question was going the rounds of the religious magazines. Thus: "How do you expect to spend eternity?" This question caused quite a discussion. One reverend gentleman answered it in these words: "How do I expect to spend eternity? I expect to spend the first million years gazing upon the face of the Savior. And then," he added, somewhat facetiously, "I might take a sidelong glance at my wife."

Poor lone woman, waiting a million years for that sidelong glance! Is it not plain that her loving husband did not know how to answer the question? If he had known he would have told, and made himself famous; but he did not know, and so passed it off as a joke. But it is no joke, this problem of life and death and resurrection and the hereafter. It is a solemn and sublime reality.

But assuming that he was serious and really meant what he said, let us consider for a moment the gentleman's reply. Does any sane man or woman believe that an all-wise God would create an earth like this, and place his children upon it to become expert and skillful as farmers, as artisans, as engineers, bankers, merchants or what not, and then whisk them away to some distant part of the universe, some world "beyond the bounds of time and space," where they would sit down and twiddle their thumbs and stare somebody out of countenance for a million years? Is it reasonable? Is it sensible?

A MORMON REPLY

How would a Latter-day Saint answer such a question? One who understands his religion—an intelligent, thoughtful Latter-day Saint, if asked: "How do you expect to spend eternity," would be very apt to reply: "I expect to spend it in doing there the things I have learned to do here." That is common sense. It is logical, economical. Else were this all wasted time. No, we are not going to sit down through all eternity and gaze upon the face of the Savior. I don't believe he would want anyone to look at him that long. It would be bad manners. We shall do in eternity the things we have learned to do in time, but we will do them better there than here. We will be better fathers and mothers, better husbands and wives, better in every way; and every faculty exercised and developed here, will find full play and employment in the Great Hereafter.

I do not mean to say that the farmer will have to plow and sow, in heaven as he does on earth, in order to produce a harvest; nor that the good housewife will have to cook pancakes on a red-hot stove. But I do say that all the occupations of this life that are proper and legitimate are typical of and lead up to and prepare us for the higher occupations of the life to come. We will do there the things we have learned to do here, but we will do them in higher and better ways. For instance, when man wants light, he strikes a match or presses a button, or turns a switch, and lo there is light. When God wants light he says: "Let there be light!" and there is light. Nay, God himself is Light, and would need but to appear and all darkness would flee away.

Nor is there anything contrary to law in all this. God works by law. But there are greater laws and lesser laws, and sometimes the greater suspend the action of the lesser. Miracles are not contrary to law; they are simply extraordinary results flowing from superior means and methods of doing things. When Elisha the Prophet raised the sunken ax from the bottom of the Jordan River, he might have done it in a commonplace way—might have laid aside his robes, taken off his sandals, and plunged in like a diver and brought the ax to the surface. But he knew a better way. Plucking a sprig of green from a bush growing on the bank of the river, he cast it upon the water and commanded the ax to float. "And the iron did swim," says the sacred record. I believe it. The prophet's act was not contrary to law, but in accordance with law, a higher law than the law of gravitation which, had not its operation on that piece of iron been suspended, would have kept the ax at the bottom of the stream until raised by some other process.

In conclusion. The Gospel explains all such problems, and will solve for us in due season all mysteries. We know some things now. We know where and how we will spend eternity. Revelation has made it clear, and good old Dr. Watts, author of the hymn, "Sweet is the Work, my God, my King," had a glinting of light upon this great subject when he wrote concerning the Hereafter:

"Then shall I see and hear and know
All I desired and wished below,
And every power find sweet employ
In that eternal world of joy."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I have received a telegram from President L. G. Kirkman of the Twin Falls Stake, reading as follows:

"Regret I cannot attend conference Friday morning. Services could be heard very plainly over the radio. Afternoon services could not be heard so well."

I have received a telegram from President Richard C. May of the Minidoka Stake, which says:

"We have enjoyed today's conference services. Reception good."

President Joseph W. McMurrin has a very sick wife, which accounts for his absence from this conference.

President J. Golden Kimball is confined to his home, suffering from a very severe cold.

As you all know, Elder John A. Widtsoe is presiding over the European Mission.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Come, let us anew."

Elder Joseph Quinney, Jr., offered the closing prayer.

The conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened promptly at 2 o'clock p. m., President Grant opening the meeting by announcing that the congregation would sing the hymn, "How firm a foundation."

The invocation was offered by Elder William T. Jack, President of the Cassia stake.

Jessie and Charlie Williams sang a duet, "Proud? Yes, of our home in the mountains."

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

This, my brethren and sisters, I regard as a tremendous responsibility as well as a wonderful opportunity. As I have anticipated this call and have meditated on what I might say that would be proper, my mind at times has been illumined by the Spirit, to see and feel the truth of this work in a way that if presented in the same light to others might be profitable; and then the vision of these things would in a measure fade away. By this I have been made to realize my dependence upon the Lord on such occasions.

I realize that it is quite possible for those of superior minds to profit more by the thoughts which may arise in their minds as a result of what is said by the speaker than from just what is said. The mind goes out farther and brings in material relative to the same subject and is edified thereby. I hope that all my hearers may, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, enlarge upon that which I may say and that to their profit. I also realize that it is impossible for me to make you feel what I do not feel myself. It is my desire at this time by my remarks to cause you to see and feel the beauty and the truth of this great latter-day work.

THE NEED OF REVELATION

The world had no greater need than that of the revelation given through a fourteen-year-old boy in the Spring of 1820, a revelation of God the Eternal Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. At that time spiritual darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people; and that deplorable condition continues, except where people have accepted what was revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith. We have but to refer to the creeds of the different denominations to be convinced of this fact. I would refer you to the "Confession of Faith" of the Presbyterian Church, which church has a following, I presume, of millions of people; and these members of the church have by their membership subscribed to the things which are written in the "Confession of Faith" as follows:

"In the unity of the Godhead there be three persons of one substance, power and eternity, God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost."

Quoting from "Shorter Catechism," I read this:

"There are three persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory."

The question is asked in the Catechism: "Are there more Gods than one?" And the answer is: "There is but one only, the living and true God."

"We must not conceive of him as being like, in form, any thing in either heaven or earth."

Those who wrote this part of the creed of the Presbyterian Church did not know God the Eternal Father, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, as they are. The world at that time was in need of new revelation of God the Eternal Father and of his Son Jesus Christ.

We have also in the first Article of Religion of the great Anglican Church, the headquarters of which are found in Great Britain, which church also has a following of many millions of people subscribing to a creed, a professed belief, very similar to that which I have read. It is as follows:

"There is one living and true God everlasting, without body, parts or passions, of infinite wisdom, power and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things visible and invisible, and in the unity of this Godhead there are three personages of one substance, power and eternity, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost."

Coming down to a later date, let me read you what the Bishop of Liverpool of that Anglican Church had to say about conditions. This was on March 21st, 1912, as reported in the Lancashire Daily Post, and is as follows:

"The Bishop of Liverpool performed the consecration ceremony at Holy Trinity Church, Southport, yesterday. In his sermon he said, one of the great needs of the Christian Church was power. They were living in an age of great material power; they had covered the land with new and restored churches; they had spent great sums of money on colleges and ecclesiastical buildings; they had improved and enriched their services; they had planted new missions in foreign lands, and their settlements in all the great towns. Religion today was wearing silver slippers, and moving in high places, and yet he ventured to think, there was a strange want of power about the Church of God, not only in their branch, but about every other branch.

"The Church at present seemed almost overmatched by the power of darkness. Sometimes it seemed as if the darkness was gaining on the light. What was the cause of the strange paralysis that had befallen the Church?"

An admission that a paralysis had befallen the Church:

"He believed that the Church needed today a re-discovery of God; he believed the Church was weak today because God was so distant, so unreal, so dimly seen. Today they saw the results of that dim vision of the distant God. They saw on all sides unsettlement in the faith, slackness in the spiritual life, men losing their grip on those great and vital truths which had made Christendom what it was, refusing to face the spectre of the mind, content to drift and to leave things in suspense, and this weak unworthy spirit was beginning to affect our whole national life."

It is an admission of the importance of having a correct understanding or conception of God the Eternal Father and of his Son Jesus Christ. The world I say was in need of the revelation that came from heaven through a fourteen-year-old boy in 1820, as well as all the other revelations that were given subsequently to that same individual, the Prophet Joseph Smith. This was a wonderful revelation, the vision of the Prophet Joseph, wherein the Father and the Son appeared to him, and the Father, speaking to him, introduced his Son, who answered his questions satisfactorily. He saw that God the Eternal Father is a personage, having body and parts like unto man, or in other words that man is really and actually in his image and likeness, but that God is an immortal being, a glorified and exalted being, and that his Son Jesus Christ is like him. There was no removing this testimony from the mind of Joseph Smith, although it came to him as a mere boy.

"A MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER"

We read in Isaiah, 29th chapter, a prediction of the coming forth of this great work. The Lord speaks to his servant Isaiah, saying: (If you read the context you must be convinced that it refers to this particular time when the gospel is restored.)

"Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

"Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

This one revelation—the vision of the boy Joseph—marked a fulfilment of this prediction. As we see the Church as a whole today, the wonderful effective work of this organization with the gospel and its principles and ordinances, scriptural appealing and true, we are led to the conclusion without a doubt that it is "a marvelous work and a wonder."

Men and women outside of this Church have been able to see this and they have wondered at it. The thing that is a wonderment to me is that when they have given this consideration to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and the gospel which we have received and which we are teaching to the world and have done for more than a century, and which we are trying to live, that they should consider it the product of the mind of man and not give God the glory. It is a wonderment to me that the Bishop of Liverpool, after nearly a century had elapsed after God had given this great vision and revelation to the world, should not be able to see the truth, to understand the light that has come unto us, as many, many others are not able to see and understand.

APPRECIATIVE OF LIGHT AND KNOWLEDGE

And this makes me individually appreciative that I have been able to see the light and that I have received the light, that I do not only believe in God the Eternal Father as a personal, an exalted and glorified being, but that I do know that he lives and that he is the God of this world, the very eternal Father of the spirits of all men, and that Jesus Christ, who was with him in the appearance to Joseph Smith, is the firstborn of the Father in the spirit, the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh, the Savior and Redeemer of mankind.

We as a people, my brethren and sisters, should rejoice in this light and knowledge that has come unto us and the testimony our Heavenly Father has given us concerning these things.

CHOSEN BEFORE BIRTH FOR SPECIAL MISSION

Joseph Smith was chosen, as we believe, from before he was born for a special mission, the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times. We read in the third chapter of the Book of Abraham that the Lord showed to his servant Abraham intelligences, the spirits of men. He told Abraham that they were among his noble ones whom he had chosen to be his rulers; and said he, "Thou, Abraham, art one of them." They were to be rulers in the sense that Abraham was a ruler in his day, a servant of God and of the people. It is just as easy to believe that Joseph Smith was one of those noble spirits, that he was reserved of the Lord to come forth in this last day, to be used as a mouthpiece of the Lord, his prophet, in the establishment of his Church and Kingdom anew upon the earth, and the restoration of the everlasting gospel. So we Latter-day Saints believe and so we testify.

I bear my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I do know of the truth of this work. It is God's work. It is his plan instituted in heaven from before the foundation of the world, the only plan that God has instituted, the only plan that has in it the power of God unto salvation unto those who obey. I pray God that he may help us, for we need his help on every hand, that we who have embraced the gospel may remain true and faithful.

SERVE THE LORD

We heard yesterday a message, an impressive message, in three words: "Hold the faith," and that reminded me of what I heard just a few days ago in attending a conference at Ogden. A little story of a cobbler who was asked what his business was. He answered, "My business is to serve God. I mend shoes for a living."

Serve the Lord! A three word message worthy of our remembering; and if I were to add another three word message, my brethren and sisters, it would be this: Live your religion. And I will make this promise, that if we do live our religion it will mean for us joy and happiness in this life and eternal life and exaltation in the world to come. I bear you my testimony to this end in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

"The Glory of God is Intelligence." These words of the Prophet Joseph Smith have been adopted as the motto of the Mutual Improvement Associations. I desire to apply these words to two of the world's great educational movements.

EDUCATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN

Why did people of olden times know so much about eclipses, the stars, their distances and their orbits? Why were they so intensely interested in these and other technical mathematical problems before they knew how to build a wagon wheel? The reason is that in those days the people were divided into two classes, aristocrats and slaves.

As soon as education was given to those who had to toil, as well as to those who were aristocrats, this marvelous mechanical age in which we live had its beginning. Toilers with trained minds found little interest in astronomy. What did they care about eclipses? They were not concerned with theoretical mathematical problems, but with devising methods of lightening the burdens that were resting upon their backs. As a result of this change in the application of learning, we live today in an age of scientific miracles, which the mental efforts of these toilers have made possible. Today machinery can do almost anything. One of the latest achievements is the flight of Lindbergh from New York to Paris.

In 1880, when Louis Pasteur, a French scientist, a French toiler, who had arisen from poverty, put forth the mental effort necessary to discover the relation that exists between disease and disease germs, he gave to mankind the greatest human-welfare contribution of all time, arising from scientific investigation.

SCIENCE APPLIED TO SANITATION

I have returned this morning from the city of Chicago. The Sanitary District of Chicago includes the city of Chicago and fifty-nine other municipalities. I was invited by the district officials to inspect and make a report on their recently completed North Side Sewage Treatment Plant. This project is the largest, the most scientific, the most modern institution of its kind in the world. In this District there are 3,500,000 people. The Sanitary District was created by act of the legislature of the State of Illinois in 1889. Its purpose is the disposal of the sewage and other wastes of that District. The special aim was and is to avoid contaminating the waters of Lake Michigan—the only source of water supply for the city of Chicago and other municipalities in the Sanitary District.

Back in 1893, when the World's Fair was held in Chicago, engineers from every country looked with astonishment and admiration at the tremendous undertaking of changing the direction of the flow of the Chicago River. From flowing into Lake Michigan it was changed, by means of a deep cut, to flow out of the Lake through the city of Chicago, into the Des Plaines, the Illinois, and the Mississippi rivers, and thence into the Gulf of Mexico. Thus, through this canal, by the dilution method, the most modern then known, they had their sewage carried into the Gulf.

But it was in 1895 that the first great modern hydro-electric power plant was constructed at Niagara Falls. This brought to the water of the Niagara river a new value, and at once the power interests began to raise objections to the diversion of the water from Lake Michigan. Led by these power interests, cities located on the shores of the Great Lakes and states on their borders, have waged a long and fierce battle against this diversion. So intense have been these objections that leading citizens have been led to think it has lowered the water surface of the Great Lakes, to the serious injury of shipping. In fact many citizens suppose that the diversion has caused most of the difficulties of commerce on the Great Lakes. As a matter of fact, the water taken through the Chicago drainage canal has lowered the water surface but 5 inches; and by use of comparatively simple regulating works constructed at the outlets of the Lakes, fluctuations of level can be largely prevented and the water surfaces can be held at the highest desirable levels. Such works will protect all interests involved, greatly improve harbor conditions, allow water for power to be used more efficiently, and will make possible the restoration and perpetuation of the beauty of Niagara Falls.

THE MODERN OUTLOOK OF MEN

In this modern day, when the men who labor have been trained and educated, they have brought and they are bringing their minds to bear upon problems of practical value. The work of reversing the flow of the Chicago river was hardly completed in 1900, when the officials of the Sanitary District began, by experiment and by use of other scientific methods, to devise more recent, better, and more efficient ways of treating the wastes from the District than the dilution method.

The purification works they now have constructed, and those for which they have completely designed plans, will mean, when completed, an investment of $300,000,000. For the welfare of mankind, not on astronomy or on theoretical mathematics, but on the practical things of this practical age of miracles the District has already expended $182,000,000. Modern works like these are coming into the world because we are educating those who labor.

FOR PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC HEALTH

I was at the formal opening last Wednesday of one unit of these great works. This unit alone has cost $32,000,000. State officials, city officials, and eminent sanitary and civil engineers of the whole land were in attendance.

Were the preservation of the public health of Chicago a local problem only, I would not here refer to this project. But since Chicago is a center through which practically all east-bound and west-bound traffic of our country passes, all citizens may be affected by the health conditions of this Sanitary District.

For the purpose of establishing, in and about Chicago, the best possible conditions for public health, a veritable army of civil, electrical, and sanitary engineers are making scientific experiments and are studying the results of similar investigations wherever they are being performed. By holding this extensive organization together in entire freedom from politics or other prejudices, qualified men are given positions and are retained in them solely because of their merit. This is one of the reasons why the District has been able to design, construct, and formally to open the North Side Sewage Treatment works. I have said that up to this hour, it is the greatest accomplishment of its kind in the world, for the promotion and preservation of public health.

MAGNITUDE OF CHICAGO'S WORKS

It has been charged that Chicago was not putting forth reasonable efforts to purify and dispose of its sewage and similar wastes. You will be interested to know that there are but 23 other cities in the United States with a population greater than 100,000 which have sewage-disposal plants. All of these 23 combined have expended in this line of work but $149,000,000, while Chicago has expended for this purpose $182,000,000; that is, $33,000,000 more than have all these other 23 cities.

The citizens of Chicago exhibit a real American spirit. It is the same spirit that actuated our soldiers in France. It is said that when the Germans blew out a bridge at night, they were surprised the next morning to find that the Americans had replaced it and were across the river.

RECENT ELEVATION OF WOMAN

That is the first of the two phases of the historic educational problem that I desire to mention. The other is the education of women.

The time is short, even today, since women were admitted into educational institutions; and just as the education, in years past, of those who had to toil, has transformed the world into this marvelous scientific age, so the education of women is destined to produce further marvelous transformations in human welfare.

There are still many educational institutions that do not believe in co-education; that is, they do not admit women. In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints there is no educational opportunity provided for men that is not open also to women. Side by side with the women, high priests and patriarchs do their studying each Sunday morning. Young men preparing to go into the mission field get their training alongside of young women, many of whom are also being trained for missions. You heard it said this morning by one of our mission presidents, that he wants us to send more young women into the mission field. Thus we give to the women of the Church, as we have always done, the same educational opportunities that we give to men.

A GREAT CHURCH SCHOOL

A great school, to which women are freely admitted, has been instituted by the Church. For this purpose we have set apart the best period of the best day—Sunday morning from 10 to 12 o'clock. In this school we teach theology to all the people. Side by side in this great Church school men and women listen to the instruction. Will not this equal educational opportunity now provided for women, not only in the Church but in nearly every part of the world, yet produce another profound change in the welfare, the conduct, and the development of the human family?

THIS BOOK OF PUPIN'S

As part of the course of instruction, our Committee on Adult Recreation has recommended for our reading course this year a book entitled From Immigrant to Inventor, written by Michael Pupin. This book portrays a picture and cites an example of the far-reaching influence that a mother may exert upon the character and accomplishments of her son. While in this instance the mother was not versed in the learning of books, she nevertheless had the wisdom to perceive the value of education and the gift to impress upon her son the benefits that come from a trained mind.

At the age of fifteen Michael Pupin came to the United States. Today he holds the chair of electro-mechanics in Columbia University. The long-distance telephone was made possible by his inventions; the radio is due largely to his genius. We recommend to all people in the Church the reading of this book. Those who have read it appreciate the strength and uplift of the message it carries. It will tell you something of the spirit of our Mutual Improvement organizations. It will teach you to value in the lives of men the development that can come to them from women, especially the training that can come from mothers.

HOW HIS MOTHER GUIDED HIM

Michael Pupin received his inspiration from a mother in Serbia—a mother who was not able to read or write. In his boyhood he surmised that reading, writing, and arithmetic were methods of torture that had been devised by the teacher in order to punish students, especially boys who had appointments with their chums and playmates.

"But," says the inventor, "my mother soon convinced me that I was wrong. She could neither read nor write; and she told me that she always felt that she was blind, in spite of the clear vision of her eyes; so blind, indeed, that, as she expained, she did not dare to venture into the world much beyond the confines of her native village."

She would say to him: "My boy, if you wish to go out into the world, about which you hear so much, you must provide yourself with another pair of eyes; the eyes of reading and writing. * * * Knowledge is the golden ladder over which we climb to heaven; knowledge is the light which illuminates our path through this life and leads to a future life of everlasting glory." How closely these words approach the words of the prophet: "The Glory of God is Intelligence."

INFLUENCE OF MOTHERS

What think you of the power that comes into the life of a boy who has the right kind of mother? I urge all the people in the Church, especially those who are and those who expect to be mothers, to study this remarkable book. It proves how powerful is the influence that a mother has in the ambition, in the success, and in the spiritual values, in the life of a man. God bless the mother who whispers such messages of inspiration into the soul of her son. She might have said: "My son, if you live, I expect to see you realize in your life many of the ambitions and many of the hopes that I myself have not been able to achieve." So changed was his mind, so aroused was his determination, that in a short time he had the delight of convincing his mother that he could read and write as well as any boy.

Later, when the teacher had observed the change in the boy's attitude toward study, the teacher was so much astonished that he fancied a miracle had occurred. The mother told the teacher that in a dream she saw a Saint lay his hands upon the head of her son; then the Saint, pointing to her, said: "Daughter, your boy will soon outgrow the village school. Let him go out into the world, where he can find more brain food for his hungry head." She told this to the teacher in the presence of her son. It was like a message whispered into his ear. It brought higher ambitions to his soul. The words of his mother aroused him to action.

A DECISIVE STROKE

Next year the teacher selected this boy to give the recitation at their annual celebration. The teacher wrote the speech. While the mother was not able to read or write, she had a memory. She knew many of the psalms and took delight in reciting them. She amended and amplified the speech and had the boy rehearse it again and again. The success of the address, Pupin relates, was overwhelming. His chums—unruly boys—did not giggle; they looked interested, and thus encouraged the speaker. Pupin writes: "My mother cried for joy." Heaven bless the mothers who cry for joy at the successes of their sons. In the great training-school of the Church, where theological work on Sunday and activity work on Tuesday night, are undertaken, we have a course of training that continues from the cradle to the grave. We trust that, under divine guidance, this training will prepare mothers who can lead their sons as the mother of Michael Pupin led him.

He had heard of Lincoln during the war. His mother appealed now for him to be sent away to school—fifteen miles to a high school.

A FATHER'S DOUBTS

Notwithstanding objections raised by the father, the mother had her way; and the son, who had outgrown the country school, was sent to the higher educational institution. Here the boy learned of Benjamin Franklin and of electricity. The father had looked upon Franklin as an idle boy playing with a kite, and was indignant when the boy intimated that this American might possibly be wiser than the wise men of their country village. Womanlike, the mother took the boy's side; and soon the father was himself convinced that wisdom might be found in America. To train the mothers so that they shall exert on the lives of their sons the same fine influence and awaken the same stimulating ambition that swelled the heart of Michael Pupin,—this is an aim of the Church.

THE YOUTH'S RESOLVE

So much had the boy heard about America, that he sold his heavy coat, his books, his warm clothing, for money with which to buy his ticket to America; for he hoped here to achieve the success his mother had laid out for him. Leaving his school, he started for America without returning to his home. A letter to his mother, in affectionate terms said that, having outgrown the school and the teachers, he had departed for the land of Franklin and Lincoln. He assured her that "with her blessing and God's help" he would certainly succeed. He promised that he would return rich in rare knowledge and in honor. The story is thrilling. Will you read it? No woman can do so without receiving new inspiration, the kind of inspiration that we are aiming to give to all the women of the Church.

And so he sold his clothing and his coat, got his fare, and started for America. He did not know that he would have to provide his own mattress and blanket; therefore he almost perished. He said he had seen pictures of the American Indians. They did not seem to have much clothing. He sat by the smoke-stack during the night to keep from freezing. He landed in America at the age of fifteen, and no human soul was here that he had ever seen. When by an interpreter he was asked: "Don't you know somebody in America?" he answered that he had no relatives here and knew of nobody in the country but Franklin, Lincoln, and Harriett Beecher Stowe. The emigration agent at Castle Gardens said: "You showed good taste when you picked your American acquaintances."

PUPIN'S SEARCH FOR "LIGHT"

During all of his early days as a student and many of his years as an investigator, Michael Pupin went from library to library, from school to school, yes, even from country to country, endeavoring to find an answer to the question: "What is Light?" It was his life-long search for an answer to this question that gave him the power of concentration, and laid the foundation for his later inventions. He was searching for Light—the light that illuminates the universe, the true nature of which men did not understand. His question stirs in me a desire to know what light in a spiritual sense truly is. John, the beloved Apostle, says that Jesus "was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world and the world was made by him, yet the world knew him not." (John 1:9, 10.) The prayerful life of righteous living apparently brings into human hearts a something we refer to as a testimony—a satisfying feeling that enables one to speak as did Job when he said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

CAN PSYCHOLOGISTS EXPLAIN?

I am looking for some psychologist or some other student of human nature who can explain how it is and why it is that this prayerful life of righteous living specified by our Lord and Savior brings this satisfying knowledge into human hearts,—knowledge which hearts can feel and souls can know, but rarely can explain. It is a seemingly unexplainable conviction, which those who have not gone through this religious experience, have difficulty in understanding. Satisfied with the conviction that comes as a result of living in accordance with the teachings and example of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, the human soul rises to such a height of feeling that there is hardly any sacrifice in time, money, or effort, which those genuinely converted will not undergo for the advancement of the cause. I ask, "What is this light, which prayerful, righteous living brings into human hearts?"

THE REVELATION ON LIGHT

The language of a revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith in Section 88 of the Doctrine and Covenants, beginning with the 6th verse, refers to Jesus Christ the Son of God as "The Light of Truth; which truth shineth. This is the light of Christ. As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made.

"As also he is in the moon, and is in the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made;

"As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made;

"And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand.

"And the light which shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings;

"Which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space—

"The light which is in all things, which giveth life to all things, which is the law by which all things are governed, even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things."

SCIENCE CORROBORATES REVEALED TRUTH

Just as the physical light of the sun illuminates the globe and all the dark planets; and just as this light and its lesser form heat are necessary physical conditions of all animate life of the globe, all animal and vegetable life being dependent upon the heat from the sun, so the inner light, the light of the spirit, the illumination that comes to the dark souls of men, is derived from One who is the true Light which lighteth every man that comes into the world. The spirit and testimony of Jesus is the light of the soul—the light of the world. This true Light was in the world, and the world was made by him; yet the world knew him not till he revealed himself to those who were able to understand him and know who he is. So the physical light which, in another sense, is the life of animate nature on the globe, was in the world and the world of life was made or sustained by it, yet men do not now, even the most learned, understand its exact nature.

I probably cannot give to the question, "What is Light?" an answer that would satisfy the scientific intellect of Michael Pupin. Nor have I been able to find anyone who can answer the question, "What is the light that comes into human hearts as a result of the gospel of Jesus Christ?"

Do the words of the Prophet, above quoted, answer these queries? Is Jesus Christ "The light of truth," the source of all the light of which I am speaking?

READ THE BOOK

Mutual Improvement Organizations recommend to the Church a reading course. This Pupin book, From Immigrant to Inventor, is one of the books recommended. Read it, I pray you. Study it; for the book impresses me as being filled with the gospel spirit. You women are to train up a generation of strong, noble, and Christian men, are destined to produce a generation of women who can teach the gospel to all the people in all the world—a preparation for the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. This great educational institution that the Church has established for men and women, for old and young, will help to prepare for this great work. May we succeed in it; and may we have the power, the influence, and the testimony, that "to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6) we may effectively preach this gospel of Jesus Christ as it has been restored here and now by the power of God.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

Elder McKay referred to an admonition given by the Apostle Paul to his son, in the faith, Timothy. That message was to hold the faith. While he was giving expression and explanation of that glorious message, I thought of another message which the same apostle sent to that same valiant servant of the Lord, Timothy. I presume that he felt a fatherly interest in Timothy and probably noted that even that valiant servant of God had become somewhat derelict in the observance of his duty; and so he admonished him to "stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." And I thought that if we or any of us are to hold and keep the faith the means by which it can be done is to stir up within us that glorious gift which we have received by the laying on of hands of the elders of this Church. I refer to that priceless gift, the gift of the Holy Ghost.

There is an absolute necessity on the part of Latter-day Saints, if they are to grow in a knowledge of God and in good works, day by day, that they have the help of their Heavenly Father, which he is more than willing to bestow upon them by transmitting or giving to them this wonderful and priceless gift, the Holy Ghost. It is a privilege that we have, a promise that has been made unto all of our Father's children who will comply with the necessary conditions, that they may have the benefit of that great and wonderful gift. Those conditions are in the first place: Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He is the one who was chosen of God to be the Savior of the world, and "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Therefore, my brethren and sisters, in the exercise of this faith we must turn to God.

How are we to maintain and to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost? That was very clearly pointed out by the great apostle, Peter, in his sermon on the day of Pentecost:

"Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

"For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

So this gift, wonderful and precious though it is, may be realized and enjoyed by all the children of God to whom this call may come. Missionaries are sent out all over the world to make the call unto the inhabitants of the earth to comply with those conditions that will enable them to receive the wonderful gift by which alone they may know the things of God, that they may grow in the knowledge of him whom to know is life eternal.

President Grant, in his opening address, quoted from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants some very precious words. I am going to repeat two paragraphs from Section 121, which he quoted:

"Let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly; then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

"The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever."

We have no doubt read those wonderful paragraphs time and time again, and sometimes we are disposed to say that they are very beautiful words. That is a literary gem, although it may not in all particulars comply with all the rules of rhetoric; yet to me it is one of the great literary gems. Nothing more beautiful can be found in holy writ. But it is much more than that—more than a literary gem.

Here we have, it seems to me, a wonderful exposition of how to retain the gift of the Holy Ghost, to have the knowledge of the truth, to keep the faith. There are two things that are stated in those paragraphs which are essential and upon which are predicated the most wonderful blessings that we can possibly conceive of. What are they?

First: "Let thy bowels be full of charity towards all men." Well, that is a great commandment, the one that is like unto the first, which is to "love thy neighbor as thy self." It is to let your hearts go out, and especially to the household of faith, in love, sympathy and charity unfeigned, to all men.

And second: "Let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly." If we would garnish our thoughts with virtue unceasingly there would be no room for sin. We need not concern ourselves so much as to what we may do, every act for which we are responsible is preceded by our thoughts, and if those thoughts are pure and holy, if they be garnished with virtue, the act will correspond, and we will not wander into bye nor forbidden paths. We will not go to the right nor to the left; we will not fall into sin and iniquity, but we will walk in the straight and narrow path that leadeth unto life eternal. These two things will bring salvation to our souls; for we read that if we do them: "Then shall our confidence wax strong in the presence of God." That means faith; that means that we will hold the faith and it will grow strong. We shall ask and receive, we shall seek and find, we shall knock and the door will be opened unto us. What a wonderful faith we may have if we will comply with those two conditions.

And then we read further: "And the doctrine of the priesthood,"—and that is the power of God—"shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven." Not with any great bombasting, not with any great manifestation, but just quietly and without any assuming, as the dews fall from heaven. What a glorious promise that is, to be able to exercise the powers of the priesthood to which that same section refers so very greatly, and to exercise them in love unfeigned and in long-suffering and in patience. What a glorious thing it is if we can exercise those powers of the priesthood. Yet if we will do these two things, this doctrine shall distil upon our souls and shall fill our whole being from the crowns of our heads to the soles of our feet.

And then we read on further: "And the Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion." Latter-day Saints, we know how we received that wonderful gift. It is essential for all mankind to receive it, and the promise has been given to them all if they will comply with the conditions. Now the important thing is to retain it. Do those two things. That means to practice faith in God and repentance from sin, garnish thy thoughts with virtue. That is the great gospel of repentance. Let your faith and your confidence "wax strong in the presence of God," receive these glorious blessings, let your heart go out in love and sympathy for your fellow men; and these blessings and these powers shall be yours and will lead you eventually, just as true as we live, into the presence of God to receive the reward of the righteous. For we read on still further that if we do these things our "scepter"—that is the weapon that we may use to combat the powers of evil—"shall be an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth." That is the sword of truth, a two-edged sword. Learn how to wield it, young men who are going out into the mission field. It is the weapon whereby you may combat the powers of evil and bring converts to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ—"an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth." If you will only do these two things, that will be the weapon that you can use effectively in the saving of human souls.

And then comes the climax of all blessings that will accrue to those who will comply with those conditions. It reads like this: "And thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion." That is our salvation, that is our exaltation, that is wherein we become like unto our Father in heaven, exercising divine power in having bestowed upon us a dominion; and it shall increase. This dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, "and without compulsory means it shall flow unto us forever and ever." That is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

We read these two paragraphs and do not realize how much we could find within them. The President admonished us to study the book of Doctrine and Covenants. Last year we had for our slogan—the young people of this Church: "We stand for a fuller knowledge of the Book of Mormon and a testimony of its divine origin." I feel like proposing as a slogan for some future consideration: We stand for the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and for a testimony of its divine origin. The books are full of just such passages as these I have quoted, and they have upon them the impress of divinity.

Let us study the word of God, his revelations; for his Church has been built upon that solid foundation which brings us into communion with our Heavenly Father. May we grow in the knowledge of the truth and in good works day by day, and realize the glorious promises that have been made to us, conditioned upon our compliance with the laws upon which they are predicated, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

Presiding Patriarch of the Church

It is one thing to give advice and counsel and it is another thing to take it. A great many of the members of the Church have sought counsel at the hands of the General Authorities of the Church, but they have not all taken the counsel that was given them. It is the privilege, however, of the officers of the Church to give counsel and advice when the opportunity affords itself. I am sure the Latter-day Saints will have much to take home from the results of this conference, from the fruits of the testimony of the Spirit, and the experience of the brethren. The members and officers, I am sure, have been wonderfully blessed during this conference.

I wish to express my appreciation for the kindness of the Lord to me, for the blessings which I have received since I last had the privilege of standing before this congregation. I am very grateful for the strength I possess to stand here today, although I am not free from suffering while I do so.

I know there are many people in the Church who are suffering today from lack of employment—from the lack of employment to provide the necessities of life—and a word of encouragement sometimes helps. I am very happy to know that a word of encouragement and prayer, if you please, occasionally helps those who are discouraged. I have in my office a collection of testimonies from individuals all over the Church, relative to their gratitude for the blessings they have received—the result of a word of encouragement in an hour of need; and I am grateful that it has been my privilege to perform my part in this sacred service. I regret that I am not able to do more of it. I wish to take this opportunity to admonish the people generally to take the advice and the counsel given them in this conference.

I have been asked many times concerning a promise that is frequently given in blessings to the effect that the person would be guided by the influence and promptings of his guardian angel. These people have said: "Brother Smith, who is our guardian angel?" The spirits of our departed loved ones, as well as other spirits, may be appointed to act as our guardian angels, but they are special and come by appointment, while the Holy Spirit yields a constant influence over our lives for our guidance and protection. Brother Whitney has explained the Spirit of the Lord that is in all things. There are many passages in our scriptures which explain the fact that the Spirit of God is in all things, for they were created spiritually before they were created temporally. Every living thing upon this earth was created spiritually before it was created temporally; therefore, everything that is upon this earth or ever has been, has had a spirit, and that spirit has had a guide for its protection. And so we Latter-day Saints, members of the Church of Christ, having been especially given this spirit, having it pointed out to us by special notice, it is an important thing in our lives to guide us. And I have admonished and advised a great many of our saints that if they will only hearken unto those "sweet and peaceful promptings" they will know the truth, they will know how to decide upon matters for their safety and success in temporal and in spiritual affairs. I know this is the truth, because I have tried it myself, and I believe it, that it is the prompting of the Spirit of the Lord in its influence over our lives. I think, too, that as long as we are conscious of our activity and know what we are doing we never do wrong but that we know it is wrong; because we have been previously warned, whether it is right or wrong, if we will only listen. So I am prepared, my brethren and sisters, to further admonish you and further advise you to pay attention to those "sweet and peaceful promptings," and if you will listen to them and act wisely, you will make fewer mistakes and enjoy more peace and safety in life.

President Woodruff advised that we listen to our first impressions, and that too I am prepared to endorse and add to my list of advice. As a rule the first impression is the right one, and if we will listen to it, it will guide us in the ways of truth and righteousness and safety, in our journey through mortality. Referring again to the late President Woodruff—this principle became to him a daily guide in all of the affairs of his work; a wonderful example to us all. In many instances he and his loved ones were spared from destruction through immediate response to his first impression—the promptings of that Still Small Voice that whispered to him and guided him in the performance of his duty and in the ways of safety. He has left us some very interesting little stories for our benefit regarding this principle.

I pray the Lord to guide you, my brethren and sisters, safely in your work, that you may be further obedient to those whisperings for your protection and guidance in the Church. I thank the Lord for your faith and for your prayers for my personal welfare; and in turn I pray God to bless you, that he will continue to bless the authorities of the Church, President Grant and his associates—I know that the Lord has blessed them, for he has blessed me in being associated with them. I am grateful indeed for the prayers and blessings of my associates in the ministry, and am very grateful for the faith and the prayers of the saints, for I know that they have prevailed for my blessing. I pray that the Lord will continue to bless this Church, and all those who are working in it, whether at home or in the mission field. I pray the blessings of the Lord upon those who may be disturbed in their feelings and do not know how to decide upon what they ought to do. If they will listen, and then act when the prompting comes, I predict that they will receive comfort and blessing for their relief. May the blessings of the Lord attend us throughout the remainder of this conference, and when we go home may we take with us the advice and counsel and blessings which are given for our benefit, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

Of the First Council of Seventy

"After all that has been said, the greatest and most important duty is to preach the gospel."

That was said by the prophet of the new dispensation in a council meeting of the priesthood in Kirtland on the 6th day of April, 1837. It was a meeting of the Apostles and a number of other brethren holding the priesthood, at which the Prophet had been speaking and setting in order the quorums of the priesthood and teaching them its doctrine, also straightening out some difficulties that had arisen in some of the quorums. He dwelt at great length upon these doctrines of the priesthood. He spoke on that occasion for nearly two hours, part of the time in severe reproof of some of the actions of the brethren, and then afterwards in setting forth great doctrines pertaining to the priesthood, he uttered the words I have just read:

"After all that has been said, the most important duty is to preach the gospel."

The trend of thought in the several meetings we have held in this conference has been largely in the direction of giving encouragement and admonition to go on in the work of preaching the gospel, that has been restored in this great and new dispensation of it. And so this passage came to my mind from the history of the Church, and I have asked myself several times during the conference if there has been any change in respect to this matter mentioned by the prophet. Is it still true that "after all that has been said the most important thing is the preaching of the gospel"?

In a number of the early revelations that were given in the Church about the time of its organization and the publication of the Book of Mormon, there is answer given to a number of personal questions, to brethren who had rendered some assistance to the Prophet in bringing forth the Book of Mormon. They saw his preparations being made for the organization of the Church, and they began to wonder what their relationship to the forthcoming work would be, what it would mean to them. The Prophet's brother, Hyrum, came making such inquiry; so did Joseph Knight, the grandfather of our "Uncle Jesse Knight," as we knew him here in our pleasant relations with him. The Prophet's father came to know what would be his lot and part in the forthcoming of the great work, and the Prophet by means of the Urim and Thummim, which he still had in his possession, made inquiry and told them what would be their lot and part; and there is this singular thing in all the answers that were given at that time through the divine instrument of revelation, through the inspired Prophet, that there was no promise made of material welfare and prosperity, no office promised to them, no honor among men, nothing that the heart of man naturally craves. The type of the answers in those several revelations, and there are some eight or ten of them, was the one given to Oliver Cowdery. The Lord said to him in the revelation given unto him as to what he should do in the new dispensation:

"Many times you have desired of me to know that which would be of the most worth unto you.

"Behold, blessed are you for this thing, and for speaking my words which I have given you according to my commandments.

"And now, behold, I say unto you, that the thing which shall be of most worth unto you is to declare repentance unto this people, that you may bring souls unto me, that you may rest with them in the kingdom of my Father. Amen."

It was the Lord Jesus Christ speaking.

Again to David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery conjointly this was said:

"Remember, the worth of souls is great in the sight of God,

"For behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

* * * * *

"And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

"Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!"

I take it that there has been no change in these principles; that it still holds good that great is the joy of the Lord in the soul that is brought to repentance: that it is still true that if one should labor his whole life and succeed in bringing only one soul to a knowledge of the truth and into the kingdom of God, great will be his joy in the kingdom of our Father; and that it is still true that the most important work in which man can engage is to declare repentance unto this people, that the ministry of this Church may bring souls unto God. Therefore, it is eminently fitting in this conference that our brethren should be inspired to emphasize this work of "preaching the gospel," and what the Prophet said in 1837 is still true, that "after all that has been said the most important thing is the preaching of the gospel."

The strength and power of our Church and the progress it has made in the world and the great things that have been accomplished by it have been in due proportion to our adherence to this missionary spirit that prompts us so willingly to preach the gospel.

Preaching the gospel is the dissemination of God's revealed truths, the messages of God, to the world. In the nature of the thing itself there could be no more important thing than to impart knowledge and wisdom of God unto the children of men, that it may save them to the uttermost. What could be more important than spreading abroad a knowledge of those enlightening truths which God has sent into the world through his appointed and inspired prophets? And I think I may say, for I feel it to be true, that in all the responsibilities and labors that have been placed upon the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, our people have not been more faithful in anything than they have been in this thing of preaching the gospel. I think the Lord is well pleased with his people for the responses they have made to this call of his to send forth his messages of truth into the world, and I am delighted to see that the Church has responded also to the great spirit of the message that was to be delivered to the earth in the hour of God's judgment. St. John describes it as he saw it in vision when he declared that he had seen "another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, saying," and saying it with a loud voice, "Fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment has come, and worship him who created heaven and earth, and the seas, and the fountains of water."

It was God's call to the world to come to the worship of the true and the living God, and it was to go to all people. And it was particularized so that there should be no mistake—it was to go to "every nation and kindred and tongue and people"; and the Church has responded to that splendid universal spirit and mission given to our Church in having the gospel restored to it. We have been practically to every nation, kindred, tongue and people. I have marveled sometimes in my own heart that we should remember the undeveloped peoples in the islands of the sea, even in the early decades of our history; that we should remember people with whose race and with whose national life we have little in sympathy. Yet, under the inspiration that goes with this work of preaching the gospel, the elders of the Church have been sent everywhere, and almost every land and race and nation has given up of its sons and daughters to be gathered to Zion to stand as witnesses unto God and to the world, that there is virtue and spiritual power in this gospel that has been restored in these days; and that it has taken hold of the splendid spirit of the fatherhood for the human race; and by our universal proclamation of the gospel we have borne witness to the world that God is interested in all humanity, that he is no respecter of persons. In that spirit the Church has labored.

I rejoice greatly in the report of President Grant in regard to the building program of the Church, by which in very many of the missions, almost in all of them, there have been churches erected to the name of the Most High God. I have a thought in relation to that work which came to me while we were dedicating some of the chapels which were builded in the Eastern States Mission while I was its president; and we never dedicated a church, however humble it was, but what I felt and said, that here we were erecting an altar, not unto the unknown God, but to the known Father of the human race, the God of heaven, whose Son Jesus Christ is. And all through the land where we build these chapels we are erecting altars to the known God, to which the people may come and find the truth and be instructed therein. I rejoice in every chapel that is builded, another altar to the known God, a center to which the people may come and receive the truth. In this spirit we are erecting these chapels as altars to God in the midst of the people. The Savior said that the kingdom of heaven was like unto leaven that the woman hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened, filled with life. And so in this blessed land of ours, the land of Zion, these chapels, meeting places, these temples, are so many altars unto God, calling the inhabitants of the earth to the worship of the true and the living God. For it is the plain implication in the vision of St. John on Patmos that the whole world had departed from the worship of the true God and must needs be called back to the worship of the true and living God.

Whenever I pass this temple, walk alongside of it and contemplate its towers, its architectural beauty—of course I remember primarily that it is the House of the Lord wherein the sacred mysteries of heaven are revealed for the instruction of men, and holy ordinances for the living and for the dead are performed—but I hold it as sacred in my heart as I look upon it; and I have another thought in connection with it, and that is that it is a mass testimony of a whole people, a testimony to the world that God has spoken, and that he has revealed his truths once more for the salvation of men and has ushered in the dispensation of the fulness of times. It is a mass—a community testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and becomes a witness wherever even the counterfeit presentment of its architectural beauty is published to the world. I love the temple as a testimony to the world of God's great new dispensation of his gospel, and the other temples also partake of the same glory and power and spirit.

Now, I am taking too much time on these things. There is something else I wanted to say, and it is this: We have been abundantly admonished in this conference to give attention to the preaching of the gospel and to the living of its principles; but I am emphasizing the matter of preaching it to the world. Since, however, we are so admonished in this our latest conference to regard this part of the work of the Lord, what is necessary on our part to get imbued with this spirit of preaching the gospel?

In the early decades of the Church there were existing conditions that contributed mightily to the spiritual life and upholding of the zeal and hopes of the people, but things that are not so prevalent now in our midst. For example, in the first years of the existence of the Church, the fact that we were proclaiming that God had spoken again, that a new revelation had been given—the truth of that was immediately challenged. Ministers of the gospel set themselves to work to prove that the volume of scripture was completed and forever closed, and, therefore, there was no room for the Book of Mormon, and there was no occasion for the revelation given through the Prophet Joseph Smith. The awful voice of prophecy had ceased. There were to be no more prophets. The volume of scripture was completed and forever closed. Well, we won that victory. It was not difficult to do so. The evidence of the scriptures and the genius of the gospel of Jesus Christ itself demanded a continual revelation if the spiritual life of the Church was to be maintained; and so our early elders obtained an easy victory over those who assailed us on that point. But the thought of a new revelation was a novel one; it attracted the attention of the world; it became a center of interest. We were witnesses of it. Well, I say that battle was easily won, and we hear little today of objection against the idea that God's power is just as great in modern times as in ancient times, and there are very few who will undertake to disprove the possibility or even the probability of continuous revelation.

Also in those early decades we had in our minds the idea of finding and establishing Zion, and afterward, through the revelations of God, we found where the center place would be and could bear witness of that; and some of the saints from the East gathered into Jackson County and founded the city of Zion, where a temple was to be built, the plans of which were revealed to the Prophet. Then came on persecution and expulsion from Jackson County.

Then the great point of interest for a number of years was "the redemption of Zion" and the re-establishment of the saints upon their lands and the building of the city and the temple. Well, that does not now play so important a part in the message we have for the world in the preaching of the gospel.

Also we had revealed to us the doctrine, the great doctrine, of consecration of all our possessions and the receiving back of a stewardship from our consecrations. We had a desire to see the wealth that should be created by the hands of the people more justly distributed, so that there would be less distinction of rich and poor in the Church, and that there might be a community of interests and a community of resources from which the welfare of the people could be provided. That occupied our attention for a number of years. But we are not saying so much about that now. It is in the background of things, a part of the new dispensation, just as the redemption of Zion is. But what I wish to say is that these several things are not at present what you would call live issues with us. We are not giving much attention to those things now.

Again in the early decades of the Church the people were led to believe almost in the immediate coming, the glorious coming, of the Lord Jesus Christ in power and great glory, and that the time was near at hand. Indeed there were many who fixed upon about the time when he would come. Well, we still believe in the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, but we do not very often refer to it in these days, and it is not so particularly influencing our actions and our faith as it did in times past. The Lord will come when he will come, and that he will come we are assured. The time of it is in his hands, where we feel that we can safely let it rest. Indeed, we must needs leave it there because it is part of the revelation of God unto the world that no man knoweth the day nor the hour of his coming, no, not even the angels in heaven. So I say we leave that in the hands of God.

Also we looked in those times past to a rather wonderful and dramatic gathering of the Ten Tribes of Israel, with mountains of ice flowing down before their presence and their coming in great numbers, with the everlasting hills trembling at their presence, and all that. Perhaps we have not always attributed sufficient importance to the imagery of poetry and revelation in giving interpretation to these scenes. Well, the Ten Tribes of Israel, if they are to come in that manner, will come when they will, and the Lord will bring them.

But now, what is the situation that confronts us in the matter of preaching the gospel? Why, we are reaching more fundamental things than these. We have discovered from the remarks of the brethren in this conference that the world is ignorant of the nature of God the Father, ignorant of the nature of the Lord Jesus Christ. Few Christians believe that the resurrected Redeemer is today what he was at the time of his resurrection, a union of spirit with his beautiful personality of body, and the two united in an immortal, indestructible, forever-living Son of God. They believe rather that the splendid personality—splendid as it is represented in the New Testament to be—had been dissolved into some indefinable essence, such as the rose, as it decays, dissolves and gives off a beautiful perfume with which it dies, and which to produce it must needs die. And so the Son of God has become an indefinable presence, merely; while the splendid personality which stood before his apostles when he gloriously said as a resurrected personage: "All power is given to me in heaven and earth. Go now and preach the gospel to every nation, and lo, I am with you to the end of the world," for many Christians has passed out of tangible existence, and God has become a diffused essence through the world. Well, they don't know the truth about God and Jesus Christ, whom to know is declared to be life eternal.

We have heard from some of the brethren here and have read that men do not know and may not hope to know the purposes of God in creation. Men confess that they do not know whether the resurrection is to bring to pass personal immortality or whether men, too, are going to pass off into something like an essence, or be dispelled into ordinary elements of some kind or other about which they know little or nothing.

These great fundamental truths in relation to God and man and the resurrection from the dead; and "how we shall spend eternity," and "what we shall do there"—they are ignorant of these things. And so the Lord God, early in the history of this new dispensation, told his ministers, (years before the Prophet announced that the most important thing was to preach the gospel) what it would be necessary for them to do in order to be prepared to preach the gospel. The Lord said to them:

"I give unto you a commandment—"

These were elders waiting for the time to go out into the mission field—

"I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom.

"Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand;

"Of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms."

And now, why invite this group of elders into this very extended field of knowledge and admonish them to be faithful in their studies in all these things that go back into the past, that deal with the present, which extend into the future, a knowledge of kingdoms and governments and countries and laws of men, things in heaven and on the earth and under the earth, which embrace all possible fields of knowledge? Why did God give this admonition to these elders? Listen to the answer:

"That ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.

"Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who has been warned to warn his neighbor."

And also in that sermon of the Prophet's wherein he told the elders that the greatest thing was to preach the gospel. "All," said he, "are to preach the gospel by the power and influence of the Holy Ghost." "None can preach the gospel without the Holy Ghost."

So now, there is our work of preparation set before us, and that is the immediate duty and work of the priesthood of God, to make preparation, to constitute yourselves an intelligent ministry, operating and testifying in the power of the Holy Ghost. The Lord bless you. Amen.

A vocal solo, "Lord, remember me," was sung by Arnold Blackner.

The congregation then sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Elder James Duckworth, President of the Blackfoot stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 10 a. m. Sunday, October 7, 1928.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Sunday, October 7, 1928. Every seat in the tabernacle and all available space in the aisles and doorways was occupied by the large number of people who had assembled. Thousands who were unable to get inside of the tabernacle listened to the services as they were broadcast in the assembly hall and on the tabernacle grounds.

Conference reconvened at 10:00 a. m.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Praise to the Man."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Stephen L. Chipman.

The choir sang, "That sweet story of old."

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am grateful to my heavenly Father this morning to be permitted to worship with you, as I have been during the preceding sessions of this conference. It is a wonderful thing to live in a land such as this in which we dwell and enjoy the blessings of the free, to be permitted to worship God according to the dictates of our conscience, and to feel that we accord to every living human being the same privilege that we desire for ourselves.

DIVINE ANCESTRY

When our Lord prepared this earth that it might be the abiding place of his children, he planned that those who would come to dwell upon it should know him as their Father, they being created in his image, both male and female. He gave to those spirits that he had created the opportunity to have physical tabernacles, that they might enjoy the blessings of the earth that he had prepared for them.

It does seem strange that so many people doubt our divine ancestry, and that God is the Father of our spirits; yet from the very beginning, from the very earliest period of which we have any record in this world, he has been teaching men and women this fact.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR EXISTENCE

I am thinking this morning of the condition that confronts mankind, how many there are who do not know why we live upon this earth, comparatively few who really understand the purpose of the coming of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ; and yet in this great land of America, in this latter day he has restored that knowledge, and fortunately for hundreds of thousands of men and women they have been permitted to receive it. When God created the earth and placed our first parents upon it, he did not leave them without knowledge concerning himself. It is true that there had been taken from them the remembrance of their pre-existent life, but in his tender mercy he talked with them and later he sent his choice servants to instruct them in the things pertaining to eternal life. History has repeated itself many times. Refusal to obey the counsels of the Lord has been followed by destruction, and I fear that unless humanity recognizes him as the God of this earth, disaster may come again to the nations.

A BLESSED AGE

We live in a marvelous age. No people who have dwelt upon the earth have partaken of so many of the comforts and blessings of life. No people have had such opportunities, as are offered to the children of men in the day and age in which we live; and remarkable as it may seem, you analyze the conditions that exist, every blessing that has come to us has been one that conforms to the ideals of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We do not have to go outside the Church for real blessings; we do not have to depart from the teachings of our forefathers in order to enjoy that which is most precious in life, but on the contrary those who believe most firmly in God, those who know of the divine mission of Jesus Christ and partake of the gifts that come as a result of his teachings are the happiest people that can be found upon the earth. I fear, however, that the prosperity that attends us has a tendency to draw our attention from the most important things of life. I fear that the sins of men blind them to the blessings of the Giver of all good; I am hoping and praying with you that this great and wonderful nation of which we are a part may not succumb to the evils that afflict mankind and forsake the generous offering of our Heavenly Father, of peace and plenty and happiness, while we dwell here upon the earth.

THE EXPERIENCE OF FORMER CIVILIZATIONS

I have no doubt that in the days of Noah there were many people who had opportunities to know the truth. I have no doubt that in his day he was very diligent in trying to teach the people the purpose of their being. He knew why they were here. He knew that it was necessary to have faith in God. He knew that all that we enjoy comes from a generous Heavenly Father, and for one hundred and twenty years he traveled to and fro in that section of the world and proclaimed the truth, until finally the wickedness of the world became so great that our Heavenly Father directed his faithful servant to prepare to save himself and his household. Then a great deluge swept the earth, and those who had been created in the image of God, who had been alien to the blessings that he offered them so generously, were drowned in order that a new race might come upon the earth, with opportunity to learn of his ways that they might walk in his paths.

You remember the experience of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. The servants of the Lord were there, anxious to teach the way of our Heavenly Father, yet the philosophies of men turned them aside from the wisdom of the living God, and eventually fire came down from heaven and destroyed those communities, not because they were serving the God of this earth, but because they were serving Baal and other false gods.

Let us consider America and think of how our Heavenly Father in his mercy, directed the Jaredites at the time of the confusion of tongues, at the tower of Babel, and brought them to this great western land and gave them teachers after his own heart. It was not many generations after they came here until they became alien to the truth. They sought after those things that gratified passions and appealed to their appetites, and the result was that as a nation they were exterminated. Then there were the descendants of Lehi, those who came from Jerusalem six hundred years before the birth of Christ. They came to America and began to settle it. Then there grew up among them those who did not desire to serve the Lord. Those who had been faithful eventually succumbed to the evils of mankind; dishonesty, immorality, intemperance and all those things that have a tendency to break down civilization, resulting in complete destruction of the descendants of Nephi.

Why? Because they would not serve our Heavenly Father whose children they were.

Analyze the conditions of the American Indian. He came from a people who were educated, a people who had enjoyed the blessings of civilization, a people who had been taught by the prophets of the living God; yet because of indifference and carelessness, because of their wilfulness and selfishness, they too lost the power to reason and to think properly, and eventually became the obscure and unlettered and untutored savage that was found here when the white men came from a foreign shore to settle here. These people refused the blessings of the living God and lost their birthright, as did many other races. Each of these nations has fallen from the high estate to which God had permitted it to come, has lost its heritage because the people were not willing to humble themselves and acknowledge that our Heavenly Father was the God of this earth.

A LAND OF LIBERTY

Think of the blessings that came to America. How Columbus was inspired to go out upon the great waters and find his way to this western land. Then the settlers of Jamestown, the pilgrim fathers, and all those early pioneers who came to America because they desired to serve God according to the dictates of their conscience. The Lord blessed them and finally raised up a nation that is the wonder and the admiration of the earth. Those men who framed the Constitution of the United States were not only wise in the things of this world, but they were inspired by our Heavenly Father who raised them up for that very purpose. This marvelous government that we enjoy in this favored land of liberty, was given to man that it might be a blessing to him. Here men and women are permitted to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. Our Heavenly Father will not coerce or compel mankind, but in loving kindness has given to them from the age when the world was first peopled until now, opportunity to know the truth.

THE GOSPEL—WHAT IT IS

What is this gospel to which we refer? It is the only power of God unto salvation, it is the only plan that will enable man to go back into the presence of his Maker and enjoy the celestial kingdom. It is the only plan that will bring peace and happiness to all the children of men, of every race and creed; and it is the one plan that should give men a desire to serve him and keep his commandments, in order that they might be happy and rejoice in the happiness of their fellows. Faith in God, repentance of sin, baptism for the remission of sins after the pattern by which the Savior was baptized, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost that men may receive increased inspiration from our Heavenly Father to enable them to follow his teachings and know that he lives—these are the fundamentals of the gospel of our Lord. Not difficult to understand but easy if we will but submit ourselves to that feeling that always comes to us when in the humility of our souls we recognize the Creator of all things. In our day the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been organized, not after the wisdom of men. When I speak thus I have no unkindness in my heart towards all these great religious organizations in the world. Men have done their best to give to the world a system of ethics and a desire to live so that the best that is in life might be enjoyed, but it remained for God the Eternal Father, through his Son Jesus Christ, to give to this earth in this latter-day the gospel that he formerly gave to the people in Judea, and to give to us in our day a more perfect understanding of the purpose of our being. We are privileged to live in the blaze of this glorious century when our Heavenly Father has organized his Church, has placed in it divine authority and has required those who possessed that authority to administer, not in arrogance, not lifted up in their own conceit, but to go to and fro in the world and in humility and love say to his children: "Our Father has again given to the earth the gospel of our Lord, and we come to divide with you this mercy that gives us such peace and such happiness."

THE DUTY OF PARENTS

As I think of the conditions that exist, the lawlessness that seems to have grown more rampant throughout the world since the war, I am reminded of some lines of Rudyard Kipling:

"Lord God of hosts be with us yet, Lest we forget, lest we forget."

And you men who stand upon the watchtowers of Zion, you men upon whom has been conferred divine authority, I plead with you that you honor that authority. We have a wonderful Church organization, but the one place where we may have greater influence than any other is in the homes in which we reside. We have our Sabbath Schools, our Mutual Improvement Associations, our Relief Societies, our Primaries, our Church schools and seminaries. All these institutions are intended to develop the best that is in mankind, but we as parents of children in this Church have no right to place the responsibility upon these organizations to establish faith in the hearts of these children that God has placed in our homes. It is your duty and mine to teach the children that come to our homes. It is your duty and mine to exemplify in the presence of our wives and our children those glorious principles that our Heavenly Father has given to us to prepare us for eternal life in his celestial kingdom. And if we fail to do that, then will we come under condemnation, and we will discover when it is too late that we have missed the great blessing that our Father offered to us. He has told us very plainly in this latter-day that those of us who have children in Zion or in any of her stakes that are organized, who fail to teach them faith in God, repentance, baptism, and those things that are essential for their salvation, the sin will be upon our heads. I desire to emphasize this obligation that is upon us, that we cannot shift to anybody else in the world the duty to exemplify in our lives and to teach these boys and girls in our homes, that as they grow up they may develop in the nurture and admonition of our Heavenly Father.

THE DANGER THAT CONFRONTS US

We live in a great and wonderful age. The glory of this century is beyond that of any other century; but I feel that we are in just as great danger as were those who lived in the days of Noah, or those who lived in the days of Nephi upon this great western land. We are in as great danger as any nation that has ever lived, because God has given us more than any other nation, and if in arrogance and in pride we turn aside from the Father of us all, and in our carelessness and indifference towards sacred things we spend our lives for the things of this world, it will not be very long until the chastening hand of an all-wise Father may come upon us as a nation, and we be counted as the nations of the past, among those that have withered away. I pray that we may be worthy of our heritage, that the example of the members of this Church in every nation where they live, may be such that others observing their good works may be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven. How I pray that we as the servants of the Lord may have charity for mankind, may have patience with those who err, and in kindness and love go forward teaching the simple principles of the gospel of our Lord to the blessing of every soul with whom we come in contact.

I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was raised up in this latter-day to bring again the gospel of our Lord. I know that the authority of our Heavenly Father is upon the earth for the blessing of mankind, not to make those who receive that authority arrogant, but to make them humble; not to make those who have received special privileges feel that they are greater than others, but to make us humble in our souls, prayerful in our hearts, and considerate of all men in all that we do, and thus exemplify by upright lives that which our Heavenly Father desires us to teach.

I know that if we will serve God, if we will keep his commandments, if we will honor the priesthood that has been conferred upon us, if we will sustain those whom he has called to preside over us, with faith and devotion, when the time shall come for us to go hence we will find our names written in the Lamb's Book of Life, and we will receive at the hands of the Master of heaven and earth that glorious welcome home: "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter into the joy of thy Lord." And I bear witness of it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

One of the tests of worth is the test of time. Whatever has been tried over a long period of time and not found wanting is worthy of our consideration. I have observed with deep satisfaction that since the opening remarks of President Grant the speakers of this conference have reverted to the fundamentals, those principles which have long been in force and effect, and which lie at the very basis of our theology and our philosophy. I sincerely trust that I may be in consonance with these thoughts and expressions as I enter a plea for reverence for God, for sacred places, for sacred establishments and institutions.

Some one has said that the national characteristic of America is lawlessness. It is a terrible indictment. I hope that it is not warranted. Whether it be so or not, we are all persuaded that there is too much of flippancy; there is too little serious consideration and respect for established institutions and for worthy practices which have been tried and proven over a period of many years.

REVERENCE FOR GOD

I am one who believes that morality and righteousness have their inception and bases in religion. I believe that God is the author of all good, and that there is no good which emanates from any source in this world other than from our Father and our God. Respect and reverence for his holy name are essential to spiritual growth and development, and in my judgment they are essential to a proper attitude toward all institutions of society, all our relationships and everything that is worth while in this life. No man can be disrespectful of Deity and have in his heart the proper attitude toward the creations of Deity. A man who properly understands his relationship to God and the endowments which he has received from the Creator, will be filled with reverence and thanksgiving. After all, reverence is an attitude which shows itself in a deferential behavior.

REVERENTIAL RESPECT FOR THE BODY OF MAN

God has given us everything we have in life. He has made it possible for us to live in mortality. It is by reason of his beneficence that we enjoy our very bodies. We who believe in the gospel know that God is the Father of our spirits, and that as the Father of our spirits he has permitted them to dwell in tabernacles of flesh. These tabernacles assume a holy significance, and a man with such a conception cannot pollute or defile his body without offering affront to God who gave it to him. So I plead first for a more reverential respect for the body of man. It is a sacred temple wherein dwells our eternal spirit, and it is entitled to our utmost deference and reverence. If we could but teach the youth of the land this high conception that has come to us, they would be more loath to smoke cigarettes, to take liquor into their bodies, and those other poisonous substances which tend to disintegrate and render less efficient and less pure these holy tabernacles.

THE HOME A SACRED INSTITUTION

We need more reverence for the sacred institution of home. The home is a religious institution. It has its inception in religious ceremony, and to those of the Church who understand its great significance, it constitutes the very basis of our hope of exaltation in the celestial life to come. All the finest of its products are spiritual. It is indeed a sacred institution, and reverence for those who by right exercise authority in that institution in my judgment is indispensable to the inculcation of those characteristics and attributes which are essential for good citizenship in the country and a proper attitude toward God our Father. Boys and girls who refer to their parents as "the old man" or "the old woman" are taking a wrong course to bring them into proper attitude toward government, society and religion. There are old sayings in the Bible which support this position:

"Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

No greater commandment ever came from Sinai than that one.

"My son, keep thy father's commandments and forsake not the law of thy mother. Bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck. When thou goest it shall lead thee, and when thou sleepest it shall keep thee; and when thou awakest it shall talk with thee."

"A wise son maketh a glad father, but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

Those principles have been tried; they have been incorporated into the lives of great peoples. They have made possible the establishment of the greatest institution of society—the home. I commend them to the youth of the land, and I commend them to parents. I sincerely trust that there will be such discipline, such loving, kindly, sympathetic discipline in the home that there will be proper and adequate respect for the head of the household. No good woman will ever begrudge to her husband his rightful position as the head of the household, and I am constrained to think that very much of our lack of respect, much of the flippancy and lawlessness arise from the fact that there is no well organized, clearly recognized authority in the home. It seems now to be the attitude of parents, in many cases at least, that a child shall have the liberty and privilege of doing what he wants to do. I have heard many a parent say: "I want my boy to do what he wants to do." As for me I want my boy to do what he ought to do. I hope that he will want to do what he ought to do. So much of license, so much of so-called liberty prevails that boys and girls are not constrained as I feel that they should be constrained in sympathy and mercy and kindness to take the proper course in life. I rejoice in the fact that the heads of our households are men who hold the priesthood of Almighty God, and I know of no place or no institution in which the dignity, the power and the influence of the priesthood may be more effectively exercised than in the institutions of our homes.

THE SIN OF PROFANITY

Men, do not swear. God has said he would not be mocked. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." Perhaps there are few things that tend more to produce an irreverent attitude than this pernicious, vile habit of profanity. What a useless thing it is. What a defilement it is of the pure language which we have. I plead with men everywhere not to use the name of God in vain. I do not see how a man can love God and damn him any more than he could love his wife and damn her. We shall tear down the respect of the youth of the land for the name of Deity if we use that name in profanity. We read the words of the Savior:

"Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but I say unto you, Swear not at all."

When men have the knowledge that we possess and they blaspheme the name of God, I fear for the penalty that may accrue from that sin. God help us to speak pure English, to control our tempers, and to set an example in that respect worthy of the emulation of our juniors. Men of the world blaspheme—I sometimes feel a degree of charity toward them—in ignorance of that which they do. It is not so with us.

RESPECT FOR LAW

Respect for the law is an old theme. It is commonly brought to our attention these days. I think that there are two classes of people who are chiefly responsible for the lack of respect which exists for the law and for established institutions of government. One class is those who hold office and the other class is those who do not. I don't mean by that to say that all men who hold office are responsible for the condition which exists; not by any means; nor are all citizens. I have always felt that one of the essential things to breed a wholesome respect and regard for the law of the land and the established institutions of government is the honorable, worthy conduct of the men who are elected to office, and whenever any man who is entrusted with a public duty and public authority abuses his office and attempts to reward himself at the expense of his government and the citizenry, and does not conduct himself with that dignity and propriety which is becoming one invested with his authority, he does more to tear down respect for law and authority than dozens of good men can do to build it up. I want to tell you that the youth of the land are wise in their day and generation. They are sophisticated, they are observant, and when they see men plead in fiery oratorical fashion for the support of the Constitution and in their grandiloquence wildly protest allegiance to the flag of the country, and then come to know that those same men are grafters, corrupt in office, they at once lose regard for the institutions of government and for the officials who stand at the head of government. And too on the part of the citizenry: Men who support such men, men who go around campaigning for them and men who become the beneficiaries of their dishonest practices, are likewise doing more to tear down that attitude which is essential to the preservation of good government than thousands of good people can do to sustain it. It takes honor, real genuine integrity, in order to beget a respect for law and for her institutions. It is such people who today are setting at naught the laws of the country, and such public officers who with seeming ease of conscience are failing to observe their oaths, who are sowing the seeds which may mature some time in the violence of rebellion and revolt against the great principles of equity and liberty and justice which lie at the foundation of our beneficent government. It hurts me, it grieves me every time I see men of influence violate any ordinance, any statute, any law which has been passed and established by proper authority in this country. Enough has been said in this conference on that subject. I here pronounce the recognition of those laws and their observance as indispensable to the creation and maintenance of reverence and respect for the Constitution and for the established orders of society.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD

Reverence for God, as I said in the beginning, is the fundamental thing. Reverence for God comes of love for God, but love of God arises out of faith in him, and out of an understanding of his greatness, his majesty, his goodness, his kindness and his mercy. My God is my Father, my eternal parent, the giver of every good gift to me, the conservator of my life, my relationships, my family, my blessing. Do I revere him? I bow at his feet. I humble myself in sheer praise and thanksgiving and gratitude for the manifestations of all his kindness to me. There is no question about reverence because the seed and foundation of reverence are in my philosophy, in my testimony, in my soul and in my heart. So it is essential that the gospel of Christ be preached to the people of the world that they understand this fatherhood of God, that they understand that all the progress made in this life is by and with his consent and his guidance.

God bless us, my brethren and sisters, that his holy institutions, our places of worship, our homes, the sacred ordinances of the gospel, our temples, our families, old age, all sacred things may receive our deference, our undying respect and our reverence, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Truth does not change; it is immutable. This statement has been made in substance several times during this conference; the thought is not original. It has come down through the centuries from the beginning, for even in the days of Adam it was made known by revelation. Truth never grows old, it is always new, because it is that which remains when all else passes away.

The Lord has given to the Church the best definition of truth that I have ever heard. We find it in one of the revelations: "And truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come." In other words truth is that which endures forever.

A WORLD OF CHANGE

We live in a world of change. Men are born into this world helpless infants. They grow and reach maturity; they gain knowledge and experience, then become old and die. The earth itself is growing old and changing because it too is mortal, as man is mortal upon its face. All things on the earth must pass away. The earth also shall pass away, for it is decreed that it shall die. The whole universe, that is the material universe which we see, is changing. This truth men of science have discovered through their research. Not only this earth and our solar system but the stars of the heavens are changing, if we may rely on the information which comes to us. In fact the Lord has said that they shall pass away, and these changes are going on eternally. "And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words," said the Lord.

THE PLAN OF ETERNAL PROGRESS

In observing these changes throughout all nature a man may be led to conclude, without the aid of the Spirit of the Lord and divine revelation, that death is the end of all things; that the universe itself shall pass away and cease to be; but this is not the case. These things which we see changing, growing old and dying, do not come to their end. Death is not the end, neither of man nor of the earth, nor of the elements of which the earth is composed; neither of the material universe. The Lord created all things for a purpose. Nothing has he created to be destroyed, but that all things might endure forever. This mortal condition with all its changes and eventually death, is part of the great plan of eternal progress. As it has been pointed out, we lived, before we came here, in the spirit existence and in the presence of God. In his presence we walked by sight, but now we are called upon to walk by faith and pass through the various vicissitudes of life, gaining the experiences which could come to us only through this mortal probation. After death we pass on eventually through the resurrection and receive the fulness of life in the mansions which are prepared by our Father. Death is a part of the great plan of life, for after the resurrection comes immortality.

UNIVERSAL SALVATION

In one of the revelations to Joseph Smith the Lord said to the Church and to all who are willing to receive it:

"And again, verily, verily, I say unto you that when the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season."

The Lord here is speaking of his second coming, of the millennial reign which shall be followed by a short period of wickedness and then the end. The revelation continues:

"And the end shall come, and the heaven and the earth shall be consumed and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth."

This does not mean that this earth shall pass away and another take its place, and the heaven thereof shall pass away, and another heaven take its place, but that the earth and its heaven shall, after passing away through death, be renewed again in immortality. This earth is living and must die, but since it keeps the law it shall be restored through the resurrection by which it shall become celestialized and the abode of celestial beings. The next verse of this revelation explains this as follows:

"For all old things shall pass away, and all things shall become new, even the heaven and the earth, and all the fulness thereof, both men and beasts, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea;

"And not one hair, neither mote, shall be lost, for it is the workmanship of mine hand."

So we see that the Lord intends to save, not only the earth and the heavens, not only man who dwells upon the earth, but all things which he has created. The animals, the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the air, as well as man, are to be re-created, or renewed, through the resurrection, for they too are living souls.

DIVINE GUIDANCE NECESSARY

Men, when they observe conditions upon the face of the earth—and our knowledge is largely limited to our observations through the aid of our natural faculties—are in danger of reaching false conclusions. It is not enough that men be guided by reason and by what they may discover through the natural faculties of the mortal body, but also by the guidance of the Lord. We are all dependent upon divine revelation to know the truth concerning the destiny of man. Man by searching cannot find out God without the divine direction. The mistake made by many who seek for truth through the channels of scientific research is that they depend solely upon their own natural ability to discover, without taking God into account and seeking for his direction. The fulness of truth can never be obtained by the man who eliminates God and divine guidance from his understanding. I was informed one time by one of our scientific brethren that the scientist does not take God into account in making his investigations, but endeavors to find truth by research and the aid of his natural faculties. I answered him by saying, "More the pity, for if they would only go before the Lord and seek him through his Spirit and ask him for his guidance, they would be more likely to find the truth for which they are seeking." That they discover many truths is true, but divine guidance, the inspiration of the Lord, the knowledge that comes through revelation, would save them from falling into many errors and reaching false conclusions. I believe it to be a mistake to search for truth independently of what the Lord has given through revelation to his servants the prophets.

A FULNESS OF TRUTH

Now I must not take more time, but let me read to you one more expression coming to us through revelation from the Lord:

"The Spirit of truth is of God. I am the Spirit of truth, and John bore record of me, saying: He received a fulness of truth, yea, even of all truth;

"And no man receiveth a fulness unless he keepeth his commandments.

"He that keepeth his commandments receiveth truth and light, until he is glorified in truth and knoweth all things."

I have full confidence in this word of the Lord. Surely the Spirit of truth will be bestowed upon all who seek through the proper channels and in obedience to the proper laws. There is no other way by which the fulness of truth may be known. Man, in and of himself, cannot find it; he may be "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

The Lord has held in reserve for those who obey him this great blessing of the fulness of truth, and through obedience it is received and in no other way. So with all their searching, with all their delving into the earth and examining of the heavens, man cannot discover the fulness of truth without submission to the principles of the gospel and placing their lives in harmony with the Holy Spirit and walking in obedience to the commandments of the Lord. There is no other way in which all truth may be obtained. It is the destiny of those who keep the commandments of the Lord, through their obedience, to gain all truth. The Lord has spoken it. So I understand the words spoken by the Savior in this revelation and also to his disciples wherein he said: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." And again, in the same sermon: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

May we walk in the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ and let our hearts be so touched by the Spirit of truth that we shall turn neither to the right hand nor to the left in our investigations, but pursue a steady course, seeking always the light which comes from the Lord. Then will we become teachers of men in truth and able to declare the things of God. So I pray in the name of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy

There are a number of visitors here this morning who have come from many parts of the world. We bid you welcome. Though you come from the remote parts of this country or from Asiatic provinces, we are very glad that you are here to join us in the worship of God. It is the Sabbath day and we have come together in his name.

There are in this congregation followers of Buddha representatives of one of the oldest religions of the world. We bid you welcome and you can add your understanding to ours. One of your great sayings is: "I am the Goddess of Karma! Thine eyes, mine eyes shall meet in the end." You know also that your word Karma means immanent justice. Karma is the immortal entity, which man should follow. According to this thought man's thoughts build his character; his deeds make his environment. What a man thinks, so he becomes. His qualities and natural gifts adhere to him as a result of his ideas. Man is responsible for all that he is. We believe this, my friends from India. We are endowed with free will to work out our destinies. Man is a divine creation, and he is able to set himself free from bondage.

God holds us responsible for our thoughts and acts in this life. We bear testimony that Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God, and unto him all must come eventually, and in the end find eternal life in the kingdom of God. May God bless you while you are here and protect you on your journey. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the gospel of love. You are his children. We are all his children, and in an abiding faith in him will we find our salvation.

There was recently held in New York City the International Congress of Americanists to which delegates from seventeen nations of the world came, to deliver papers and discuss the Origin and History of the American Indians. Among the most noted scientists to take part on the program were Dr. Eugene Q. Oberhummer of the Geographical Society of Vienna; Dr. Jose Medina of the University of Chile; Dr. Max Uhle of the University of Ecuador; Dr. Louis Cozaman of the University of Paris; Dr. Albrecht Penck of the University of Berlin; Dr. William Yhalbitzer of the Danish Academy of Science; Dr. Lidio Cipriani of the Italian Museum of Anthropology; and Dr. Hugo Obermaier of the Royal Academy of History, Madrid. These are only a few of the noted archaeologists of the world who came to discuss a subject that is interesting to every Latter-day Saint. Mexico sent three delegates, and the American delegates included Dr. Alfred M. Tozer of the American Academy of Arts and Science; Dr. John M. Cooper of the Catholic University; and Dr. Walter Hough of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. Most of the sessions were held at the American Museum of Natural History and Columbia University. I had the honor of being made a member of the Congress, and for one week, I listened to papers given by these scientists on this important question.

The results of recent scientific researches on the racial resemblances of the American and Siberian Eskimo to the Indian; and the supposed kinship between the American Indian and some of the Asiatic tribes by Russian, Scandinavian, and American anthropologists were given. In all there were one hundred and forty papers read in general and departmental meetings. Dr. A. L. Kreber of the University of California discussed the subject Cultural Relations Between North and South America; Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, Migrations from Asia to America and their Traces; Dr. J. E. Teeple spoke on The Factors Which May Lead to a Correlation of Maya and Christian Dates; and Dr. Albrecht Penck of the University of Berlin gave a scholarly and elucidating paper on the subject When did the Indians Come to America? These are but a few of the papers that were given, and I assure you that to me, they opened up the subject of the history of the American Indians as no other source has done before. I know what you all wish to ask: Did the papers or discussion show or indicate anything of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon?

The theory that prehistoric American cultures reached this continent from Asia, not so long ago receives a strong recruit in the person of Dr. Max Uhle. Unlike many theories about America's forgotten past, Dr. Uhle knows at first hand the material of which he speaks. It makes a difference whether one looks at the picture of a bit of prehistoric pottery in a book or digs the jug with one's own hand out of some ancient grave. Dr. Uhle's experiences convince him that the famous ancient civilizations of Central America and Peru took their roots in Asia, instead of growing up germlessly on American soil. China and India or Mesopotamia, he believes, may have been the chief original sources.

There must be a clear distinction, it grows every year more evident, between the origins of America's ancient people and the sources of their culture. The human material of the pre-Columbian societies probably came from Asia by way of Alaska, the orthodox route long accepted for the American Indians and fully confirmed by the recent investigations of Dr. Ales Hrdlicka. This journey must have taken more than one lifetime. It purged and refined the people far more severely than the wanderings of the Children of Israel in the Wilderness. Among many social belongings abandoned along the route seem to have been most of the things called intellectual. The men and women who peopled America arrived, intellectually, with the clothes they stood in.

Yet cultures undeniably high soon arose among indubitable descendants of this migration. One theory, still prevalent among pre-historians living in the United States, believes this pre-Columbian science and technology to have sprouted, by internal energy, from societies founded by the Alaskan migrants. Dr. Uhle urges an alternative at once more reasonable and more romantic. Occasional cultured mariners from India, China, Japan or other lands may have landed, he believes, few in numbers, but full of ideas, to bring to the rude American societies, already purged of bodily or mental weaklings by their long migration, just the hint that culture was possible. Small numerically as this source of inspiration must have been, it may conceivably have been the seed from which sprouted the great achievements of Peru and Central America.

These men of the Americanists' Congress are some of the greatest scholars living, and they are but blazing the trail and pioneering into this new land of archaeology. They are opening up a new country, in which will be able to follow new paths of study and behold new vistas of truth. What archaeologists have done for the Holy Bible in the Holy Land, archaeologists will do for the Book of Mormon in this land of America. We must remember that the Book of Mormon is not a book, but a library; the product not of one mind and age, but of many minds and ages. It is a record of God's dealings with his children at various times, and the actions of those peoples in the many problems that arose before them. Like the Bible, the Book of Mormon "is a record of the unfolding of the divine revelation to a remarkable race of people." This people we believe were the forebears of the American Indians.

The Book of Mormon is a history of Hebraic institutions of the American Continent as well as an exposition of Judaism. Centuries before Christ the Jaredites and Nephites came to America, the former at the time of the tower of Babel and the latter from Jerusalem. According to the Book of Mormon one Lehi and his family were colonized in this New World about 600 B. C. They had inherited all the old traditions of the Hebraic people, and in their teachings one finds the same beliefs and ideals concerning God and the righteous laws of life as one finds in the writings of Isaiah, Moses, Jeremiah, etc. Religious, social and economic life lie at the very root of the story of the Book of Mormon. The fundamentals of the old religion of the Jews are given; as well as a clear explanation of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for according to the Book of Mormon, Christ visited the people on this continent after his resurrection. Judaism is a religious system. Its fundamental message concerns the One and Holy God and one undivided humanity, with a world-uniting Messianic goal. It is a message entrusted by divine revelation to the Jewish people. Judaism teaches that man is created in the image of God, and its teaching of righteousness is the true pathway of life. All these doctrines are likewise set forth in the Book of Mormon, written by divinely inspired prophets. Jewish writers tell us that faith to the Jew is firm reliance on God and adherence to him. Hence it stresses both faith and faithfulness. The second fundamental of Jewish faith is divine revelation; and the third is belief in a Moral Government of the World, which manifests itself in the reward of good and the punishment of evil. The fourth great doctrine of Judaism is belief in the resurrection of the dead. Judaism holds that the spirit of man comes from God unsullied by inherent sin or evil. Thus man through the exercise of his free will is capable of attaining an ever greater perfection, by unfolding and developing to a higher degree his mental, moral, and spiritual powers.

The Book of Mormon idea of immortality is the Christian idea. The Prophet Alma says: "Behold, there is a time appointed that all shall come forth from the dead. Now when this time cometh, no one knows; but God knoweth the time which is appointed. * * * Behold, it has been made known unto me by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body * * * whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them. * * * Then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God. * * * The one raised to happiness according to his desires of happiness; or good according to his desires of good; and the other to evil according to his desires of evil."

The Book of Mormon idea is based on a belief in a supreme personal being, who has revealed himself in the beauty and order of the world to saints and prophets, and finally in his Son Jesus Christ. It sets forth the doctrine of man as a self-conscious moral being, and makes him kin to God. Man is a part of the physical world, in which he works out the purposes of God as a free agent within the limits of a finite being. But he belongs essentially to the spiritual, and the spirit of man and the Spirit of God have relations of dependency and obligations. It is in this relationship to God, who is life, that the Christian idea of immortality has its source and inspiration. The Prophet Alma has made it clear that immortality is existence with God, fellowship with him, which creates the whole interest in a future life. "We shall be like him, for we shall see him even as he is." It has God first in mind, and fellowship implies a likeness of character. The Book of Mormon shows so distinctly that Christianity is more or less the heir of Judaism or the Hebrew religion, and teaches that profound sense of sin which recognizes that it means separation from God. Its ideal is to be perfect "even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

It must not be supposed that all ideas of immortality are the same. The Egyptian conceptions were far different from the Hebraic; so were the Greek views and the Indian thought. This is clearly shown by a reading of the book so well edited by the Rev. Sir James Marchant of Oxford. For example, the Greek mind held that Gods and men are the same in birth, and evil is metaphysical and not ethical. To the Christian, sin is not so much a breach of the law as a violation of love. The filial relation to God is everything to Christianity. So the Prophet Alma taught clearly that immortality is a restoration to the fellowship of God through Jesus Christ. It all requires the imparting of a new principle of action, or the possession of a new life giving power, a kind of new birth, in short, a Christ likeness. * * * "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life, and is passing on to fulness of life, to 'more abundance.'" Immortality therefore to the Christian sense and Book of Mormon meaning is not due to any metaphysical quality of the soul, but to a personal relationship to God, "Because as I live, ye shall also live."

Like the Bible, the Book of Mormon shows God at work in the life of the human race. Its supreme revelation is of the human heart, and life touched by the Spirit of God. Its power and value is this, and it is from beginning to end a book of life. It becomes in this light, colorful, gripping, vivid, laying its hold on our imaginations and our souls. It inspires, it lifts our minds to God, and herein is its power.

To your question then: Archæology and the Book of Mormon. Man has brought to light great cities and temples in this America. Statues, pottery, buildings, and jewelry are discovered almost daily, and today, America is considered one of the richest fields of the world for the student of archæology. Not yet have scholars found definite remains or ruins that coincide with Book of Mormon history. Yet the scientist, the archæologist is discovering remains that not only indicate that in the not far distant future may be clearly related to Book of Mormon history, but Semitic origins will be found in this land, and the institutions so well described in the Book of Mormon will be made clearer by archæologists, as they have done in Mesopotamia, Palestine, and Egypt by finding remains and ruins that absolutely verify Biblical history and life.

Among the Indians of our continent, both north and south, we have traditions as to their lives in the past, and according to the light of sociology that has recently been given by one of our leading sociologists, no legend or myth or tradition comes down to us from the remote past, but what it shows something of the belief and the lives of the people who gave it. So we have a great work to perform among these American Indians. There are some three hundred thousand of them in the United States at the present time, and over three thousand in the State of Utah alone. They have had fine conceptions of life, and if the truth of God, the principles of the saving grace of Christ can be carried to them as they are elucidated in the Book of Mormon, I firmly believe that the American Indians, the aborigines of this continent will yet be brought to a knowledge of the truth. An old song of the Pawnees is a song to the new day.

"Day is here! Day is here, is here!
Arise, my son, lift thine eyes,
Day is here! Day is here, is here!
Day is here! Day is here, is here!
Look up, my son, and see the day.
Day is here! Day is here, is here!"

May we become more interested in the American Indian and in his cause, I hope and pray. May the government of the United States come to a fuller realization of how unjustly he has sometimes been treated in the past, and that from now on justice may come to this man, to these people; and that God may inspire us to carry the message of salvation to them all, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I desire to read a poem recently discovered among the writings of our gifted hymn writer, Elder Parley P. Pratt:

"Truth eternal, truth divine!
In thine ancient fulness shine;
Burst the fetters of the mind
From the millions of mankind,
Set the longing nations free,
Give the world a jubilee.

"Ages past have owned thy sway,
Prophets hailed thy joyful day;
In thy cause in days of yore
Battle-fields were stained with gore,
Saints and seers and heroes fought,
Men and angels wonders wrought.

"Truth again restored to earth,
Opened with a prophet's birth,
Priests of heaven's royal line,
Bearing keys of truth divine,
Wide o'er earth the tidings flew,
Truth into a kingdom grew.

"Truth shall triumph as the light
Chases far the misty night,
Hurl the tyrant from his throne,
Conquer death, and reign alone,
Endless ages own its sway,
Clad in everlasting day."

TRUTH WILL PREVAIL

I desire in this connection to read the following verses from the 88th section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same.

"That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willet to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, cannot be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, nor judgment. Therefore, they must remain filthy still."

I desire to add, in connection with these inspired utterances, a word of warning and testimony in connection with that which has been borne by my brethren to the Latter-day Saints assembled in conference this morning. I am happy to find myself in full accord with all that has been expressed. But I do feel in my soul that we have reached the day spoken of by the prophets of old, and by the Lord himself in this generation, when everything will be shaken that can be shaken, and nothing shall remain except that which is truth and is established by the Lord. It was easy, in the dark ages, for a glimmer of truth to attract the attention of men who were in such dense darkness, but it is not easy for a small glimmer of truth to attract attention in an age when the blaze of light is so resplendent as to be seen everywhere.

A TESTING TIME

More light and knowledge has come to the earth in this generation than in all ages before—and a religion that can attract the attention of men and can stand the scrutiny of investigation and shine in the presence of light such as the world enjoys today, is an unusual religion. There is nothing so sacred, nor ancient, but must meet the sifting process that presently will be in operation. For it is the age when everything is being questioned. How has Mormonism stood? How will it stand in this period of testing? It has stood the trials of the past. It stands today vindicated in its teachings, even in the presence of science, learning, knowledge and history. It will stand in the future.

I recognize the foundation upon which it has been established as the truth, and how my heart grows in faith, my understanding increases and my soul is filled with joy to witness the strength and power of this Church, even in this age of doubt and of uncertainty.

A spirit of doubt and uncertainty is creeping over the faith of the world. We were told in an address by an eminent minister at a gathering of religionists in California during this last summer, that sixty per cent of the people of the United States have no religious affiliation; that twenty-five million young people in the United States are growing up without any religious teaching.

I confess to you that it is also a time when institutions that God established, that are political, will be shaken, but, thank the Lord, they will stand, for they too are the truth.

OUR NATION'S SECURITY

The Prophet Joseph told us that he saw the day when even the Constitution of the United States would be torn and hang as by a thread. But, thank the Lord, the thread did not break. He saw the day when this people would be a balance of power to come to its defense. The Book of Mormon prophecies concerning the future of America have been referred to in our hearing during this conference, wherein it is stated that this nation, though it becomes a mighty nation, still it can stand in security here only as it serves the God of this land. That conception was in the hearts of the men who founded America.

I was recently looking over some of the utterances of our fathers who established these glorious institutions. One of the great statesmen of our land, Webster, said:

"If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper, but if we or our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how suddenly catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity."

Washington in his farewell address said:

"Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

When Benjamin Franklin, eighty years of age, stood before the Congress of the United States, trying to produce an instrument on which they could frame the Constitution, and they being about to abandon that effort, he made this appeal which won these men to God and to the accomplishment of the great purpose of establishing our Constitution:

"In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard; and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten that powerful Friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need His assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time; and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men; and if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid? We have been assured, sir, in sacred writings, that 'except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel."

This was the spirit of the men who established America. May God keep that spirit burning forever in the hearts of the men who continue to lead it. I want to say that I have discovered that that spirit has been in the hearts of the men and is in the hearts of the men who preside over the destinies of America, though it may not be in the hearts of all the people. They announced their faith when they blazoned upon our coin the motto, "In God we trust." They breathed it into their songs when they said:

"Our fathers' God to thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing—"
"Long may our land be bright
With Freedom's holy light,
Protect us by thy might,
Great God, our King!"

Other nations might boast of their kings, but the King of America, proclaimed by the patriotic fathers who founded it and established it, is the great God of heaven. This must continue to be the sentiment of the people of America if these glorious institutions shall be preserved, and in our hands is the sacred keeping of these great and glorious principles.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH

The Latter-day Saints have taken a very definite stand in reference to their attitude towards the government, and towards the great problems of life. Have we had to shift our position? Has it been assailed successfully? When we have declared our loyalty and patriotism to the Constitution and the government, and that we recognize that the duty of the Latter-day Saints is to uphold and support the laws of the land as faithfully as they do the laws of the Church, were we right? Any people who depart from that will not be able to preserve a civilization very long. Are we right in the promulgation of the doctrine that we have advocated of the single standard of virtue, wherein we require the young man of our Church to be as clean and as pure as the girl he asks to be his wife, the mother of his children? Are we right in our conception of marriage for time and for eternity? Have we had to recede from that position? In the building of this family relationship, of which we have heard, forever and forever we stand upon solid ground and cannot be shaken from it. In the glorious conception we have of the redemption of our dead, extending to those who died and passed beyond the veil without opportunity, that through the vicarious work God has established in his Church, these holy blessings may come to them, are we right? Have we had to recede from that position? In the promulgation of the doctrine of the law of tithing, wherein each man is placed under a certain obligation to the Lord to pay his tenth, whether he be rich or whether he be poor, are we right? Have we had to recede from that position? No, men are growing in numbers who acknowledge the righteousness of the plan. Are we right in our missionary system that calls forth these thousands of young men and women who freely give themselves and pay their way to go to the ends of the world to preach this gospel? Are we right or are we wrong? We know we are right. The principle has been acknowledged as the finest plan by which the gospel message may be carried to the children of men.

Recently an eminent professor said to the General Board of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations, in discussing the question of the ills of modern youth: "The 'Mormon' Church is founded and established very well, better than any other institution in the world, and has opportunities to hold its young people, for you give them something to fight for. You put a responsibility upon them and send them forth to champion a cause. You will hold them as long as you have something worth fighting for." And we have.

I could go through each principle of the gospel that has been revealed to us and show, I am sure, my brethren and sisters, that the attitude of the leaders of this Church affecting the lives of the people as to the solution of the great problems of this age is right, and that each principle is right.

A NEW TEST

I do not fear all the tests that are before us. I have recognized now for some time past that a new test is coming to the Saints—the test of peace and of prosperity. The most severe test that has ever come to any people is the test of peace and prosperity. Having survived the troubles of the past I am as sure as that I live that this Church, the great majority of this people, will stand the test of peace and of prosperity. Though many may fall, though many may hesitate and falter, this work is established to stand forever, and never to fail. It is founded upon the truth.

A GLORIOUS AGE

Who wants to hesitate now? Who wants to desert the ranks in such a glorious cause which is presently to be triumphant and victorious? There never has been an age in all the glorious past when there was such an opportunity for the truth as today. This age of questioning is all in favor of truth. Let error vanish, let superstition and ignorance go; it is the age when the truth shall be triumphant. Those who know the truth have reason to take courage and to be affiliated with those who are the champions of truth, for it is the age of truth's victory. It will come. Yes, not only shall the doctrines and the theories of men be shaken, but the very earth itself. This is the age when it too is to be shaken; and this was all understood by the Master who built the earth, the Lord Jesus Christ. Worlds without number he has made, and he knows how they will behave and when they will misbehave; he knows the period of the earth's convulsions. Whatever may be the cause of our present unusual storms, cyclones and disturbances, whether they are caused by sun spots or what not—he who made this world knew when would come the period of its misbehavior, as accurately as the astronomer can forecast the coming of an eclipse. And he knew that this disturbance bore a certain relationship to other great and important events, namely, his coming to dwell among men in the flesh.

I bear witness to you that God is speaking in the interest of truth and in the interest of the establishment of his work, even by the very elements: and he will speak in an effort to cause men in their mad rush for pleasure to stop, to ponder, to ask themselves whether or not God be in the affairs of men. May men repent, may they save themselves by accepting the principles of the gospel. God himself cannot save them, only as they comply with the rules of eternal truth. If they disregard them they put themselves beyond his power. He can do nothing for them.

GOD'S PROMISES TO BE REALIZED

I bear witness that I know as I know I live that this is God's work and that Jesus Christ did visit the earth. I know that he did speak to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that the Book of Mormon is the very truth, and that Mormonism is indeed God's work, founded and established to endure. Let us go home and kindle the fire, where it is burning low, in the hearts of the wayward, the careless and indifferent. There is only one protection for us, and that is to keep the commandments of God. If we will do that I will tell you that the period now before us will be full of blessings, full of promise, full of hope and full of glory for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I know that the glorious future is more wonderful than all the past. It is a time for men and women to re-dedicate themselves to God and his service, not to be tired nor weary in well doing. The future is so full of promise, the realization of all that has been promised in the revelations of the Lord to his servant's will be realized. I am more grateful than I can express this day for my standing in this Church, in this glorious work. God speed it forward and keep us in its ranks, that we and our children may be counted with the victorious in that day of triumph which is to come. God speed that day, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "Awake my soul."

The benediction was offered by Elder Alonzo A. Hinckley, President of the Deseret stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The closing session of the conference was held in the tabernacle on Sunday afternoon, October 7, 1928, at 2 o'clock.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choir and congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

The invocation was offered by Elder James W. Funk, President of the Benson stake.

The choir sang the anthem, "Gloria."

ELDER REED SMOOT

I am thankful to my Heavenly Father for the privilege of attending this remarkable conference, for to me it has been a most remarkable one in so many ways. The instructions given, the testimonies borne, the interest shown by the thousands attending each session, and no doubt other thousands listening in by radio, must be most gratifying to all who are interested in the welfare and growth of God's Latter-day work.

WORK NECESSARY FOR PROGRESS OF CHURCH

I pray that what I may say at this time will be acceptable to our Heavenly Father and will inspire in the hearts of the saints a greater determination to serve God, keep his commandments, and work, work, work, to bring about God's great plan as revealed to his Prophet, Joseph, in this the last dispensation, the dispensation of the fulness of times. The lazy, the indolent have little place in carrying forward God's plans. This is so in this age, and has been from the beginning, and will continue to be so until the end. The growth of the Church has not been accomplished by the idler, the fault-finder, the whiner, the mentally or physically unclean, but by the industrious, the faithful, the unselfish, the defenders of its principles, be they poor, well-to-do or wealthy. The gospel of Jesus Christ enters into the every-day life of every one of its adherents.

I often read Solomon's exhortation to the study of wisdom against idleness and things hateful to God. I will read you one statement made by him touching the question of idleness, and it is as true today as when uttered by Solomon:

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise:

"Which having no guide, overseer, or ruler,

"Provideth her meat in the summer and gathereth her food in the harvest.

"How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

"Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep;

"So shall thy poverty come as one that travelth, and thy want as an armed man."

For years on the front cover of the "Juvenile Instructor" there appeared these words: "There is no excellence without labor."

The necessity and advantages of work have been stressed in all ages of the world, and I call to mind a revelation given through Joseph Smith, the Prophet, on February 9, 1831, in the presence of twelve elders, and I find in that revelation, Section 42, Paragraph 42, the following: "Thou shalt not be idle, for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer."

LIFE'S MASTER WORD

In an address by Dr. William Osler, to a group of young physicians, he made this statement on "Life's Master Word":

"Though a little one, the master-word looms large in meaning. It is the opening to every portal, the great equalizer in the world, the true philosopher's stone which transmutes all base metal of humanity into gold. The stupid man among you it will make bright, the bright man brilliant, the brilliant student steady. With the magic word in your heart all things are possible, and without it all study is vanity and vexation. The miracles of life are with it; the blind see by touch, the deaf hear with eyes, the dumb speak with fingers. To the youth it brings hope, to the middle-aged confidence, to the aged repose. True balm of hurt, in its presence the heart of the sorrowful, is lightened and consoled. It is directly responsible for all advances in medicine during the past twenty-five centuries. With it Virchow smote the rock, and the waters of progress gushed out; while in the hands of Pasteur it proved a very talisman, to open to us a new heaven in medicine and a new earth in surgery. Not only has it been the touchstone of progress, but it is the measure of success in everyday life. Not a man before you but is beholden to it for his position here. And, the master-word is WORK,—a little one, as I have said, but fraught with momentous sequences if you can but write it on the tablets of your hearts and bind it upon your foreheads."

Dr. Osler's forceful statement is wonderfully exemplified in the labors and activities of all great pioneers in all ages of the world that we have record of. There are thousands of them, but none greater than those whose lives were dedicated to our Heavenly Father's work and steadfastly lived, labored, and, in many cases became martyrs in its defense.

PAUL, THE WORKER

Consider Paul, the worker. He, by his strenuous activity, his zeal, his industry, must have impressed the people of his age that work or labor was honorable, that it occupies the place it richly deserves. Paul did not consider work a means of making a living, but as an opportunity of making a life. Paul preferred a laborious life to one of ease and pleasure. As all super-men, he rendered a service to mankind. He learned in his later years that work was the real secret of accomplishment, and further, that accomplishment was the real secret of happiness. Having a knowledge of these facts, Paul was able to say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day."

These were the words of Paul, the militant apostle, after suffering opposition, discouragement, imprisonment, threats of death—still he could tell the world in modesty, but convincingly, that he had met his task squarely and finished it thoroughly.

HEZEKIAH A MAN OF ACTION

I call to mind another remarkable character in the Bible, of whom it is said, "And in every work that he began, he did it with all his heart and prospered." His accomplishments were ordinary—simply one of that age performing his daily tasks unnoticed, but when a problem that he alone could solve came to him, he was aroused by divine enthusiasm. The real object of life was made manifest to him. It was a time for action, courage, determination. His decision would make or mar his career. "Forward" was the word, and Hezekiah obeyed. Life and all he possessed were at stake. He now realized that dreams meant nothing until they became realities. Hezekiah from that moment had no time for making excuses, no time to complain, no time to count the cost. His task was God's call, and it must and shall be accomplished.

Notwithstanding that almost unsurmountable difficulties crossed his path, he never wavered in his determination to accomplish the work. No matter what happened, he had his work to do. Nothing could swerve him from it—he had learned the lesson that "There is no excellence without labor." He had not time to envy the success of others. He had a vocation to master. He had found his place. He believed implicitly in hard work. It is no wonder he never experienced drudgery, discontent, dissatisfaction.

The characters of Paul and Hezekiah were just the opposite from that of the unfaithful servant who went away and hid his talent in the earth. In the latter case excuses were submitted for honest effort, no doubt whining because he was not forging ahead, always waiting for somebody to help him, ever watching the clock or listening for the whistle to blow, imagining that his pathway was strewn with difficulties and joining in the chorus of the army of failures and wails, "I've never had a chance; there's no use trying."

Too many people are quitters. They are always looking for bargains, discounts, short-cuts to success, rather than facing life's problems squarely. Some are good starters, but poor finishers. Edgar A. Guest expresses the tragedy of many a life as follows:

"How do you tackle your work each day?
Are you scared of the job you find?
Do you grapple the task that comes your way
With a confident, easy mind?
Do you stand right up to the work ahead,
Or fearfully pause to view it?
Do you start to toil with a sense of dread,
Or feel that you're going to do it?"

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF A PROPHET

I now call to mind a more modern servant of God, one chosen by our Heavenly Father to open this gospel dispensation. See what he accomplished through direct instructions and assistance from our Heavenly Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, as well as other ordained personages, having the authority to confer upon him the necessary powers to organize again the Church of Jesus Christ with all of its powers, authority and blessings, enjoyed by the Church over which the Savior presided during his mortal life. I refer to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Let me recite to you some of the things the Prophet Joseph Smith accomplished before he was thirty-nine years of age.

He had seen the Father and the Son, and had held eight conversations with the Prophet Moroni. He had received the Aaronic priesthood from John the Baptist and the Melchizedek priesthood from the apostles, Peter, James, and John. He had translated the Book of Mormon by the power of God, and had had it printed and in circulation among the people of the nation. Joseph Smith had organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by instruction from heaven, and had received a number of revelations from God. He had received the keys from Elijah, turning the hearts of the children to the fathers, and from Moses he had received the keys of the gathering. He had communicated with Elias, who committed to him the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham, and had planned two temples, one at Kirtland and one at Nauvoo. Before he was twenty-five years of age he had received nearly two hundred revelations from God and had translated the Book of Abraham from rolls of papyrus written by Abraham himself while he was in Egypt, which came from the catacombs of Egypt. He had received revelations and visions of the writings of Moses as contained in the Pearl of Great Price giving, among other things, a minute account of the rebellion in heaven and of the creation.

THE NEED OF PERSEVERANCE

What is needed by the saints today is more of that particular brand of perseverance which makes one unable to rest while important things are half accomplished, and urges him to keep up the pace until the course is run. We must be more than average workers. We must do something more than average work. "My son," said Bob Burdette, "you have to work. Whether you handle pick or wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a newspaper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. Don't be afraid of killing yourself by over-working on the sunny side of thirty. Men die sometimes, but it is because they quit at nine p. m. and don't go home until two a. m. It's the intervals that kill, my son. * * * Take off your coat and make dust in the world. The busier you are, the less harm you are apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter your holidays, and the better satisfied the whole world will be with you." "Keep your boys busy," said Brigham Young, "even if you have to have them dig a hole and fill it up again." Remember, "an idle brain is the devil's workshop."

When a boy, Kipling accompanied his father on a sea voyage. The father was lying on his bed when a frightened sailor rushed to his door crying, "Your son! Your son!" The frightened father sprang to his feet exclaiming, "What is the matter?" "He has climbed out on the foreyard and if he lets go he will be drowned." "Oh, is that all?" replied Kipling, Sr., as he lay down again. "He won't let go."

I call to mind a statement of Alexander Hamilton, one of America's most brilliant statesmen, as follows: "People called me talented, but all the talent I have is the ability for hard work, and through that has come all the success I have ever attained."

Robert Louis Stevenson upon one occasion said, "I know what pleasure is, for I have done good work."

We all remember the inspired words of M. D. Babcock, when she said:

"We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle; face it; 'tis God's gift."

This gospel shall be preached to every kindred, tongue and people, and God is fast preparing the way for its accomplishment. We are living in the last dispensation—the beginning of the end. Give us wisdom and strength, O Father, that we may work for its advancement and not weary.

I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ and the Son of the living God; that Joseph Smith was called of God and under divine instruction organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This Church will never be destroyed nor given to another people. Father, we thank thee for this conference; sanctify all that has been said and done to the advancement of thy Church and its mission on earth, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

Among the many outstanding features of this conference one has appealed to me with unusual force, namely the sustained note of jubilation—righteous jubilation and thanksgiving, I believe—over the progress of the Church, its growth, and, what is more, its development as shown in the facts set forth by statistics and other data, convincing us of the steady progress of this the Church of Jesus Christ. We have reason to be grateful; the results show it. But this joy and rejoicing has been wisely tempered by advice and counsel regarding our important duties. There has not been lacking the note of warning lest we fail in greater or lesser measure, lest we begin to retrograde rather than advance.

"ZION PROSPERS"—IS ALL WELL?

It is well to sing "Zion Prospers," pleasing to be able to chant "All is Well;" and when we so sing in the spirit of thanksgiving and appreciation the Lord accepts our songs as praise. But it is possible for us to sing in another tone and speak the same words, chant the same melody, and yet be unacceptable unto the Lord. Indeed as I mention this, one of our popular songs, I call to mind that the very title of it was used by an ancient prophet by way of warning unto the people. The Prophet Nephi warned the people against lethargy and neglect, and pointed out that many were thus comforting themselves with the thought that they needed to do little or nothing, for all was well in Zion. Speaking of the wiles of the evil one, the devil himself, Nephi said:

"And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell. * * *

"Therefore, woe be unto him that is at ease in Zion!

"Woe be unto him that crieth: All is well!

"Yea, woe be unto him that hearkeneth unto the precepts of men, and denieth the power of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost!"

I would not place that pleasing song under ban, but when we sing it, let us sing it in the right spirit and not bring the woes upon ourselves for excusing our lethargy and our laziness by crooning, "Zion prospers, all is well."

THE MOMENTUM OF THE CHURCH

How much have I, how much have you contributed to Zion's prosperity, my brethren, my sisters? Let each one take the question to himself. Many are being carried by the resistless momentum of this great Church, this wonderful work—swept along with it. And they are rather a drag than a means of power or a source of energy. True, the mathematical principle holds that the whole is the sum of all its parts, and consequently the state or the condition of a community must be the algebraic sum of the several conditions of its individual members. But we are not always able to judge of the members separately by the condition of the community.

We are doing much now in seeking to improve the condition and the activities of our quorums, the quorums of the Holy Priesthood; and we have some quorums whose records are good as compared with others. With totals of activities high, it may appear that the members are energetic and that they never before have accomplished so much. But look a little deeper and you may find that of a quorum of ninety-six elders, sixteen perhaps have been doing the work and the other eighty have been carried along without much effort on their part.

COLLECTIVELY OR INDIVIDUALLY?

The Lord has expressed himself forcefully with respect to such conditions, in these last days. In the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants—I pray you read for yourself—after reciting his purposes and plans and the partial realization of such in the bringing forth of this gospel in this age, he speaks of those who were charged with authority in that day to administer the affairs of the Church, those to whom these commandments were given, and explains that the commandments were given that his servants might have power to lay the foundation of this Church and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness. Please mark his words: “The only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth with which I the Lord am well pleased.” But that is not the end of the sentence or paragraph: “with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually.”

There lies a vital distinction. It is expressed but we often overlook it. It is a distinction that should be heeded in all our organizations within the Church, and without; the difference between the collective status or conditions or achievements and the work of the individual. A manufacturing plant may turn out a great total of product, it may have an immense output, and you may say that it is doing well; but examine the units, look into the machinery, not simply inspect it in a general way, but test, try every machine, every part; and you may find that not one mechanical unit there is doing more than fifty or sixty per cent of what it could do, and yet the output is big.

A great acreage may result in a very large yield, but when you come to consider the yield per acre you may find that you are gathering only thirty or even twenty fold when you ought to have been reaping seventy and eighty and even an hundred fold.

We as individuals are not doing all that could be done, all that should be done. I have no concern for the Church as a whole; its destiny is foretold, it is going on to glorious victory. But that does not say that each of us who are members of the Church will go on to glorious victory; we may be left behind entirely. What are we doing individually? I repeat. The tithing system of the Church has been referred to in this conference. It is a marvel to the people of the world, but look into it and see our tithing record.

THE TITHING SYSTEM

The law of tithe as revealed of God is not being practiced by any other religious organization on the face of the earth, nor has it been since the restoration of the Gospel or during the time of the great apostasy. We say that the results in this Church are very impressive. They are, but are they what they should be? How much have you contributed to making the observance of the law of tithing acceptable to the Lord? I do not mean how much in dollars and cents, I do not believe that is the way in which tithing is recorded above. The recording angels may have a system of bookkeeping that is a little better than ours. How much have you contributed by way of paying the tithe, whether it be ten cents or a hundred dollars? For be it known that the one who pays with honest heart the ten cent tithe, if it be a true tithe, will rank higher on those books than the one who pays a thousand dollars when that is only a tenth of a tithe for him. What are we doing individually? I know what some are doing, for they have told me. Some are very busy trying to find excuses in the matter of tithing as in other duties. Some come with strange questions: "Tell me please, ought I to subtract this or deduct that before I calculate the amount of my tithes?" Very seldom do I find it necessary to analyze the case and to give an answer direct. Sometimes I have smiled because I could see the perfidy of the questioner's coming to me for excuses, and I did not feel complimented. But I have given him a rule, and I venture to give it here. I have found it helpful myself, and I think that all may profit by it.

A RULE FOR COMPUTING YOUR TITHES

When you are in doubt as to just how you should calculate your tithes, reverse the terms as we sometimes do in solving complex mathematical problems, and suppose for the time being that the Lord had said this; let us postulate this as an assumed law given to the Church: "In order to show my love for my people, the faithful members of my Church, it is my will, saith the Lord, that each one shall receive from my storehouse, the storehouse of my church, at regular intervals during the year, an amount equal to one-tenth of his income." Now my dear brother, sit down and calculate how much the Lord owes you under that kind of law, and then go pay it to your bishop.

CHURCHES AND MEMBERS OF CHURCHES

There is another phase of this distinction between individual and collective computation. The Lord was pleased with this Church in the day in which he spake as quoted and he is pleased with it today as a church; likewise he is pleased with a great many of its members; for there are many, many faithful members in this Church, men and women who are doing well nigh all they could do save for the imperfections of humanity. And the Lord is pleased with them; he is pleased with the Church, for it is progressing. There are churches with which he is not pleased.

We are oftentimes charged with being very exclusive, and we admit the charge; we are exclusive, but in a rational sense. How can we solemnly testify that this is the Church of Jesus Christ and then ascribe that same high title to other organizations that have been formed, not under the direction of Jesus Christ, but according to man's thought and plans? Some people say that we are illiberal because we do not admit that all other churches are just what this church professes to be. We admit that other churches are what they profess to be, when their profession is based on facts.

Now when we say that the Lord is not pleased with those churches, we do not mean that he is not pleased with the members thereof. We hold that God is no respecter of persons, but on the contrary that he will acknowledge good in any soul, no matter whether that person belongs to a church or not. But the Lord is not pleased with those churches that have been constructed by men and then labeled with his name. He is not pleased with those doctrines that are being taught as being his doctrines when they are only the effusion of men's brains, undirected by inspiration and utterly lacking in revelation.

CHURCH OF CHRIST AND CHURCHES OF MEN

He has expressed himself with regard to the churches that are built by man and has said they shall be overthrown. Indeed he has applied strong terms to some of those churches, or to church organizations in general, that have been brought into being by man. Read his words to John the Revelator. See what he means by the synagogue of Satan to which some of the people belonged. Read what he has said about the great and abominable church, the mother of abominations. The church as such may be wholly corrupt because of the false claims that are being made for it, and yet within that church as members there may be people who are doing their best. They have been deceived. As to the degree of culpability that will be charged up to them for their having become subjects of deception, we may not be able to judge.

But I do not understand that when the Lord states that those churches shall be overthrown—I mean the church of the devil, using his expression, and those that are making false claims, and shall be thrown into the fire, as he says—I do not understand that all members of those churches are to meet destruction, physically or otherwise. He is speaking there of the church collectively, and he is not pleased with it; but individually he may be well pleased with many of his sons and daughters who have been born under an environment that has led them into those churches which are not of God.

I feel that we should give attention to the individual unit. Wholesale farming is all right but we do not always get the yield that we would get if we were to pay greater attention to each particular plant.

And so with respect to members and membership in this Church. I trust that when the account shall be cast up, the Lord will be pleased with his Church, and I know he will be; but I hope that he will not be utterly displeased with me as a member; and I have the same wish with respect to every one of you, my brethren and sisters. But I pray you, be not content with the progress of the Church as an organization unless you are progressing with it, and not simply being carried along by it.

In brief reference to the olden parable: There are some who have just enough oil in their tiny lamps to show that they claim to belong to the organization, but their light goes out when a little trouble comes, a little persecution; and they walk in the light of the Church without individual light. I pray that the Lord shall be well pleased with his people individually, as I know he will continue to be pleased with his Church collectively, in his name, Amen.

A solo, "O Divine Redeemer," was sung by Sister Emma Lucy Bowen.

ELDER WILLIAM R. SLOAN

President of the Northwestern States Mission

Behold a great and marvelous work has come among the children of men. The spirit of this conference has evidenced that to a very marked degree to the thousands of people that are in attendance at this conference.

I am delighted to bring good news from the Northwestern States Mission. I am thrilled beyond my power to express at the reception which I have received during the past two days from fathers and mothers who have sons and daughters now laboring in the Northwestern States. I have never seen before such a manifestation of faith in God as has been shown by these good parents, not only one, but many. Even today people who have driven hundreds of miles to be present at this conference have said, "President Sloan, my son, my daughter, is at the service of God as long as he desires them to remain in the mission field."

I have a young man laboring with me now who eighteen months ago received a call to the mission field. He is the son of a widowed mother who is working hard to sustain her little family, and he is a twin. When the call came, the mother looked at it with tears in her eyes. She called on the Bishop and said, "Bishop, I pray you, do not separate my twins. Let them both go on a mission." The elder and his sister are laboring in the Northwestern States Mission.

Last February one of the brethren in Montana passed away, leaving a wife and a family of children in almost destitute circumstances. As the spring opened up the good saints and friends of that branch united together, and in one day they plowed, disced, harrowed and seeded this widow's ninety acres of sod. The Relief Society sisters were there playing their part and provided meals for the brethren. A month ago when I was there the crops were almost ready for harvest, all standing in the field to bless and sustain this widow and her family of children. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

I stood a few weeks ago at the bedside of one of the good sisters in the hospital at Helena. I want to leave her testimony with you, brethren and sisters. Many of you have probably heard it before. She recounted to me early experiences in the little town of Clarkston, Utah. Her sister was the wife of Martin Harris, Jr. One morning as she was a guest at her sister's home, Martin Harris, Jr., went to the bedside of his father and found him failing very fast. Returning home he conveyed this message to his wife and her father, Brother Homer. They all immediately returned to the bedside of Martin Harris. Sister Costly took the hand of her father and walked across the street into the home of Martin Harris. Brother Homer walked to his bedside and said, "How are you, Brother Harris?" He answered, "I feel that I am not long for this world." Brother Homer spoke to him and he said concerning the Book of Mormon, "Brother Homer, the Book of Mormon is as true as the stars that shine in the heavens." Then turning to his son, Martin Harris, Jr., he said, "Martin, proclaim this truth to all the world. Tell them that the Book of Mormon is true." That was the testimony of a dying man to his son. Brethren and sisters, would he desire his son to go and tell a falsehood to the world?

The Mission in the Northwest is growing. We have recently opened up the district in Alaska. There are Indians there by the hundreds who are educated and are a fine type of manhood. They are seeking for the truth. Two of the elders laboring there have met with considerable success, not only among the white people, but also among the Indians. They seem to be anxious to know the contents of the Book of Mormon, and many copies have been distributed among them. They believe the teachings of that wonderful book.

The work is growing. The missionaries are enjoying splendid health. They are enjoying the spirit of their calling. Do not worry about your sons and daughters. Please do not send them quite so much money, most of them. We prefer that they do not have so much and they will make better missionaries for the Church.

The wonderful organization of this Church, its growth and development stand as a testimony to all the world, and yet there are those who cannot see its truth. Some day God will touch them and then the eyes of their understanding will be opened. They will know, I am sure, that in all the processes that God has instituted, this Church has been on the right side.

One of our modern poets, Edgar A. Guest, has given us the following lines:

"The non-believer is a man
Who lets the morning sunshine in
And thinks by chance this world began
As men throw dice and lose or win;
He sees the violets bloom and blow,
But not the power which makes them grow.

"Chance charted every planet's course!
By chance the summer follows spring!
Chance gave to man the faithful horse
And made the swallow fleet of wing!
How these things came he doesn't know,
He thinks they merely happened so.

"Oh, what a jumble there would be
If chance were shaping beasts and men,
Could blind chance once repeat a tree,
Or bring the June rose back again?
The simplest truth we've learned to know,
Tomorrow chance might overthrow.

"Without confusion or mistake
There is a power which rules us all,
A higher law we cannot break,
An eye that sees the sparrow's fall.
In every twig and leaf and blade
I see God's handiwork displayed.

I pray the blessings of God to be with this people, on its leaders, and in all Israel, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir sang the first two verses of the hymn, "An angel from on high."

ELDER HENRY H. ROLAPP

President of the Eastern States Mission

My brethren and sisters, I deem it a great privilege to have the opportunity of making a report of the Eastern States Mission. I have probably seen seventy-five per cent of the parents or close relatives of the missionaries who are laboring in the Eastern States. I would like to see the remainder of them at the close of this meeting.

In the Eastern States we have a wonderful showing. Everybody is well. We haven't a sick missionary in the entire district. We have been very fortunate in having some of the general authorities come to New York and preach to the saints. During the last month Elder Whitney went through the entire mission. He and I saw every missionary. We have had President Talmage preach to us in New York and Brooklyn; we had Brother Widtsoe talk to us; and we have had Bishop Sylvester Q. Cannon, Bishop Wells and other elders visit us. President Grant visited with us in New York and West Virginia. In the latter place he had never been heard before, and the saints were out in very large numbers. During the past month while Brother Whitney was there we had exceptionally large meetings. In the Brooklyn Branch every seat was taken, both in the body of the hall and in the gallery, and chairs were placed in the aisles; yet there must have been fifty persons, I should say, who were unable to get a seat. On that Sunday he addressed perhaps eight hundred people, one quarter of whom were non-Mormons.

In the Eastern States Mission we have started a new proceeding which I understand is being introduced very largely in other missions. We have something over six hundred children of non-members attending Primary Associations. I am a Sunday School man, and we started out to make it a Sunday School affair, but we found we could not. So we instituted the Primaries, and practically every day of the week some Primary is being entertained by the sisters. I think they are doing a marvelous work. In the morning our sisters go out tracting from house to house, and in the afternoon they pick up these children and bring them into their Primary organization and teach them the life of Christ and some other Christian stories.

When I was called on this mission I was not strongly in favor of young ladies coming into the mission field. I have had to change my attitude in that respect. I am now praying for more girls to come into the mission field. They can do a great deal of good. I want to say to you that they are preaching the gospel and they are visiting the parents of these children. True, we have not received very many converts yet, but they are coming, and great good has been done.

I want to testify to the responsibility that the brethren and the sisters feel who are laboring in the Eastern States Mission. They are living lives of Latter-day Saints; they are preaching the gospel of Christ, and they are causing one to marvel at the miracle which God is performing. The young people as they come into the mission know comparatively little regarding the gospel. True, they have gone to Sunday School and to Mutual, and have been faithful and diligent in doing so; but when they have been in the mission a year or so they have a testimony which I promise them shall never leave them. They may apostatize from the Church, but they will have the knowledge that they have testified to the truth. When those young people come back—I join in the statement made by President Allred—then is the time I would like to see you give them a party. They have then done something for the Church of Christ. That is the time when I would like to see everybody come out and congratulate them on what they have done.

Practically every elder in the mission can come home and do more than fifty percent of your own ward people. They are trained in visiting the saints. Take hold of them, make them ward teachers when they come home, and appeal to them in the proper spirit. I want to tell you there are no stronger young people in the world than these young missionaries. I am thankful that I have been called on a mission. I am getting old, but I am thankful that even at my age I received the call to do missionary work. I testify to you that I know this is the gospel of Christ, and that testimony has been with me ever since

I was upon a mission in England with President Nibley about fifty years ago. That testimony is still in my heart and has never been shaken, but this mission has made it conspicuous, so that I know not only what I can do, but I know what your children can do. Do not let them come home and become inactive. Some of us older ones should step aside and take hold of the younger ones.

I testify to the truthfulness of the gospel. I pray God that he will bless us in the Eastern States Mission that we may grow, as we are growing, financially, spiritually, and in every other way. I ask it all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

President of the Central States Mission

I am very happy, my brethren and sisters, to be in attendance at this conference and to have been able to listen to the sermons that have been delivered.

While sitting upon my seat I have considered and remembered some of the things that President Grant said, one of which was that the Latter-day Saints should read the Doctrine and Covenants and the other standard Church works. In my years of experience in the mission field I have failed to find any one thing revealed by the Lord successfully assailed. In all the experiences I have had I know of nothing else that has stood the test that the principles of the gospel have stood. I am sure that they will endure unto the end, and the measurement of men's success and the glory of God shall be brought about through the principles he has revealed unto the world in these the last days. The Lord says that if men will read these scriptures with real intent and with a desire to know the truth he will manifest the truth unto them by the power of the Holy Ghost; by the power of the Holy Ghost they may know all things.

The Lord requires of all men, regardless of who they are, that they must be sincere, that they must have a real intent in their hearts; and when they do, he will come unto them in the hours of the day and the night, and bring to them his blessings, and reveal unto them his truths as a father on the earth would reveal to his son, only in greater measure. Our Eternal Father loves his children and will reveal unto them his purposes and make known unto them why he sent them into the earth. The children of men are to be congratulated in this day and generation because of that which God our Eternal Father has delivered unto them.

As I have sat today thinking of the thousands of people who are listening to these services; who are hearing the remarks that are being made in the sessions of this conference by the servants of God—the President of the Church and others who have spoken or who will speak—I have recognized that the word of God has been revealed anew to us. The plan has been revealed to many undoubtedly who have never been able to listen before as they have at this time. Great are the purposes of God our Eternal Father. His power is everywhere, through all and in all. This is the work of God. He is with his children at home and abroad. His sons and daughters are doing much, and he is the one unto whom we should give glory and honor and praise forever and ever; for he is God, the King of all, the Father of heaven and earth; he has planned everything for the good of his sons and daughters here in mortality. May we rally to him and to those who represent him in the earth, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

President of the Southern States Mission

In every dispensation the Lord has chosen men to lead and preserve Israel who were statesmen as well as prophets. This is deeply significant. These statesmen-prophets have pointed to nations as well as to the people of their own faith the means of escape from impending evils and calamities.

In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that great statesman-prophet, nearly one hundred years ago, the Lord said:

"Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments." (Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 1:17.)

That awful hurricane in Florida, four weeks ago today (Sunday, September 16th) evidences the truth of the revelation in which it is declared by the Lord that the testimony of the elders would be followed by the testimony of earthquakes, and other events.

"And after your testimony cometh wrath and indignation upon the people.

"For after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes. * * *

"And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunders, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds.

"And all things shall be in commotion; and surely, men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people." (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 88:88-91.)

Tennyson says that "things seen are mightier than things heard." I was a horrified eye witness of the ruin and desolation wrought by that fearful tempest. I beheld the hurrying floods going on to their work of destruction. The buildings, everywhere, in the storm-stricken district were in ruins. The Lord, ever mindful of the safety of his missionaries, caused them to come out of that part of Florida devastated by the storm several days before the hurricane came upon that region. I know it is said that such calamities have always been in the earth. That may or may not be true. But it is certainly true that the God of heaven, down through all the ages has thundered his warnings by the voice of judgment to unrepentant people, and by that means, when the voice of admonition and mercy has failed, has urged them to forsake the paths of wrong-doing and return unto him.

There were good men and good women who lost their lives in that tempest, but I cannot believe that these unfortunate people died in vain. We have had martyrs to science, education and religion. The Holy Bible and the Book of Mormon cost some of the best blood of Adam's race to bring them forth for the purpose of blessing the people: for these sacred records testify to the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe that the Christian men, women and children who died in the storm have gone to an eternal reward; and if the people of the world are impressed by that awful destruction from the Almighty, if they will profit from the lesson of that fearful calamity, these men and women shall not have died in vain.

When we see the judgments of God coming upon the earth it is proof that the Savior, who said to the troubled sea and angry elements, "Peace, be still," will say to the troubled world, "Peace, be still." He will, at his second coming, inaugurate the Millennium, bring to pass the glorious resurrection, and all the things he has promised to those that obey him.

Brethren and sisters, the scriptures ring with the call to the repentance that will move a man to "put on the new man," the repentance that will give the sinner another heart. Of such vital importance to a man's salvation is the cleansing of the soul, that the Lord has said: "Say nothing but repentance unto this generation." And in another place he says: "Behold, the world is ripening in iniquity; and it must needs be that the children of men are stirred up unto repentance, both the Gentiles and also the house of Israel." (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 18:6.)

And this is the mission of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. This is the glorious and sacred work your sons and daughters are doing in the mission fields; and God is with them. His promises are being fulfilled to the very letter.

The Apostle Paul said: "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh." We appeal to all people to come unto repentance. Obey him whose voice not only shakes the earth, but also heaven. Come unto Jesus Christ and get that peace and rest for your souls that is beyond all price.

God help us to serve the Lord acceptably, in reverence and in Godly fear, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

REORGANIZATION OF RELIEF SOCIETY

Sister Clarissa S. Williams has been President of the Relief Society for a number of years. Her husband was sick for a year or two prior to his death, and her own health has not been first-class. It has, therefore, been decided by the Council of the First Presidency and Twelve, after consultation with Sister Williams and with her approval, to release her from this position with our thanks, love and blessings.

This action also involves the release of her counselors, Sisters Jennie B. Knight and Louise Y. Robison, and as the new president wishes Sister Amy Brown Lyman to be her first counselor, it also involves her release as secretary and treasurer of the organization.

These good sisters carry our love and blessings for the splendid labors that they have performed.

(The congregation then indicated their approval of this action by unanimous vote.)

President Grant then presented the General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, who were sustained by unanimous vote of the congregation, as follows:

NATIONAL WOMAN'S RELIEF SOCIETY

Louise Y. Robison, President
Amy Brown Lyman, First Counselor
Julia A. Child, Second Counselor
Julia F. Lund, Secretary and Treasurer

with all the members of the Board as at present constituted.

DESERET SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

David O. McKay, General Superintendent
Stephen L. Richards, 1st Asst. Superintendent
Melvin J. Ballard, 2nd Asst. Superintendent

with all the members of the Board as at present constituted.

YOUNG LADIES' MUTUAL IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION

Martha H. Tingey, President
Ruth May Fox, First Counselor
Lucy Grant Cannon, Second Counselor

with all the members of the Board as at present constituted.

PRIMARY ASSOCIATION

May Anderson, President
Sadie G. Pack, First Counselor
Isabelle S. Ross, Second Counselor

with all the members of the Board as at present constituted.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I can say that I have rejoiced beyond my power of expression in the very excellent attendance that we have had at this conference, in the rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord upon those who have spoken and in the splendid attention that has been given by the audiences. I believe that we have had a larger number at this conference than at any previous one that I can recall during the time I have been President of the Church. In addition there have been hundreds and thousands who have been listening in over the radio.

We rejoice in the gospel of Jesus Christ, those of us who have received it, and we are anxious that all the world should hear the message of life and salvation that has come to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

REJOICE BECAUSE OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

We had a very wonderful gathering here last night of the priesthood of the Church, almost completely filling the main floor of this great auditorium with men holding the priesthood of the living God, with authority to administer in the name of Jesus Christ, with power from God himself.

We rejoice in the wonderful work that is being accomplished by the Relief Societies, by the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations, by our Sunday Schools and by the Primary Associations. We rejoice exceedingly in the remarkable work that is being accomplished in the educational department of the Church and particularly by the Religion Class organization. Sixty-one thousand of our young people are receiving instruction in our Religion Classes. I rejoice in the work of the Lord and all that is being accomplished.

GRATEFUL FOR BLESSINGS

We are grateful for the beautiful singing by our choir. We are grateful to the soloists who have entertained us. We are thankful for the wonderful organ and for the faithful and efficient men who officiate at the organ.

My heart went out in gratitude as I listened to the prayer by Brother Stephen L. Chipman, thanking the Lord for this wonderful Temple block, for the flowers, and for all the buildings that are here.

May the Lord bless the Latter-day Saints. May we so order our lives that by our diligence, our faithfulness, our honesty, our integrity, our uprightness in all the walks of life, we can preach the gospel, is my most sincere and earnest prayer for every soul who has a testimony of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Even so, amen.

The choir sang the anthem, "Worthy the Lamb."

The benediction was pronounced by President Anthony W. Ivins. Conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing, assisted by B. Cecil Gates. Accompaniments and interludes were played on the great organ by Edward P. Kimball, Tracy Y. Cannon, Frank W. Asper, and Alexander Schreiner.

Stenographic notes of the conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

JOSEPH ANDERSON,
Clerk of the Conference.

Ninety-Ninth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The Ninety-ninth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, April 5, 6, and 7, 1929.

The proceedings of the six sessions of the Conference were broadcast by radio for the benefit of the general public.

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH PRESENT

Of the First Presidency: Heber J. Grant, Anthony W. Ivins and Charles W. Nibley.

Of the Council of the Twelve: Rudger Clawson, *, George Albert Smith, George F. Richards, Orson F. Whitney, David O. McKay, Joseph Fielding Smith, James E. Talmage, Stephen L. Richards, Richard R. Lyman, and Melvin J. Ballard, †.

Presiding Patriarch: Hyrum G. Smith.

Of the First Council of Seventy: Brigham H. Roberts, J. Golden Kimball, Rulon S. Wells, Joseph W. McMurrin, Charles H. Hart, Levi Edgar Young, and Rey L. Pratt.

Of the Presiding Bishopric: Sylvester Q. Cannon, David A. Smith, and John Wells.

OFFICERS AND OTHER AUTHORITIES PRESENT

Church Historian and Recorder: Joseph Fielding Smith, and the following assistants: Andrew Jenson, Brigham H. Roberts, ‡, and Junius F. Wells.

Presidents of stakes and their counselors were well represented from the one hundred and one stakes of Zion.

Patriarchs, Bishops of Wards and their counselors, and numerous high priests, seventies, and elders, from all parts of the Church, were in attendance. Members of the Board of Education, and general, stake, and ward officers of the auxiliary organizations were present.

Mission Presidents were in attendance as follows: James H. Moyle, Eastern States; Noah S. Pond, Northern States; Samuel O. Bennion, Central States; John G. Allred, North Central States; Charles H. Hart, Canada; William R. Sloan, Northwestern States; Charles A. Callis, Southern States; Miles L. Jones, East Central States; Elias S. Woodruff, Western States; Joseph W. McMurrin, California; Rey L. Pratt, Mexico; Benjamin Goddard, Bureau of Information, Temple Block, Salt Lake City, Utah.

*Reed Smoot was absent in Washington, D. C.

†John A. Widtsoe was absent, presiding over the European Mission.

‡A. William Lund was absent, presiding over the British Mission.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The first session of the conference began promptly at 10 o'clock, Friday morning, April 5th, 1929, at which time the great Tabernacle auditorium and galleries were well filled with people from all parts of the Church.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," was sung by the congregation.

President Hugh B. Brown of the Granite Stake offered the opening prayer.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Guide us, O Thou Great Jehovah."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice to have the opportunity of again meeting with the Saints in general conference. I am very grateful for this splendid audience, considering the inclemency of the weather. I most earnestly pray that while we are assembled here together the prayer that has been offered may be answered and we may have a rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord, that those who address us, those who offer prayers and those who sing for us may be inspired and blessed of our Heavenly Father.

It has been one of the joys of my life to attend, from my childhood days until the present time, the general conferences of the Church, and to partake of the remarkable and wonderful blessings that have come to us from those who have been called upon to speak.

It is customary at our annual conferences to give some information regarding the condition of the Church financially and otherwise.

MISSIONARY WORK

I rejoice to say that our missionary work all over the world is progressing favorably, and that from every mission we have earnest appeals for more missionaries. The work is very great and we do not have as many laborers as we would like to have, notwithstanding there are more than 2,000 missionaries out in the world today proclaiming the Gospel.

CHURCH EXPENDITURES

The items that I thought would be of special interest to the conference I have prepared:

Stake and Ward Purposes—During the past year the Church has expended more than $1,200,000 for the erection of ward and stake buildings. The people themselves have contributed for this same purpose over $1,000,000.

Had the means been available we could have expended as much more, by responding to all the calls that have come to us for funds with which to construct church edifices. But inasmuch as the tithes of the people have not increased in proportion to the applications for funds (in fact the tithes have increased very little, while the expenditures have increased over $500,000) we have been unable to do all that we should have liked to do.

Up until about twelve years ago no more than $300,000 in any one year was ever contributed by the Church to assist in building meeting houses.

Education—There has been expended more than $900,000 for the construction and operation of Church schools, seminaries, and the two institutes that have been erected.

Missions—For the maintenance and operation of missions and for the erection of places of worship and other buildings in the missions, there has been expended over $900,000.

Charity—The total expenditure for charity rendered by the Church, including disbursements from fast offerings, and assistance rendered by the Relief Societies, is more than $800,000.

Missionary Work—Various wards have assisted the missionaries by contributions of over $100,000, principally for the purpose of sending them to their fields of labor.

More than 2,000 missionaries have been sustained in the mission field at the expense of their families, at an average cost per missionary of at least $40 per month, or $960,000 a year; to say nothing about the value of the missionaries' time, which I am sure would be more than double this amount, as they could earn on an average more than twice their expenses.

SEMINARIES VERSUS CHURCH SCHOOLS

There are today 12,500 students in our seminaries and 3,800 students in our Church schools. It is costing more than twice as much to support the 3,800 students in the Church schools as it is to support the 12,500 students in the seminaries. It costs over ten times as much per capita to give the same amount of religious instruction in our Church schools as is given in our seminaries.

It is only fair to say that the religious instruction given in our seminaries is equally as extensive and as thorough as that given in our Church schools. We have appeals from all over the Church, wherever Church schools are located, that we do not close these institutions. The people in each stake feel that their particular school is the one that ought not to be closed. While we are expending more now and have done so for the past three years than all the tithes paid by the people in the various stakes of Zion from Canada to Mexico, it is an impossibility to further extend our seminary system—which has been greatly expanded in the last three years—and still continue our Church schools. When you stop to reflect that it only costs a little less than one-tenth as much to educate our young people religiously in the seminaries as it does in the Church schools you will realize that we are justified in curtailing our schools and in enlarging our seminaries—when we can give for the same amount as much if not a little more religious education to ten people in a seminary as we can give to one person in a school. We would be delighted if it were possible not only to keep each and every one of our Church schools operating, but to have more of them. I am sure that figuratively speaking it breaks the hearts of the presidency and of each and all of the general authorities of the Church to close any one of the Church schools. We appreciate the wonderful labors that have been accomplished and the wonderful good that has been done in these schools, but we cannot, without facing a deficit, continue to expend three or four times as much money for building meeting houses and Church schools with only a very slight increase in our tithes.

Because of these facts we would like the people to understand that in closing Church schools and opening seminaries we shall be able to give religious instruction to about ten times as many students.

STATISTICAL AND OTHER REPORTS COMPILED FROM THE CHURCH RECORDS FOR THE YEAR 1928

We have at the present time: stakes in Zion, 101; wards, 938; independent branches, 74; dependent branches, 36; total wards and branches in the stakes of Zion, from Canada to Mexico, 1048; missions, 27; mission branches, 813.

SOCIAL STATISTICS

Birth rate, 29.9 per thousand.

Marriage rate, 14.7 per thousand.

Death rate, 7.8 per thousand.

Families owning their own homes, 70 per cent.

These figures speak very well for the Church. The first great commandment of the Lord, given to our first parents, was to multiply and replenish the earth. When it comes to the death rate, we have one of the lowest of any people, showing that we must be observing the laws of health—and the laws of health are the laws of God.

I have often said in my public addresses out in the world that when it comes to vital statistics, such as a high birth rate, a low death rate, a low insanity rate, a low divorce rate, in fact all the vital statistics that go to show that a people are a worthy and good people, we are making no apology to any one upon the face of the earth.

CHANGES IN STAKE AND MISSION OFFICERS SINCE OUR LAST CONFERENCE

William H. Richards has been released as president of the Malad stake, and Thomas W. Richards appointed to succeed him.

William T. Jack has been released as president of the Cassia stake, and Charles S. Clark appointed to succeed him.

C. Alvin Orme has been released as president of the Tooele stake, and Alfred L. Hanks appointed to succeed him.

George A. Little has been released as president of the Quirrh stake, and Harry Edward Sutton appointed to succeed him.

William H. Mendenhall has been released as president of the Bannock stake and M. Ezra Sorensen appointed to succeed him.

All of these brethren who have been released have labored with zeal, with energy and with determination for the advancement of the people in those stakes, and they retire with the love and blessing and confidence of the General Authorities of the Church.

MISSION PRESIDENTS APPOINTED

A. William Lund has been appointed president of the British mission.

Heretofore the British mission has been under the direct jurisdiction of the president of the European mission, he presiding over all of the missions in Europe and also being the actual head of the British mission. There are now two missions, one presided over by Elder John A. Widtsoe, which includes all of the missions in Europe, among them being the British mission, presided over by Brother Lund. We have received very good reports for the brief time since this division took place.

Samuel Martin has been released as president of the South African mission, and Don Mack Dalton appointed to succeed him.

Lorenzo W. Anderson has been released as president of the Norwegian mission, and Hyrum D. Jensen appointed to succeed him. Brother Jensen, I believe, left yesterday for his field of labor. He would have liked very much to be here at this conference, but on account of the early sailing of the steamship, he left yesterday.

Alma G. Burton has been released as president of the Tahitian mission, and George W. Burbidge appointed to succeed him. Brother Burton has not yet left for home.

James H. Moyle has been appointed to succeed Brother Henry H. Rolapp as president of the Eastern States mission.

Miles L. Jones has been appointed president of the East Central States mission, a new mission, which includes a part of the territory heretofore belonging to the Southern States mission, presided over by Brother Charles A. Callis, and the state of West Virginia formerly being a part of the Eastern States mission.

New Ward Organizations—Mount Trumbull ward, St. George stake.

Lincoln ward, Granite stake.

Bishop, who has passed away during the past six months—Frank R. Smith of the Hillspring ward, Alberta stake.

Mission president who has passed away during the past six months—Joseph W. Booth of the Armenian mission.

We regret that the circumstances are such that up to date we have been unable to secure permission to bring the body of Brother Booth home, but we expect to secure permission to do so at some later date.

CHURCH INSTITUTES

Speaking of education in our seminaries, we rejoice in the erection during the past year of an institute at Moscow, Idaho, where the young Latter-day Saints who are attending the University of Idaho can receive education religiously. We rejoice that only last Sunday an institute was dedicated where the young people attending the Agricultural college at Logan can have the opportunity of receiving religious training.

IMPORTANCE OF RELIGIOUS TRAINING

One of the outstanding characters in the United States of America is Honorable James J. Davis, Secretary of Labor. He has this to say regarding religious training:

"Morality needs a religious base. A man can not be truly moral unless he is at the same time deeply religious. * * *

"Men may say what they will, but we shall never have a morality that respects the rights and integrity of others unless our morality has a religious sanction. To put morality on anything but a religious basis is to build on sand. It is religion that gives vision, strength, inspiration, and without it we are nothing. * * *

"I have children of my own, and I want them to grow up into men and women who believe that religion has a genuine message for them, as it has for me. I don't want them to develop into atheists and materialists. If there is no truth in the teachings of religion that have come down to us, of what earthly use would life be? If the world were under the control of blind forces operating without any direction, if there were no plan behind the creation of the world and man, and if after our little span of life here we were to lie down for eternity in a dreamless sleep, then I do not see what inspiration life would have for any of us. * * *

"It is the plants we prize that need our care. So it is with the young. Nobody needs to train his son to be vicious. Let him go without training, and he will be that of his own accord. But virtue has to be cultivated, and we can never succeed in that if we let go our hold on religion.

"No nation ever lived and prospered without a religious faith of some sort. * * *

"No people has ever found a purely intellectual education enough in itself. A man may be ever so highly cultivated and still be a bad citizen. One of the greatest scholars of his day, Lord Bacon, took bribes as a judge on the bench, and eventually found himself a prisoner in the Tower of London. Probably the poet went too far in his indictment, but we see the wit in the judgment he passed on the man, as 'Brightest, wisest, meanest of mankind.' * * *

"As institutions where facts may be learned, our schools are worthy of all praise. But facts are not everything. They are not even the most important things in life. One might pack into his head every fact to be known, and yet never even glimpse the kingdom of truth.

"I would plead for a conception of education large enough to take into itself everything that deepens the human consciousness, that inspires the human soul, and gives one a vision of the eternities. This, a moral education, to use the word in the highest sense, will do. As every historian can show, morals divorced from religion are sorry affairs without any point. But morals not so divorced can rise to the height that religion itself has attained."

STATEMENT BY COOLIDGE

Ex-President Coolidge made the following statements:

"Our doctrine of equality and liberty, and humanity and charity, comes from our belief in the brotherhood of man through the fatherhood of God. The whole foundation of enlightened civilization, in government, in society, and in business, rests on religion. Unless our people are thoroughly instructed in its great truths they are not fitted either to understand our institutions or to provide them with adequate support. For our independent colleges and secondary schools to be neglectful of their responsibilities in this direction is to turn their graduates loose with simply an increased capacity to prey upon each other. Such a dereliction of duty would put in jeopardy the whole fabric of society. For our chartered institutions of learning to turn back to the material and neglect the spiritual would be treason, not only to the cause for which they were founded but to man and to God."

"We cannot remind ourselves too often that our right to be free, the support of our principles of justice, our obligations to each other in our domestic affairs, and our duty to humanity abroad, the confidence in each other necessary to support our social and economic relations, and finally, the fabric of our government itself, all rest on religion.

"Its importance cannot be stressed too often or emphasized too much."

THE VALUE OF THE GOSPEL

I believe that I can say without fear of contradiction that we, as a people demonstrate by our actions that our religion is dearer to us and of more actual value than is the religion of any other people in the world to them. Where can you find a people, 2,000 persons of whom are giving their time and their attention without money and without price, laboring to bring others to a knowledge of the Gospel? I am sure that we realize the force of the statement made in that wonderful and remarkable revelation given to David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery:

"Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God;

"For, behold, the Lord your Redeemer suffered death in the flesh; wherefore he suffered the pain of all men, that all men might repent and come unto him.

"And he hath risen again from the dead, that he might bring all men unto him, on conditions of repentance.

"And how great is his joy in the soul that repenteth!

"Wherefore, you are called to cry repentance unto this people.

"And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

"And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me in the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me!"

We are bringing many souls unto a knowledge of the Gospel. I rejoice beyond all the power which God has given me to express my feelings, that the Latter-day Saints in every land and in every clime, all over the wide world wherever the Gospel has gone, have been blessed with a testimony, with a knowledge of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. I never have heard and never expect to hear the song, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet, to Guide Us in These Latter Days," but what my heart goes out in gratitude to God for choosing that wonderful young man, Joseph Smith, to restore to the earth again the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, the plan of life and salvation. I rejoice that the missionaries who have been going out to proclaim this Gospel for ninety-nine long years have gone out under the inspiration of the living God, that they have declared that which they knew to be true; and that in every nation under heaven where the Gospel has gone, honest men and honest women, in answer to their own prayers and their supplications to God, have been blessed with the light and the knowledge of the Gospel, and of the divinity of the mission of Joseph Smith the prophet.

May God bless us during our assembly here today, and inspire all those who shall speak to us, is my humble prayer and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

I desire first to express the sincere gratitude which I feel that I, as well as all of you who are assembled this morning, have been preserved through another year. That we are privileged to assemble here, as it is our custom to do, to commemorate the organization of the Church, to be informed regarding its development and growth, by the teachings of the Gospel which we receive in these general gatherings of the Church. It is for this purpose that we meet together.

PROTECTION FROM STORM

It is a stormy day. Looking out of the window to the south before getting up, it appeared that the storm had developed into a blizzard.

We thank the Lord for the rain and snow. We thank him for clouds, as we do for sunshine, and know that as long as we continue to put our trust in him he will watch over and protect us. The mantle which is drawn about us through the influence of the Gospel of Christ will protect us from the storms of the world, just as this comfortable building does this morning from the storms which are raging without.

MISREPRESENTATION

From the organization of the Church to the present it has been customary for unbelievers to assail the Church until it has become a thing to be expected by us. Abortive efforts have been made to explain the reason for its existence. It has been ridiculed, it has been criticised by both unlearned and learned men. It has been referred to as an organization not Christian in its character. It has been referred to as an organization which perverts the doctrines of Christ as they are taught in the Bible. In fact, it would appear that there is no pretext that can be thought of which has not been resorted to in order that the true origin and purpose of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints might be misrepresented to the world. And it is strange, almost incomprehensible, that these statements which have been made, the reasonings which have been offered, have been accepted as true by intelligent, thoughtful people.

ONE OF THE OBJECTIONS

One of the objections commonly raised is that the Latter-day Saints accept the Book of Mormon, as we declare in our Articles of Faith, as coming from God. This book has been referred to as the "Golden Bible." It has been referred to as a book which the Latter-day Saints place before the Holy Scriptures as they are contained in the Bible. It is now nearly one hundred years since the book was published, and I do not know of a single argument, of a single theory, that has been advanced which has not been successfully met. I desire during the short time at my disposal to refer to some of these objections and call your attention to certain developments which have come under my observation during the past few years that tend to establish the divine authenticity of the book and the things which it teaches.

I am going to read first, in justification of the statement which I have just made, from a book that I now hold in my hand. It is entitled, "Sketches of Mexico," and is written by John W. Butler, a man whom I knew, a man who was in Mexico during my early experience as a missionary in that country. This is what he says in reviewing the origin of the Mexican people:

"The theory found in the Book of Mormon hardly merits mention. The story is given in Bancroft's Native Races, vol. v, and covers five pages (p. 96, et seq.) It is rather romantic and reaches from the Tower of Babel, soon after which it is claimed the first Mormons came to this continent, down to September 22, 1827, when Joseph Smith removed the buried book from the hill Cumorah, Ontario County, N. Y. The whole story is not only a pretentitious fraud but also a blasphemous perversion of Old Testament history.

"The learned John Fiske in his recent valuable work, 'The Discovery of America,' (Boston, 1892), well says: 'It is extremely difficult for an imposter to concoct a narrative without making blunders that can easily be detected by a critical scholar. For example, the Book of Mormon, in the passage cited, in supremely blissful ignorance introduces oxen and sheep, as well as the knowledge of smelting iron, into pre-Columbian America.'" (Vol. 1, p. 179.)

HIS OWN ARGUMENT

Undoubtedly no one can deny John Fiske's intelligence. No one can deny his good citizenship. No one can deny the sincerity of what he writes, but it would perhaps be not entirely inappropriate for me to call attention to his own argument:

"It is extremely difficult for an imposter to concoct a narrative without making blunders that can easily be detected by a critical scholar."

It is equally difficult for a critic to reach proper conclusions in discussing a subject upon which he is not well informed.

So I want to take John Fiske for just a few moments to some of the recent developments which touch upon the very things that he refers to and treats as impossible.

THE USE OF STEEL

I hold in my hand a story taken from the January number of "World's Work" a year ago. It is written by A. Hyatt Verrill, one of the foremost of our archaeologists. The article is headed "The Pompeii of Ancient America," telling of a vast city on the Isthmus of Panama which was destroyed centuries before Christ. He says:

"We believe that this article stands unique among accounts of modern archaeological discoveries. It is the story of an American city which flourished and probably was destroyed by a volcano centuries before Pompeii existed. We are finding that America is not so young after all. Moreover, the veteran explorer for the Museum of the American Indian, who discovered this ancient city and who writes this article, believes that he has made another interesting discovery—that steel implements were used in America centuries ago—a theory which was scoffed at until iron was found in King Tut-Ankh-Amon's tomb in Egypt, dating back to about 1350 B. C."

The entire article is exceedingly interesting to a student of the Book of Mormon. It is elaborately illustrated. I cannot take time to read the many things which have a direct bearing upon the Book of Mormon, but I ask your indulgence while I read the following:

Verrill says:

"I am thoroughly convinced that these people, as well as many other prehistoric races, possessed iron or steel tools, and I do not know of a single argument or fact to disprove this. The fact that no iron or steel tools have ever been found proves nothing. Iron is the most perishable of metals, and except under most unusual and peculiar conditions, all traces of small iron or steel tools would disappear completely in a few centuries. No doubt archaeologists will scoff at this theory and pooh-pooh the idea but scientists as well as laymen have a habit of scoffing at every theory until proof is forthcoming to place them in the wrong."

He then refers to the discovery of steel in the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amon and continues:

"Indeed, less than two years ago I was scoffed at for suggesting that an entirely new and unknown culture of great antiquity had existed in Panama, but we now have undeniable proof of the fact. Moreover, at a depth of five and one-half feet below the surface, at the temple site, among broken pottery and imbedded in charcoal, I found a steel or hardened iron implement. The greater portion is almost completely destroyed by corrosion, but the chisel shaped end is in good condition. It is so hard that it is scarcely touched by a file and will scratch glass, and with such an implement it would be a simple matter to cut and carve the hardest stone."

He then proceeds to say that the stone work which he has uncovered there could not have been accomplished with anything but a hardened steel implement.

Thus, one of the objections which Mr. Fiske expresses in the book from which I have just read is disposed of. Joseph Smith had no knowledge of this, but he told us one hundred years ago, or the historian who wrote the Book of Mormon which Joseph Smith translated, told us that they became expert in the manufacture and use of steel.

ANIMALS OF ANCIENT AMERICA

Again, the objection is made by Mr. Fiske that sheep are referred to in the Book of Mormon. I do not think that this needs particular attention. The llama and alpaca of South America are of this species.

Fiske says oxen were referred to. I have in my hand a circular issued by the Los Angeles County Museum of History, Science and Art. On page 27 of the book is a picture of the skeleton of an ancient ox, mounted and complete. If you will go into the museum at Los Angeles, as I have done, you will see these mounted skeletons. This skeleton is said to be that of a prehistoric ox the remains of which have been taken from the asphalt beds near the city, associated with the remains of many other animals which once existed in America, and are now extinct.

On page twenty-six of the same book is the picture of a skeleton of a horse, said to differ slightly from our present horse, but fully as large taken from the same bed. The Book of Mormon tells us that there were horses and oxen here. This would appear to dispose of that criticism also.

FINE PEARLS

Another thing to which my attention has been called, and it has been very interesting to me, because it helps us in the conclusions reached in regard to several important matters contained in the Book of Mormon, is the following: (We are now dealing with a period nearly three hundred years after the birth of Christ.) The writer tells us:

"And now, in this two hundred and first year there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world."

He does not refer to diamonds, nor rubies, nor sapphires, but to pearls. This also has been made a question of ridicule by critics of the Book of Mormon and the faith of the Latter-day Saints. I have in my hand a page which I tore from the "Courier-Journal" of Ohio in 1925. I wish you could all have it and read it, and also a page from the "Literary Digest." I can only read the headlines because time will not permit me to refer to the many interesting things which are contained in it. But this is what the headlines tell us: "America's Ancient Kings and Their Bushels of Pearls—Skeletons of a prehistoric family that ruled the mysterious people who built the mounds near Chillicothe, Ohio, where they were recently discovered. They are surrounded by bushels of pearls which evidently formed their burial robes."—"Newest remarkable discoveries about the Prehistoric People who built the huge earthen mounds and buried their Kings in Robes of Precious Stones."

I was in communication at this time with a friend in New York, who is a collector of Indian relics, and probably had one of the largest individual collections in the United States. He was well acquainted with the archaeologist who uncovered this remarkable burial place. The photographs contained in the article the headings of which I have just read show the form in which the skeletons were found and their surroundings. The article says that the fragment of clothing which they wore was shown to be of very fine quality. But more than all, this friend of mine said he had some of these pearls in his possession which had been sent to him, and they were very fine, ranging in size from a hickory nut to a pin head, all of which had been pierced and used evidently as ornaments.

WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE OF THE FUTURE

This may be considered a small thing by some people, but to me it is very important, because one hundred years ago that account was written into this record without knowledge of the future, without knowledge of these developments that are being made by archaeologists at the present time. I do not know that I can say that these things tend to strengthen our faith because our faith appears to have been definite and needs little strengthening, but it is a source of great satisfaction to us to know that these arguments which have been used, and used so effectually against the Book of Mormon, are gradually being displaced by the actual discoveries which are being made.

THE GOLDSMITH ART

The Book of Mormon is referred to as the Golden Bible of the Mormons, because of the fact that the record was made in reformed Egyptian characters upon plates which were of gold. I have in my hand a little book published by the Heye Foundation of the American Indian, from which I wish to read a paragraph or two. This book is written by Saville, one of our foremost students of archaeology. It is entitled

"The Goldsmith's Art in Ancient Mexico." The entire volume is devoted to this one subject, and tells us of the expert manner in which the Mexican Indians handled gold at the time of the conquests; that the goldsmiths of old Spain, which stood at the head of the world at that time, were amazed, and that they employed these Indians to convert the gold which was accumulated by the conquerors of Mexico into ingots that could be carried back to Spain.

MILLIONS IN GOLD

One of the first Spaniards to visit the coasts of the mainland was Juan de Grijalva. He left Cuba, coasted along Yucatan and Central America, and then returned to his starting point. He brought with him more than one hundred samples, which I have copied from this book, of ornaments made from gold. This excited the cupidity of the Spaniards, and other expeditions were immediately sent out for further investigation. One single article, it could not have been used as an ornament, undoubtedly having some religious signification, said to have been as large as a cart wheel, was brought out. It had a weight value in gold of thirty thousand dollars. Among the things which he brought were very beautiful representations of animals, of birds, of men, and other things. Prescott declared that there was collected by Cortez and those who were with him, six million three hundred thousand dollars worth of gold, the greater part of which was not used as a circulating medium, but for the adornment of the person, the representation of various forms of life, and the religious ideals of the people.

Among other things Montezuma had in his palace in Mexico City, a room wherein was represented every known bird and animal which could not be kept alive in the gardens just outside, made from gold, and said to have been so nearly perfect that it amazed these Spanish adventurers.

PLATES OF GOLD

That is not the particular thing to which I desire to call your attention. Mr. Saville has taken the contents of his book from the old inventories that are still available, reports which were made to the kings to whom one-fifth of all the booty which fell into the hands of the conquerors was sent. The amount not recorded he says no one can guess. Six million dollars would be but a bagatelle compared with what we believe was carried away by the conquistadors.

This is the thing which particularly interested me, and to which my attention was called by Professor Levi Edgar Young. The book that I hold in my hand is his property. I read from it as follows:

"Padre Gay mentions that the Mixtecan Indians 'sold to some European antiquarians, very thin plates of gold, evidently worked with the hammer which their ancestors had been able to preserve, and on which were engraved ancient hieroglyphics.'"

That is very significant to us, when considered in connection with the declaration that the record from which the Book of Mormon was translated was written upon plates of gold.

A few days ago I received a letter from Dr. John A. Widtsoe who at present presides over the European mission. Among other things he says:

"Last fall as I was leaving London I spent an hour in the British museum almost at random. I entered the large room devoted to oriental manuscripts. I noticed at once in the first case to the right a series of very fine silver plates, perhaps three inches wide and eight inches long, held together by a silver ring. The plates were beautifully engraved with characters which the legend said gave Buddha's first sermon. In the next case was a sheet of extremely thin gold likewise engraved on both sides, which according to the legend was a letter from one ruler to another."

I thought again, my brethren and sisters, that this is very significant. It settles without controversy the fact that gold was used anciently for plates upon which records were kept. It illustrates clearly that sheets of metal used for that purpose were held together by rings, just as the prophet tells us the plates containing the Book of Mormon were held together.

NOT UNREASONABLE

How reasonable this is when you think of it. We know that gold is one of the most ductile, one of the most enduring of metals. We know that it does not tarnish. You may throw it into a river of muddy water; you may bury it in the earth. Go where you will today and wash from the gravel its grains as I have done, you will find that they are always bright. They retain their color. They are recognized at once. It is one of the softest of metals, not as soft as lead, but nearly so, and consequently would be a convenient metal upon which to keep a record. And if that record were especially valuable and sacred to the people how reasonable it would be that they should keep it upon plates of gold.

FAMILIARITY WITH THE BOOK REQUIRED

But I must not continue. I call your attention to these facts believing that they will be interesting to you. I appeal to all of the members of the Church to become familiar with the Book of Mormon. I would that all people, whether they be members of the Church or not, would familiarize themselves with that work. Not through rumors that have been circulated in regard to it, not from such statements as are made by Fiske, which I have read to you—an honest man without doubt, but misled because of what others had said, not familiar with the book itself. I would like to apply that same warning that he applies, to myself and to others, that we must be careful lest we, by writing on subjects that we do not understand, make the same mistake that he has made.

"It is extremely difficult for an imposter to concoct a narrative without making blunders."

Nothing more true than that was ever said. I paraphrase that statement by saying, it is extremely difficult for a critic to criticise that with which he is not familiar without making blunders.

Blunders have been made from the time of the publication of the book until the present, beginning with the old Spaulding Manuscript story, in the abortive attempts which have been made to account for the existence of the Book of Mormon, and the organization of the Church, and it is still being done by men who reside in our own communities, men who have the facilities at their command by which they may know the truth.

THE TEACHINGS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

The Book of Mormon does not replace the Bible. We believe the Bible to be the word of God insofar as it is correctly translated. I could preach a sermon upon that subject and satisfy any reasonable man that it is the only correct statement that could be made. We also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God. It is a Christian book. The title page itself appeals to people to come unto Christ—Jew, Gentile, bond and free—that salvation may be obtained through him. The last chapter in the book makes the same appeal. You can scarcely open a page that does not bear witness to the fact that Christ is the Redeemer of the world, the Son of God, our Savior, our Elder Brother, our Advocate with the Father. He stands between us and the Father to plead our cause. Every message that comes to us from the Father comes through the Son. He came to do the will of the Father. He came to show us the personality of the Father, for he said he was in the exact image of his person.

So I say one by one criticisms which have been made regarding the Book of Mormon are falling by the way through the investigation of scientists who understand their business. I thank the Lord for them and that which they are undertaking to do. I have never had any fear that a thing would be discovered to disprove the truths contained in this book.

We must be careful in the conclusions that we reach. The Book of Mormon teaches the history of three distinct peoples, or two peoples and three different colonies of people, who came from the old world to this continent. It does not tell us that there was no one here before them. It does not tell us that people did not come after. And so if discoveries are made which suggest differences in race origins, it can very easily be accounted for, and reasonably, for we do believe that other people came to this continent. A thousand years had elapsed from the time the Book of Mormon closed until the discovery of America, and we know that other people came to America during that period.

NO DEFINITE SOLUTION

There is a great deal of talk about the geography of the Book of Mormon. Where was the land of Zarahemla? Where was the City of Zarahemla? and other geographic matters. It does not make any difference to us. There has never been anything yet set forth that definitely settles that question. So the Church says we are just waiting until we discover the truth. All kinds of theories have been advanced. I have talked with at least half a dozen men that have found the very place where the City of Zarahemla stood, and notwithstanding the fact that they profess to be Book of Mormon students, they vary a thousand miles apart in the places they have located. We do not offer any definite solution. As you study the Book of Mormon keep these things in mind and do not make definite statements concerning things that have not been proven in advance to be true.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters, keep us all in the faith, and make it possible for us to withstand the assaults of the world, for they are coming just as they have come. They will come with greater force. Lucifer is not dead. He is opposed to Christ, our Lord. He has been opposed to him and fought him for the dominion of this earth since he was cast down to it, and the battle is not yet won. It will become fiercer and fiercer, but there is no doubt in regard to the ultimate termination. Christ will prevail. He will rule over this earth, the right of which he won by the shedding of his blood, and redemption will come to his covenant people. Every word spoken by the prophets inspired of God, as it applies to this land, to this people, and to this great dispensation, the greatest of all time, will be fulfilled. I bear witness of it, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

One great difficulty that we have always had in our conferences is to find sufficient time to hear from all whom we would like to have speak here. We will ask some of our missions presidents to speak briefly this morning, and ask that they occupy not to exceed ten minutes.

ELDER SAMUEL O. BENNION

President of the Central States Mission

I sincerely trust that the spirit of the Lord may lead my thoughts at this time.

The principles of the Gospel as taught by the Church of Jesus Christ appeal to me; they are in strict accord with the holy scriptures; they are conclusive evidence to me that this Church is in harmony with that established by our Lord and Master in the meridian of time. In my experience I have not found any man or set of men who have successfully assailed any of the principles of the Gospel revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith a century ago. During that period of time the Church has taught many glorious truths—among others, that our Eternal Father has a body of flesh and bones; that men lived before they came into this world, in an ante-mortal state, where they developed under the inspiration and power of God, and where prophets were chosen and ordained. No sect or party of men has been able to prove these doctrines untrue.

On the other hand, I have listened hundreds of times to young men from the stakes of Zion, who have come into the world to preach the Gospel, proclaiming the same doctrines which were taught by the early elders of the Church. These young men have never heard these early sermons, they have never had an opportunity to read them, but they have taught the same principles and delivered almost verbatim the same sermons by the same power. This fact bears testimony to me that the Divine Teacher who taught the elders of this Church in the beginning is in the earth today teaching the children of men through the priesthood of the Son of God.

The power of the Holy Ghost is in the earth; God our Eternal Father rules and reigns; he governs and controls the destinies of men according to their obedience to his laws. The Savior of the world is guarding the interests of his Church and it shall stand in the earth to be here when he shall come in his own due time.

Men and women by the score have been gathered out from among the congregations of the earth and have borne testimony through the inspiration and power that God gives to baptized believers, that this work is true. Hundreds and thousands of copies of the Book of Mormon have been printed and distributed by our missionaries, and men and women have come into the Church through the divine testimony taught within the pages of that holy record, which record is a history of the hand-dealings of God with the children of men who lived on this American continent. It has been assailed again and again but unsuccessfully.

I glory in the work of God. There is nothing in the world that is of more interest than the teachings of the Gospel; nothing that will make men and women happier and bring them closer to our Father.

I am glad to be able to report to you the success of our mission, the Central States mission. The elders there and the sisters are happy in their work, and they are developing the testimony that came into the world with them, that will make them a power in this world. They will be the means of bringing many others into the Church. It is the work of God. I thank our Eternal Father for the light that he has given me, for the testimony that he has given me, for the privilege I have had of learning and teaching the principles of the Gospel to men and women in the earth and of being associated with holy men of God who bear his priesthood, his power and his authority, as leaders and prophets in the dispensation of time in which we live. It has been my salvation.

I pray God that he may continue to give light and truth to his children, that we may obey the inspiration that comes to us and glorify his name to the end; in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER JAMES H. MOYLE

President of the Eastern States Mission

It is my prayer that I may be able to occupy the short time allotted, in saying something that will be appropriate and profitable. It will be fifty years next July since, as a young boy, I went on a mission to the Southern States. I was reminded, by what President Grant read from the book of Doctrine and Covenants, of the joy that comes into one's life with the knowledge that he has been the means of bringing one honest soul to a knowledge of the truth. That truth and promise has come more forcibly to my mind than ever before while on my present mission. I have been reminded of the good souls to whom I carried the gospel message in my youth, and who went down with me into the waters of baptism; whose families are today splendid, honored Latter-day Saints, surrounded with greater comfort, with greater blessings than they would have possibly enjoyed where I found them.

The Eastern States mission is in excellent condition. A wonderful work is being done. Although the people generally are not so much interested in religion, yet there are many honest souls who may be reached, and wonderful possibilities exist in that mission.

There is one thing in particular to which I desire to call the attention of the presiding authorities of the Church, and a condition which I would have the mothers and fathers and the bishops of wards consider, though it may not be my prerogative to call attention to it particularly. That is the fact that in the Eastern States mission there are nine of the greatest educational institutions of America, great universities and almost innumerable colleges, and smaller universities, to which the young people from Utah and surrounding states, are going to obtain an education. I find that few if any of these young people carry with them transfers of their membership in the Church to the branches where they attend school. There may be some, but I do not know of any who do. What is the result? In each of the great university towns, excepting Cornell and Princeton, there are organized branches of the Church with splendid men and women carrying on a great work. These young people are not only needed there, but they need the assistance and the contact with these organizations. I find that many of them never attend any branch meetings or participate in any of the activities of the Church. As a rule the meetings are held in humble places, ill-favored physically, but blessed spiritually. These young people go to school and they say: "Well I am here for a few years, and I want to devote myself solely to my studies." Then I find again others, a few, who have contact with these branches of the Church, who associate with the elders, the missionaries and branch officers; and what is the result? They are cultivating and developing spirituality as well as intellectuality. Some of these young people will come home better Latter-day Saints than when they left their parents. I cannot help but refer to one as an illustrious example. He came from the Eleventh Ward of this city, young Dr. Leroy Alvin Wirthlin, a graduate of Harvard University, who is doing interne work in Boston. He actively associated himself with the missionaries and members of the Boston branch, and has done everything in his power, while at school, to promote the work of the Lord. He has some additional or post graduate work to do, which only occupies a portion of his time; the balance of his time is spent in active missionary work. What is the result today? Without being called upon a mission, he is taking the place of a missionary, working with a missionary, devoting very largely all his spare time (and they all have spare time), during the few months that it is necessary for him to remain there. All the missionaries point to him as an illustration of what can be accomplished. He is using his exceptional qualities and efficiency in assisting in this great work of saving souls. He thoroughly enjoys the thrill that he receives from his contact with the missionaries and from the good he accomplishes.

I am reminded of the statement made to me by Presiding Bishop Cannon, that there will be an effort made to have bishops transfer the membership of our people, not only students, but all of our members who go east for employment or education or other purposes, when they are to remain away a year or more. By thus transferring their membership to our branches we have an opportunity of knowing these people. I found that the president of the Massachusetts district and the president of the branch of the Church there, did not even know young men who came from the very best of Latter-day Saint families here, who had been in Harvard for a year or two. They did not know they were there. What is the result? They associate themselves with students and friends who are not of our faith. They live in an atmosphere foreign to the Gospel. They breathe that atmosphere and it gradually becomes a part of them. We must work in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, if we are to progress and hold fast to the faith. If we stop using any of our limbs, what is the result? My arm, if unused long enough, would not perform its normal functions. It would wither and become useless. Just as we would lose the use of our limbs by non-use just so with the Latter-day Saints who cease to act as such, or to have contact with those who enjoy the Spirit of the Gospel. It matters not how well favored they may have been, if they cease to have contact with Latter-day Saints, if they cease to perform the duties that they can perform, and separate themselves from the Church and its associations, they lose the faith; and many of our young people, I find, in the East, have apparently lost their faith. One young man to whom I spoke recently, the vice-president of one of the large corporations of the East, who has been there a number of years, never attends Church. His wife is the daughter of a bishop in the Church, his grandfather was one of the pioneers of forty-seven. I asked him why he did not attend. "Well," he said, "I am so busy." That I find to be the statement generally. I said, "Has the faith of your father and mother faded out completely?" He said, "I can't say that." His mother is a splendid worker in the Relief Society. Then I said to him: "Can we not induce you to come here and lend the strength of your personality, your reputation and standing, to help this little branch of the Church?" Think of what he could accomplish by spending a few hours with the saints on Sunday. Just before I left New York I was informed that there were fifteen doctors from Utah—and I suppose that means Idaho and these surrounding states—Latter-day Saints, practicing their profession in New York and its environs, fifteen of them, most of whom pay very little attention to Church work. We have many members in those great business and educational centers in almost every vocation in life. The great commercial, industrial and manufacturing industries of the East employ many of our people. Some of them are prominent professors and instructors in the great educational institutions. Some are in leading law offices. There is a migration which I think has been overlooked, from the West to the East. A comparative few of our people who have been reared here and who have been East long, are active in the Church. All, including our merchants, business men, and our young people who go East for various purposes, know of the opportunities for entertainment and amusement; they all find ample and abundant time for amusement. Too often they feel that they must in that time miss nothing, even the vicious and degenerating, and they forget and ignore that which is more vital and important, the Spirit of God. They go there feeling that they are relieved from restraint. They go there frequently not intending to stay, but they find employment and hundreds of them are there. More of them are there whose names are not upon the records of the Church than those who have their names upon the records. I importune the fathers and mothers and the bishops of the Church to see that these Church members have their records transferred, that we may be able to work with them. They can be transferred back when they come home. I will be glad to have parents correspond with me and cooperate with them. The General Electric Company has quite a number of our young men employed as engineers. For example, I think there are six of such at Schenectady, occupying responsible positions. Some of them are faithful Latter-day Saints. In Philadelphia, we have a great many doctors as well as others. Hundreds are in Washington. All these young people need the watchful care of parents and they need to be kept in contact with the Church, so that they will not drift away. Many of the choicest blood of Israel are drifting away through lack of contact with the Church. It is due, to some extent, to the fact that their parents are not sufficiently interested or advised.

Then we have another interesting situation. The German and Swiss saints, many of whom are hastening their departure from Europe because of changes soon to take effect in the immigration law, and finding it much easier and cheaper to stop in New York, are locating there. They think there are better opportunities for employment there also. They are coming every month. We anticipate something like two hundred will be coming within the next two months. We have several hundred of these saints in the Brooklyn branch. There are a goodly number of them in the Manhattan branch and also in Union City. All these things present a problem that is worthy of serious thought.

I would like to make an appeal to prominent men and women of the Church who go to New York, that in place of spending all their time seeking amusement, they go to the branch meetings of the Church and lend the strength of their personality and their presence to help us build up the work of the Master, in which we are engaged. While we do not have sufficient numbers for a stake of Zion there now, we have the intelligence, the personality and an abundance of it, and I believe it will be but a short time before we will be ready to organize a stake in this greatest of all commercial centers of the world; the unquestioned metropolis of the world, where we should have more adequate facilities for carrying on this great work. Nevertheless it is progressing, and nothing can stay it.

I believe I have occupied my time; but there is one thing to which I will refer; that is in connection with the Book of Mormon. It has been to me a source of interesting study throughout my life. For many years I have been a member of the American Anthropological Society and the Archaeological Society, chiefly because of my interest in the Book of Mormon. During the war, it was my privilege to become very well acquainted and frequently to have luncheon with Doctor Spinden of the Peabody Museum of Boston, a professor of Archaeology in Harvard, and also Mr. Morley, the leading archaeologist of America, in making explorations in Central America. The latter has been financed for about twenty years by the Carnegie Institute of Washington; has spent as much as ten years in excavating the ruins of Copan. He has written voluminously. He has written one book of about a thousand pages on the explorations of that ancient but hidden city of Copan. Doctor Spinden, the leading authority on the subject, in the presence of Mr. Morley and myself, declared that he has made a special study of the manufacturing of cloth in ancient America, and he said that without question the ancient Peruvians had attained a higher degree of perfection in the manufacture of cloth than any other nation of their time. Dr. Morley seemed to concur in the fact. So perfect and complete had it been developed that nothing since has exceeded the skill and fineness that they demonstrated. If you will read in last month's "Art and Archaeology," the leading archaeological journal of the United States, on the front page, in the first paragraph, the leading article of that journal, you will find that it states that the cultural development of the aboriginal inhabitants in Central America, prior to Columbus, was equal to that of any nation of their time; that Babylon and Egypt did not exceed the culture that has been discovered in the ancient ruins of this continent. That culture and advancement did not exist in the days of Columbus. It was found in the ruins they left. Only the Book of Mormon tells the whole story.

It was presented to the world, before explorations of ancient cities of America had been made, when little or nothing had been written about the subject in English, by a boy twenty-four years of age, whose life had been spent on the frontier, a mere backwoodsman, uneducated, always existing in and surrounded by poverty and adversity, having no contact with educated men or libraries. Its pages reveal to the world a detailed history of many nations, various peoples, great wars, the lives of good and great men, as well as wicked ones, the birth and growth of governments, nations, religions and civilizations. It presents the Gospel in its fulness and contains glorious teachings and prophetic predictions which are being fulfilled. Contrast that achievement with the results of the life work of the greatest scientific archaeological American explorer of our time, backed by Carnegie millions, who can only tell a small part of what happened in a few cities of a small section of Central America. The contrast is so striking that the Book of Mormon can only be admired because a hundred years of fierce opposition and effort at exposure have not affected it. And now it is read by the thousands, where it was only read by the hundreds a few years ago. Has not the Lord indeed taken the weak things of the world to confound the wisdom of the great and the wise?

My brethren and sisters, the thrill of being a servant of God, carrying his message to the world, the preaching of the Gospel, has stirred my soul. My whole heart is in this work, and while my physical comfort is not what it was at home, while my physical surroundings are not so comfortable, I do bear testimony to the fact that I never enjoyed myself more than when I suffered privation and even hunger as well as the brutal treatment of mobs, while on a mission in the Southern States in the days of my early youth. I was in the adjoining state to the one where the martyred James Standing suffered death, and where President Clawson was condemned to death by a ruthless mob, but was miraculously saved. I went through the experiences of that time and never enjoyed myself more, notwithstanding the hardships, for we traveled almost entirely on foot and without purse or scrip. To the stranger it would appear impossible, but the joy that came to me at that time has come back to me in this mission. It is priceless, and I am trying to duly sense the responsibility. I believe, and I expect as firmly as I know that I am here, that the joy and the pleasure of my contact with those splendid young people with whom I am laboring, will be such that the blessings of God will flow from it and will last throughout my remaining days, as a compensation and a joy that nothing else can give. That I may be the means of accomplishing some more good in the mission field and enjoy the blessing promised in the revelation read by President Grant, is the greatest desire of my heart, in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER CHARLES A. CALLIS

President of the Southern States Mission

The President of the Church, in his address this morning, declared that the missionaries went forth preaching that which they knew to be true. I testify to the truth of this statement. The Lord says in a revelation contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, that the power is in them, referring to the men who should preach his glorious word. When the father of John Wesley was dying, he said to his famous son: "It is the inward witness, 'John, that sustains us in the knowledge of God.'" This Gospel is being preached in the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost. The richest heritage that young people can possess in going into the world is to have the Holy Spirit as their abiding companion.

A young man, living near Salt Lake City, left for a mission in the Southern States a few years ago. Before he left he said to his mother: "If I do not receive a testimony before I have been in the mission one month, I am going to return home." The mother sweetly answered: "My son, you have a testimony. My prayers will ascend unto God that you will be made conscious of that testimony before you have been in the mission field a month." The young man was put to labor in the Georgia conference. Three weeks after he arrived there, he and his companion were chased by a mob of angry men. The elders discarded their mission grips. They found that their coats impeded their flight, and they threw them aside; but when they had outdistanced their pursuers this young man who had told his mother he would return home within a month if he did not receive a testimony of the truth of the Gospel, shook his fist in the direction of the mob and said: "I know this Gospel is true." But it took a mob to make him conscious of his testimony.—"Sweet are the uses of adversity."

A few days ago I received a telegram from a bishop in Zion stating that an elder's mother had died, and he desired that I should break the sad news to the young man. I took the young man to dinner: told him of the hardships, the griefs and the sorrows that had come to many missionaries. When I thought I had him at least partly prepared to hear the sad news, I said: "My son, your mother has passed away." He wept as only missionaries can do, laboring under that great sorrow, and I wept with him. His mother, on her death-bed, had made the request that her son fill his mission. The young missionary said: "Don't be too kind to me. I am afraid I will get homesick. I am going to fulfil my mother's wishes."

Brethren and sisters, did not that woman have the inward witness? Did her faith spring from a gospel that is not of God? The mission of her life, the mission of the Church burned in her heart, and she wanted to be one of God's children fulfilling his glorious purposes in her earth life. One cannot laugh away a statement like that. A court of law will accept a dying statement in proof of the case under consideration. Is Oliver Cowdery's testimony, is David Whitmer's testimony, is Martin Harris' testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon true? We know by the power of the Holy Ghost that those testimonies are true. It is my firm belief that this sainted mother, who upon her death-bed made the request that her son fill his mission—and she is only one of many who have made this request—is an angel of God, and that before she breathed her last she was an angel of God. I don't believe it takes death to transform men and women into angels of our Father. Her spirit went to the God who gave it, a blessed woman, one among the multitude of the mothers of Israel.

I pray God to bless us. Brethren and sisters, if you will have your children baptized when they reach the age of eight years, they will receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, under the hands of the authorized servants of God, to be an eternal abiding companion to them; and though they wander from the path, though they grow indifferent and sometimes tread the wrong path, it is my firm belief—and unshaken testimony, that the prayers of the fathers and mothers in Israel (as did the prayers of Alma's father), will reach their sons and daughters in the hour of their direst need, and this witness of the Holy Ghost will prompt them to return to the faith of their fathers and mothers. I bear testimony that the power of the Holy Ghost attends this Church, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The hymn, "O Ye Mountains High," was sung by the congregation.

The benediction was pronounced by President Henry H. Blood of the North Davis Stake.

The conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The meeting commenced promptly at 2 o'clock p. m.

President Heber J. Grant presided and announced that the congregation would join in singing the hymn, "Do what is Right."

After the singing, the opening prayer was offered by President Joseph M. Holt of the West Jordan Stake.

The congregation sang the hymn, "High on the Mountain Top."

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

My brethren and sisters, I was very much edified at the morning meeting. The instructions given and the testimonies borne were thorough and spirited. It was an extremely enjoyable meeting. I trust that the Spirit of the Lord will be with us this afternoon to inspire what may be said and to give the congregation an understanding concerning matters pertaining to the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

WITNESSES WHO TESTIFY CONCERNING GOD'S WORK

I am quoting now from Second Corinthians, 13th chapter, 1st verse: "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."

We understand very well that in the courts of the land, when cases are brought forward and a verdict is to be rendered, if the matter can be established by two or three witnesses who speak under oath, it is regarded as a very strong case. And so it is in relation to matters pertaining to the Church and Kingdom of God. If those things that are claimed are sustained by two or three or more witnesses it becomes a strong case indeed.

In respect to the things which God puts forth regarding his work, he usually leaves the world without excuse by furnishing an abundance of evidence in the matter of witnesses. That is peculiarly the case in respect to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We have very strong witnesses concerning the great work in which we are engaged, in the standard works of the Church. There is the Holy Bible, King James' translation, one of the standard works of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The truths set forth in the Bible are greatly reinforced and strengthened by the testimony of the Book of Mormon, of which we have heard at this conference. Much information was given to us in the discourse delivered by President Ivins respecting the Book of Mormon. And then we have the further witness of the truth in our Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and still again in the Pearl of Great Price. These four records constitute the standard works of the Church.

THE BIBLE AS A WITNESS

We know very well the value of the Bible which has come down to us through the ages, and which is widely distributed throughout the world today. In nearly every room of the standard hotels of the country, in the large cities, there is a Bible for the consultation and study of the guests of the hotel. We find the Bible in the homes of hundreds and thousands of people. It is a wonderful record. It is a religious history of the people of God upon the eastern continent. It is the history of the children of Israel, who it seems have not been held in the highest repute by many Christian people during the last eighteen hundred years; and yet the world is indebted to the Jews, or the children of Israel, for this precious record. In this record they are called the people of God. Therein you will find an account of the holy prophets of old, how that they spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and made many precious predictions.

In the Bible you will also find rather a full account of the life and works of the Savior and his Apostles, and there you read of the great atonement that was wrought out for the children of men. We do not always stop to consider that the Christ came to earth through the lineage of the children of Israel, but so it was. His Apostles were of that lineage, and in fact we believe as Latter-day Saints that we are of the same lineage. We realize as a Church that we are greatly indebted to the Jewish race for much information respecting the plan of redemption. We ought not to forget that. It appears to me that we should be kept in remembrance of it, and that we ought to feel an interest, and probably we do, in the Jewish people, because we believe that the time is not far distant when they will accept the Gospel, will acknowledge the divine birth of the Savior, and consequently will not be looking for another Messiah. This has been predicted by the prophets of old.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

Now, as to the Book of Mormon, the second witness mentioned. It is a wonderful book and it has come to us in a most remarkable way. The story reads almost like a romance and yet we know and testify that it is absolutely true. The Book of Mormon is a history of the ancient inhabitants of America, of whom the Lamanites, or the American Indians, are descendants. They have dwindled in unbelief and in many respects have become degraded. They have fallen from the high place they once occupied in the civilization of ancient America.

The title page of the Book of Mormon gives some idea of the character of the Book. It follows:

"The Book of Mormon, an account written by the hand of Mormon upon Plates taken from the Plates of Nephi.

"Wherefore, it is an abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites—Written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the house of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile—Written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of prophecy and of revelation—Written and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed—To come forth by the gift and power of God unto the interpretation thereof—Sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by way of the Gentile—The interpretation thereof by the gift of God.

"An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether also, which is a record of the people of Jared, who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven—Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever—And also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations—And now, if there are faults they are the mistakes of men; wherefore, condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment-seat of Christ."

The history of the people of Nephi began about six hundred years before Christ and ended four hundred and twenty years after Christ, covering a period of about one thousand years. It is a remarkable history and was hidden up by commandment of God, hidden in the earth to come forth at a later time. It has come forth. An angel came down from on high and appeared to a young man by the name of Joseph Smith and delivered to him this record which was taken out of the earth.

ANCIENT PREDICTIONS FULFILLED

The circumstance is referred to in the Bible, strange as it may seem. The Prophet Isaiah speaks of the matter and he alludes to it in an interesting way. If you will consult the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah you will find words to this effect:

"Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, the city where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices.

"Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel.

"And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

"And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust."

Now that is remarkable language, the speaking of something that shall come out of the ground, a voice, a message from the dead. It fits exactly the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, although the prophecy was uttered centuries before the book was revealed to the world.

The Lord speaks of the condition of the world at the time the book was destined to come forth. He says:

"Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

"Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

So Isaiah predicts that by reason of these whisperings that come out of the ground, the Lord will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder in that day. Well, fortunately, the Latter-day Saints by the will of God have come into possession of this wonderful record, the Book of Mormon, and there is much evidence that goes with the record to show that it is a true work of God, and was translated by his marvelous power. There were four witnesses who saw the angel and who handled the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated by divine power, and there were eight witnesses who did not see the angel, but they did see the plates and handled them and testified of the matter in a most solemn way. The testimonies of the eleven witnesses are published in the fore part of the Book.

So far as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is concerned we have more real testimonies of the truth of the Book of Mormon than we have of the Bible, yet we accept the Bible as the word of God and we believe in it.

THE THIRD WITNESS

The third witness, which is known as the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, contains numerous revelations of God given to his people through Joseph Smith the Prophet, for truly he was a prophet of God, and these revelations bear the stamp of divine approval upon them. There is a spirit and a power that go with this book that is very impressive indeed, and to many people very convincing. It is a testimony to the world that the Latter-day Saints do believe in the principle of revelation and that we cannot very well see how the Church of God can be established upon the earth and how his purposes can be accomplished unless he speaks to his people. It is his Church. It is called by his name, called the Church of Jesus Christ, and it would seem highly important that he being the President of the Church should speak to his people, otherwise they would be left without proper direction. We must look to him for wisdom and understanding and inspiration. I testify to the world that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants throws very much light indeed upon the plan of salvation.

THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE

The Pearl of Great Price, the fourth witness, like the other three sacred witnesses corresponds with them exactly in its teachings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

There is no variation except that it gives one a little fuller and clearer understanding of those teachings. The title page and contents read as follows: "The Pearl of Great Price, A Selection From the Revelations, Translations, and Narrations of Joseph Smith, First Prophet, Seer and Revelator to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints."

Contents: The Book of Moses—8 chapters. The Book of Abraham—5 chapters. Writings of Joseph Smith. The Articles of Faith.

WITNESSES WHOSE TESTIMONIES AGREE

I state without hesitation that these four testimonies agree perfectly in respect to the Gospel of Jesus Christ and the plan of redemption which he instituted for the salvation of men. There is a difference of course in the history of the people who were responsible for these wonderful records, but no difference whatever in the plan of salvation therein set forth. For instance, the Holy Bible teaches with clearness, we think, that the first principles of the Gospel are faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost. These constitute the fundamental principles of the Gospel.

The Book of Mormon certifies to the fact and agrees perfectly with the Bible in this matter, as do the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. The organization of the Church as instituted by the Savior himself and which was composed in the main of apostles, prophets, evangelists, high priests, seventies, elders, bishops, priests, teachers and deacons, which constituted the Melchizedek priesthood and the Aaronic priesthood, is emphasized. This organization is strongly emphasized in the Bible as it is in the Book of Mormon, and as it is set forth also in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price.

So we have these four witnesses that agree perfectly in respect to this matter, and, so far as we know, and so far as our history has gone and our experience, the testimony of the Three Witnesses as well as that of the Eight Witnesses has not been overthrown. The world will be judged by the evidence set forth in these precious records.

INDIVIDUAL TESTIMONY

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, and rejoice in the knowledge, that I do know that this is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that Christ was the Savior of the world, that he suffered by atonement for the sins of the world, and that we must look to him, and as Latter-day Saints we do look to him, for salvation through our good works and by our faith.

I testify to you that I do know, as I know that I am standing here and speaking, that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God, that he accomplished a mighty work, that he is better known and better understood by his people today than he was in the days when he lived upon the earth. I think we know him better than most anyone else, and we are just as close to him as any people ever were when he lived upon the earth. This is the Church and Kingdom of God seen by Daniel of old that was to be set up and should never be thrown down or given to other people, but must go on until the will of the Lord is accomplished and the world is saved by repentance and by faith. This is my testimony and I humbly bear it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am very grateful to our Heavenly Father for membership in his Church. I am thankful for the privilege I have had of attending the sessions of this conference thus far, and for the inspiration that has been felt as a result of the instruction we have received.

I fully sense the responsibility that attaches to one who occupies this position, and desire that the Lord will bless me, that I may be directed to say such things as will be profitable to us here upon this occasion.

PERILOUS TIMES

We are living in perilous times. The scriptures are being fulfilled, and as it appears to me this is the particular time when, if it were possible, the very elect would be deceived. It is remarkable how easy it is for those who desire to advance their financial interests in the world to find a reason for setting aside the plain teachings of the Lord with reference to our lives. And it is strange to me how many people fall into the habit of listening to those who say things that are contrary to the revealed will of our Heavenly Father.

This is a great institution with many organizations that are calculated to bless and benefit mankind. I fear that as members of the Church we depend too much upon the auxiliary organizations, and upon the advice and counsel of those outside our own households. We have already heard of many of the blessings that the Lord has given to us in the sacred records that have been kept until our day, and that contain the advice and counsel of an all-wise Father. It seems strange that so many of our people, with the opportunities offered, lack familiarity with the contents of these sacred records.

CONSERVATION ADVISED

We live in a rapid age; there is new development constantly. The Lord has warned us that there are certain requirements that are made of us, and that if we fail to take advantage of his advice and counsel, these other things that seem so important will be but a source of sorrow and regret to us. This people have been advised to conserve their energies and their means. We have been taught by those whom the Lord has raised up to instruct us that we should live within our income, that we should not follow the fashions of the world and expend as rapidly and even more rapidly than we can earn the money that comes into our hands, to take care of ourselves and our families.

I fear that the Latter-day Saints, in many cases, are blinded by their own vanity, by their desire to be what the world is; and we have been told in such plain language by our Heavenly Father that we cannot live as the world lives and enjoy his Spirit.

CONSISTENCY IN OUR LIVES

We read in the Old Testament scripture and in the New Testament, we read in the Book of Mormon and in the Doctrine and Covenants, the advice and counsel of our Heavenly Father through his servants that direct us to be consistent in our lives, not to be selfish, not to desire those things that belong to somebody else, to take care of our bodies, to have our houses in order, to exemplify in our lives those virtues that will enrich us here and prepare us for eternal life in the Celestial kingdom. And if any of us fail it will not be because we have not been well taught.

THE THINGS OF THE WORLD

As I go out through the country and see the improvements that are made, as I look at the fine conveyances that our people are using, I observe the tendency to follow after the world in so many ways. I fear that if we are not careful we will be tempted beyond our power to resist and we will lose the gifts the Lord desires to bestow upon us. In his wisdom he has warned us that some things commonly used by the world are not good for us.

EVILS THAT AFFLICT MANKIND

For instance, we read in Section eighty-nine of the Doctrine and Covenants that in our day certain evils and designs would exist in the hearts of conspiring men; and as I see the increase in the use of tobacco among the people of the world, and realize its baneful effects upon the human family, I am concerned for our youth. If as members of the Church we fail to listen to the advice and counsel of our Heavenly Father we will not gain but we will lose our blessings. If as the head of a household I fail to influence the lives of my family to avoid the evils that afflict mankind; if by reason of my own carelessness or my indifference I fail to inspire in my children faith in God, surely I must know that sooner or later I may repent in sorrow.

The harmful use of stimulants and narcotics among the Latter-day Saints ought not to prevail. These habits should not be customary with us as they are in the world, for we have been better taught.

We ought not to be among those who violate the Sabbath day, because the Lord has told us plainly what we should do in order to properly honor his holy day.

We ought not to be among those who neglect their prayers and fail to seek the Lord for his advice and counsel, for he has told us that if we will come to him he will hear us and bless us; and if we in our families neglect our prayers the loss will be ours.

DIVINE INSTRUCTION

I do not feel like criticising people in the world, because of conduct that is prejudicial to good health and good morals, as much as I feel like criticising the members of this Church when we fail. We have been divinely instructed. Not only do we have the advice that has been given to the world through the Old and New Testament, but that has been supplemented in our day by teachings contained in other sacred records and by the inspired counsels of men that we have sustained as prophets, seers and revelators. With these things confronting us surely the members of this Church should ever be on the alert, we should think seriously of our privileges and our opportunities, and we should not be willing to do what others do because it is popular.

DUTIES OF PARENTS

It is the duty of fathers and mothers to call their families together and instruct them. It is our duty to bow before the Lord in prayer in our homes. It is our duty to ask the blessing upon the food that we partake of and to thank Him who gives us all these things. It is our duty to be honest with our neighbor, not incur obligations thoughtlessly that we may not be able to meet. We should teach our children that honesty even in minor things is important if they are to obtain a place in the Celestial kingdom.

We should stress the necessity of morality among the rising generation. It is not safe for us to leave to our public schools and to other institutions outside of our homes the training of our boys and girls with reference to a proper conduct in life. If we do not teach them the sacredness of these bodies of ours, if we do not inspire in them a desire to build character that is beyond reproach, if we fail to impress upon them the danger that confronts them in their contact with the evils that afflict mankind, we will not be justified by saying that we did not realize how serious it was. God has warned us that we should teach our children to pray and to walk uprightly before him. He has given our schoolmasters after his own heart who have been instructing us from year to year in the things that we should do. If our children grow up in idleness we know that that is displeasing to the Lord. If those of our households neglect to hold in reverence the things of God, we must know that sooner or later sorrow will come into their lives; and if it comes into the lives of our children then we, too, must join them in sorrow and remorse.

INTEGRITY AND INDUSTRY IMPORTANT

I feel very much concerned, when I think of the temptations that are everywhere present. The very fact that so much wealth has been made available to many people gives the youth in some instances the feeling that because their parents are well-to-do, honest toil is not necessary or desirable; and yet I am satisfied that no people have ever lived upon the earth who have failed to earn their livelihood by integrity and industry, but have gone to decay.

I wish there were some way of inculcating into the minds of our boys and girls a greater feeling of appreciation for the advice and counsel of our Heavenly Father, and a desire to benefit by it.

HARMFUL LITERATURE

When we think of the large amount of information that is disseminated in our magazines and books, easily accessible to our boys and girls, much of which is harmful to those who read it, how important it is for us who have had years of experience to safeguard and direct them by pointing out the dangers that confront them if they accept as desirable the vagaries and philosophies of men and women who do not believe in God.

THE SAFE COURSE

I am thinking of the time when ancient Israel went astray. They worshiped false gods. They listened to that which was popular, but false, and then destruction overtook them. We are in just as much danger, my brethren and sisters, as any people who have ever lived upon the earth, unless we listen to our Heavenly Father. His is the only voice, and the teachings of those whom he directs are the only teachings that we are safe in following. We know that the adversary is alert. If he can betray the rising generation, if he can lay pitfalls for their feet and ensnare them in evil his desire has been realized and their downfall is accomplished.

TEACHING IN THE HOME

It is important that in our home and by our own firesides we take more pains to teach our sons and our daughters those truths which the Lord has made plain to us are necessary for eternal salvation. What a wonderful privilege it is to live in an age such as this! No such opportunities were ever afforded the human family before. But with these opportunities and blessings there also comes temptation. It is everywhere present. We must not take too much for granted, but be alert. We must feel the importance of our duty as fathers and mothers and safeguard the future happiness of our youth.

I am grateful for the great Primary organization in this Church, for the Sabbath Schools, and the Mutual Improvement Associations. I am grateful for the Relief Society, and for our great Church school system. All of these things are making a contribution for the salvation of mankind. I am mindful of the advantage of missionary experiences that come to so many of our young men and women. All these things are calculated to draw us nearer to our Heavenly Father. But I feel like calling to the attention of the fathers and mothers of Israel today the fact that all these splendid helps are not sufficient. It is your duty and mine to see to it that in our own homes and at our own firesides the important lessons of life are taught to these children, not leaving them to the kindness of our brethren and sisters—and there is great kindness manifested by them. We must not depend upon them entirely. It is our duty—I should say it is our privilege as well as our duty to take sufficient time to surround our children with safeguards and to so love them and earn their love that they will be glad to listen to our advice and counsel. But if as a man holding the priesthood of the living God I so far forget myself as to violate the Sabbath day, can I say to my son that he shall not do that? If I violate the Word of Wisdom by using tea and coffee in my home, what influence have I with my boy or my girl when I say to them, you shall not use tobacco? These difficulties that afflict us do not come all at once. They are insidious and they creep into our midst a little at a time, until after a while they become dominant in our thinking.

EVILS AND DESIGNS IN HEARTS OF CONSPIRING MEN

When I realize the harmfulness of the cigarette, and how great the effort that is being made to make its use universal by every means of advertising, I realize what our Father meant when he warned us to be on our guard.

Permit me to read what the Lord has said with reference to this matter. This revelation was given February 27th, 1833:

"Behold, verily, thus saith the Lord unto you: In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation.—"

In that very chapter the Lord mentions the use of strong drinks. He tells us of the baneful influence of tobacco. He warns us against the very things that today are being championed by men who stand in high places, as being desirable to the children of men. Are we as a people to listen to these men who are misled by the adversary? Or shall we take for granted that what they say is true, when in the face of it, the Creator of the heavens and the earth, he who loves us and desires our salvation, has plainly told us that these things are not good for us?

JOY AND BLESSINGS THROUGH RIGHTEOUS LIVES

I hope and pray that as members of the Church we will be more diligent in the future than we have been in the past; that we will be more earnest than we have ever been in safe-guarding the youth against all manner of evil. If any of us in the past have ignored the kind and loving advice of our Heavenly Father with reference to these things that so many think are not important, let us repent of our sins, and ask forgiveness for our weakness. Then let us turn to him and obey his wise counsels; thereby enriching our lives and earning the right to the companionship of his Holy Spirit. We will then radiate an influence in the world for the blessing of all those with whom we come in contact.

I pray that the Lord will bless you good men and women who preside in the various departments of this great Church, you who give so much of your time for the blessing of mankind, that your physical and spiritual strength may be renewed unto you; that the joy that was expressed by one of our faithful brethren this morning when he referred to his mission experience, may fill your souls; and that we may all feel the sacred nearness of our Heavenly Father by reason of our righteous lives.

OUR FATHER'S WORK

This is our Father's work. He gave it to the world for the salvation of the human family. He has counseled and advised us in loving tenderness, and now let us be wise, let us be consistent. Let us put our own houses in order; and then by the power that will come to us as a result of our faithfulness and devotion, let us carry the message of life and salvation unto the children of men with greater power, with greater strength, with greater determination than we have ever done before, to the honor and glory of God and the blessing of his children, to our own salvation and the salvation of those we love, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A sacred solo, "Nature's Adoration," was sung by Charles O. Peterson.

ELDER NOAH S. POND

President of the Northern States Mission

My brethren and sisters, this is a blessed privilege and I am very happy to have this opportunity of briefly reporting the Northern States mission of the Church.

It is a pleasure indeed to advise you that there is not a single case of sickness or illness among the brethren and sisters laboring in that mission. During the past six months the flu and kindred diseases and complications have raged almost rampant. These diseases have claimed their victims by the hundreds, and deaths have ensued in many cases. Our missionaries have not wholly escaped these illnesses, but through the providences of our kind Heavenly Father, through administration and faith, we have had no serious results; and each one, so far as I am advised, is in the enjoyment of full and perfect health and strength.

We have had some wonderful manifestations of the power of God's priesthood. One of our aged brethren, a short-term missionary, who was not able to endure the rigors of the hard winter, was attacked by flu and double pneumonia. We got him placed comfortably in a hospital under good doctor's and nurses' care in the city of Milwaukee. The first and second days his condition was reported very favorable. On a Wednesday noon the mission office received a telephone message from the doctor in charge, advising me to come to Milwaukee at once, that this brother could not live the day out; and he advised me to communicate with his family and let them know how serious his condition was, or they would receive the word of his death before they knew of his illness. A son of this good brother was also a short-term missionary in one of our other states, and I communicated immediately with him, asking that he advise his folks at home in Idaho, and then hasten himself to his father's bedside, to which place I also would speed.

When we came there in the afternoon the old gentleman could scarcely breathe, but his unbounded faith, united with the faith of his associates, prevailed. He was administered to two or three times in the afternoon and evening. We stayed with him until a late hour at night, and at midnight his son arrived. When the doctor came in the morning he could scarcely credit the improvement in the old gentleman's condition; and after he had given a thorough diagnosis of the case, examined him thoroughly and prescribed what he thought was necessary to be done and was ready to go, I told the doctor I would like to talk with him.

We went out into another room and in a fifteen or twenty minute interview I told him who we were, why we were, and our purposes as missionaries in the nations of the earth. I told him how our elders and our sisters traveled among the nations of the earth preaching the Gospel, and I asked him if we could depend upon him giving our brother his best services. He was very much impressed, and he assured me that he would not only give the best possible attention, but that he would be considerate in presenting the bill for his services, and that in the future whenever we had occasion to trust to his care any of our elders or missionaries that we might be certain they would be given the best of service.

It was a pleasure to deliver this kind of message to Dr. Gambling, one of the leading physicians and practitioners in the city of Milwaukee and in one of its fine hospitals. I also had the opportunity of delivering the same message to the superintendent of the hospital.

This brother who the doctor said could not live the day out continued to regain his strength until a period of two weeks time had elapsed, when we met him as he was transferring from one train to another in the city of Chicago, homeward bound. Through the grace and providence of our Heavenly Father his life was spared.

A very fine Latter-day Saint doctor, a former missionary in the Northern States, later a student and graduate, and now a practitioner of medicine and surgery in one of our great cities, recently married. He came to our office one afternoon and asked me if we would give his wife a mother's blessing preceding her confinement, and we were very pleased to assure him that we would do that. A few days afterwards he called me, very much alarmed and concerned, and said that very untoward evidences were manifest in the condition of his wife—high blood pressure, temperature, body filling with dropsy and a number of things that presaged a terrible condition. He asked if we could give his wife that mother's blessing that day. In the evening Sister Pond accompanied me to his home, which was five or six miles distant from the office. He told us of the terrible condition his wife was in. He had had experience, and he said he had seen a number of his own household die under confinement cases such as was imminent with his wife, and that he and another very eminent doctor did not propose to take any chances with regard to the life of his wife, that that night they were going to perform a Caesarian operation and take the baby dead or alive, but save the life of his wife. When we gave her a blessing we promised her that her delivery should be natural and normal and that she would have the blessing and privilege of nursing her baby. He drove us to our home, and when he returned matters were moving rapidly. Labor had set in and he hurriedly secured the ambulance and took his wife to the hospital. Arriving there he was very much perturbed about not locating the other doctor. He could not get him on the telephone; so he took his car and rushed to his home and office in an endeavor to secure him. An hour and a half or two hours intervened, and when he came back after a futile search for the other doctor, his wife had been delivered of a beautiful baby and everything was natural and normal. The dropsy, the high blood pressure, and the other untoward evidences had disappeared. The baby was premature and was placed in an incubator. It is thriving beautifully.

This is a typical case. Our missionaries have had wonderful experiences. One of our short-term brethren visited and was kindly received by the governor of one of our great States, who invited him to come to the Capitol and later to visit his home. A few weeks ago one of our sister missionaries was kindly received and invited into a home, and when she was properly seated the lady of the home said:

"My husband is a grandson of Colonel Geddes, who as a member of the State militia drove the Mormon people out of Illinois. We have heard all about the anti-Mormon side of this history. I am so happy to meet you this afternoon. I want you to take off your things, sit down in my house, and tell me the truth from the Mormon standpoint."

This sister later had the opportunity of meeting this woman's husband, and they are now interested prospective investigators of the truth of the restored Gospel, and this divine Church.

I am pleased, my brethren and sisters, to know that our kind Heavenly Father never drew a geographical line of distinction with reference to his children. On the contrary, the scripture and the Gospel teach us that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."

Paul taught the Athenians and the Romans that there was no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same God was Father over all, and would give his blessings to all those who would obey him and seek him. Paul continued by saying:

"How then shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

"And how shall they preach except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!"

Paul further declared, as did also Isaiah, that not all the world would receive the Gospel, but that it should be preached to them and they should have an opportunity of hearing it. As I observed, I am happy to know that our Father never drew a geographic line; he has never expressed love for one of his children simply because he was born in Great Britain, and hated one because he was born in Germany; or loved one because he was born in the United States, and disliked one because he was born in Australia. But wherever our Father's children have obeyed him and sought him he has recognized them and given them the blessings of the Gospel.

I can testify to you that this Gospel is being preached to the nations of the earth in advance of the coming of our Lord and Savior. I have seen the fulfilment of that passage of scripture which says that he would take them one of a city and two of a family, and give them pastors after his own mind. In my youth I used to think that was wrong, or a misinterpretation of the scriptures, but I have seen it manifest where one single individual in a city or town or hamlet, and where two of a family, have accepted the Gospel. We glide from one State into another, as from Utah to Idaho, from Iowa to Illinois, from Illinois to Indiana, from Michigan and Wisconsin in the United States into Canada. Men and nations make the geographic line of distinction by an ocean, a sea, a river, a lake, a mountain range. But our Father draws no line of geography in the salvation of his children.

I am happy to report the excellent work of your sons and daughters, your brothers and sisters, elders and lady missionaries of the Northern States. I humbly pray for our Father's choicest blessings upon his servants, the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and all the presiding quorums of the priesthood, you my brethren and sisters in the wards and stakes of Zion. You fathers and mothers, we are solicitous of co-operation with you in the fine working operations of your sons and daughters as missionaries.

I pray for our Father's blessings upon all his children in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILES L. JONES

President of the East Central States Mission

My dear brethren and sisters, I certainly feel my weakness in standing before you this afternoon.

It has been only about two and one-half months since the East Central States mission was organized, and it has meant a great deal of hard work to get the organization completed and to get things in running order. But I am very pleased to state that with the wonderful help we have received from Elder Stephen L. Richards, President Charles A. Callis, President Henry H. Rolapp, and others, we have been able to gather the necessary information from time to time, so that we have been able to organize the mission so that it is now in a very good condition.

It took considerable time to decide just where to locate, and then to obtain headquarters. The East Central States mission comprises the following states which were taken from the Southern States mission: Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and North Carolina. It also includes the state of West Virginia, which formerly belonged to the Eastern States mission. Our headquarters are located in Louisville, Kentucky.

Your sons and your daughters who are laboring in that mission are all interested in their work. They are united and working together for the advancement of the cause in all parts of the mission. I am very pleased to report that at the present time we haven't an elder or lady missionary that is sick or afflicted in any way; they are all able to take care of their work and go about their duties, for which we are very thankful. During the past winter there have been many cases of influenza among our laboring force, as well as among the Saints; there has also been an epidemic of small-pox and one of diphtheria in that part of the world. But we have had very few fatalities among our people, for which we are very thankful. Today they are practically all enjoying health and strength and are enjoying their labors.

We have been blessed with a number of short-term missionaries—men of mature years, those who have had experience in the bishopric, in the stake presidency, as high councilors, and in other capacities—who have come into our midst; and they have been able to help the younger elders and lady missionaries. They have been able to lead into the waters of baptism people whom the younger missionaries have not been able to persuade to go that far.

Two weeks ago last Sunday we held a conference at New Martinsville, West Virginia. We had three very good meetings, well attended. A few days following that conference eleven honest souls entered the waters of baptism.

A week ago last Sunday we held a conference at Madisonville, Kentucky, in a part of the country that heretofore has been somewhat hostile, so to speak, to our people. The authorities of that city gave us the use of the court house, free of charge, and we had an attendance of 148 at the afternoon session, without counting the children. Of that number I should say that about one-third were representative citizens of that community who did not belong to the Church; and with but one exception they seemed to be well satisfied with that which they heard. During the course of my remarks that afternoon I referred to the love that the Lord has for his children, that instead of there being just a single dividing line so that certain ones would go either to eternal damnation and others to eternal exaltation and glory, every man, woman, and child would be judged according to his works here upon the earth, and would receive a reward such as they might merit. One gentleman took exception to that remark. He said, "According to your version no one goes to hell, or there is no hell." I told him that we were not preaching hell-fire and damnation, but that we were preaching salvation for the human family. After talking a few minutes I think I fairly well satisfied the gentleman that the views which the Latter-day Saints give to the world are logical and in accordance with the doctrines which the Lord has set forth here upon the earth.

Not long ago a professor in one of the schools in one of the states of our mission brought up the question as to the belief of the Mormon people. At the close of his remarks a little girl in the class, who, by the way, is a member of the Church, raised her hand and wanted to correct him as to a certain statement that he had made; and she did correct his statement. He turned to her and said, "I would like to see you a few minutes after the close of the school." The young lady remained after school, and they conversed for some time in regard to Mormon teachings. Finally he said, "I have come to the conclusion that if I am going to learn anything about the Mormons I must go to a Morimon." He wanted some literature, and literature pertaining to the Gospel has been furnished him from time to time. Since my coming here, just a day or two ago, I received a letter from this gentleman in which he asked that some one be sent to his school to attend certain exercises that are to be held within the next week or ten days, and there present the views and teachings of our people to his class and also to another class or two that want to unite with his. I lost no time in answering that letter and directing the president of the district in which that school is located to go personally or to see that some elder is sent there to fill that appointment, and set forth to those students the things that the Latter-day Saints believe and teach.

I find that in our meetings in various places many people will talk with us and listen to that which we have to say. While it is a time when there is a great deal of indifference in the world, yet the seed is being planted from time to time, and some day it will spring forth and bear fruit. As was said by Paul, "God giveth the increase." So it is in the world today. I find in my conversations with people that when I ask them if they are satisfied within themselves with that which they have, almost without exception they say that they are not, that there is something lacking. They have the desire to worship God in some way, or in some form, but there is something lacking within their souls, and that is the message that we have for them.

Some of you who are corresponding with your sons and daughters from time to time, can, in your letters, to them, give them a word or two that will mean a great deal to them. I recall now a letter that was shown to me by one of the young ladies just before Christmas time, that she received from her mother in Downey, Idaho. I hope that mother is in the congregation today. In the letter she said, calling her daughter by name, "We would be glad if you could be with us during the Christmas festivities, but we would rather that you be where you are," expressing just what the mother felt. While she would have liked to have her daughter with her, yet she would rather that she be in the nations of the earth performing the work she was called to do, and carrying the message of salvation to those who sit in darkness.

I rejoice in the knowledge that I have of this work. I know as I know that I live that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world, and that Joseph Smith was the humble instrument in the hands of the Almighty of again establishing his work here upon the earth; and that work will go forth until eventually it covers the entire earth.

I pray that God will bless us all, that we may have the spirit of our work from time to time, and be able to magnify our callings in a way that will be pleasing in his sight, so that when we come to the end of mortal life we may receive the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." May this be our happy lot, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN G. ALLRED

President of the North Central States Mission

The missionaries of the Church are perhaps putting forth more effort today than ever before in our history in the distribution of the Book of Mormon, about which so much has been said during this conference. Not long ago we received through the mail a little booklet written by a reverend gentleman who had acted as a missionary in this state. He said that on every page of the Book of Mormon was written "Fraud, Fraud, Fraud." He said Joseph Smith was so unlearned and ignorant that he misspelled the same word three times on one page. I thought as I read that tract: You should not only put Fraud upon every page of the Book of Mormon, but you should turn back into the Old Testament itself and write Fraud upon its pages; for Isaiah, as has been quoted here today, in declaring prophetically, six hundred years before Christ, the person who was to produce this book, said that that person would say he could not translate it because he was not learned. Our friend would have the Prophet Joseph Smith deny that prophetic statement which was uttered concerning him hundreds of years before his birth.

He said, "No matter how the Mormons dress this work up, you can always see the cloven foot sticking out." I thought: I wish I could talk with that man a little while and open the pages of this book, and read some things to him. And these words came to my mind: There is a passage in this book that says, speaking of the American continent, that it is a choice land, choice above all other lands. Whether that statement was made by that young Nephite prophet before he had ever seen this continent, while en route from the old world, or whether it was made by Joseph Smith when he published this book in 1830, it has been fulfilled. It has a prophetic fulfilment even in our day, for this nation of ours has really come to be a great nation; it is today a land choice above all other lands. When this book was published to the world in 1830, there were a few scant miles of railroad on the American continent. Today, after an hundred years, what do we find? Fifty per cent of the mileage of railroads of the world is in the United States. Seventy-five per cent of the telephone and telegraph lines of the world are in the United States. Ninety per cent of the automobiles of the world are in the United States. Would Joseph Smith have dared to say in 1830, when he published this record, that these conditions would prevail, when so much depended upon their fulfilment so far as his future was concerned?

Again, twenty-nine years after this book was published the first oil well in the United States was driven in Pennsylvania. Today we have over three hundred thousand oil producing wells in the United States. During the year 1927 we produced 109,000,000 barrels of oil—sixty-six per cent of all the oil of the world. Did Joseph Smith know in 1830 that we would be producing sixty-six per cent of the oil of the world? Or did Nephi know it when he said, away back before he landed here, that this would be the condition? Surely this is a great and mighty nation.

This book further says:

“And I will fortify this land against all other nations.

“And he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God.”

Let the nations of the world beware, for that nation that fights against Zion shall perish.

We are a great nation in many ways. Politically we are a great nation. President Hoover, in his speech in New Jersey last September, said: “The great American ideal is the equal opportunity of its citizens.” Nowhere else under the shining sun today is there opportunity equal to that which has been guaranteed and worked out for this nation. We recently voted for two men for the highest honor within the gift of the American people—one of them an orphaned newsboy, the other one an orphaned blacksmith’s son—and one of them is today seated in the United States presidential chair. He said in his inaugural speech: “If I am to succeed as the President of the United States, I must do it under the authority and power of God.”

“There shall be no kings upon this land,” says this book. Who would have dared to say that in 1830, when the Book of Mormon was published? Who knew that the nations of the old world would not overrun this nation and set up a kingdom? People may say that “we can dress up that book but the cloven foot sticks out,” but I am prepared to say, from the depth of my soul that you may picture all the cloven feet you want to but the points of eternal truth will stick out; and the youth of this people will discover, with their brethren and sisters who have gone forth and preached the Gospel, that this work is the work of God.

I bear witness today that the Lord knew what he was speaking about when he said that the words of this book should be carried to the learned, and they would say: I cannot translate it for it is sealed; and it would be carried back to the unlearned who would say: I cannot, for I am not learned. And then God would say: “Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me. * * * Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.”

I leave my witness with you, and wish that I could leave it with the world, that God our Father has restored to the earth the fulness of the Gospel of Jesus, in this sacred record; for it says on the fly-leaf that it has been brought forth for the convincing of the Jew and the Gentile that Jesus is the Christ. I testify to you today that the Book of Mormon is bearing witness in the hearts of the children of men as faithfully today as the record of the Jews has done in the past, that Jesus is the Christ; and I leave this witness with you in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The congregation sang "Now let us Rejoice in the day of Salvation," and after the closing prayer by President James R. Ware of the South Sevier Stake, the Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday, April 6th.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

President Heber J. Grant presided at the third session of the conference, which began at 10 o'clock a. m., Saturday, April 6, 1929.

The congregation sang the hymn, "How Firm a Foundation."

The invocation was offered by President T. Clark Callister of the Millard Stake.

The congregation sang "Redeemer of Israel."

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

Speaking of the Book of Mormon, concerning which we heard very valuable instructions yesterday, I venture to emphasize the thought that we apply very diligently in our lives the principles and precepts set forth in that volume of scripture. The Book of Mormon is more than a book in the ordinary sense. It is the best of all the literature written in this Church for missionary work. For many years I have urged, as have my brethren likewise, that our missionaries strive to get the Book of Mormon into the hands of the people, both members and non-members of the Church. I am happy in the realization that while a few years ago we sold copies of the Book of Mormon in lots of tens and scores, sending them out to the missions, we now send them by thousands. The statistics regarding the sale and distribution of that work, particularly as reported by the mission presidents, furnish a testimony beyond all question of the pouring out of the Spirit of the Lord upon the people of the world.

AS TO BOOK OF MORMON LANDS

I sometimes think we pay a little undue attention to technicalities, and to questions that cannot be fully answered with respect to the Book of Mormon. It matters not to me just where this city or that camp was located. I have met a few of our Book of Mormon students who claim to be able to put a finger upon the map and indicate every land and city mentioned in the Book of Mormon. The fact is, the Book of Mormon does not give us precise and definite information whereby we can locate those places with certainty. I encourage and recommend all possible investigation, comparison and research in this matter. The more thinkers, investigators, workers we have in the field the better; but our brethren who devote themselves to that kind of research should remember that they must speak with caution and not declare as demonstrated truths points that are not really proved. There is enough truth in the Book of Mormon to occupy you and me for the rest of our lives, without our giving too much time and attention to these debatable matters.

HOW TO KNOW FOR ONE'S SELF

I speak specifically of the testimony that has come to the Latter-day Saints, and that will come to any members of the Church or other earnest investigator who will read the book rightly—as to its genuineness. The divinely-inspired promise written by Moroni has found literal fulfilment in scores of thousands of cases. I refer to his last word respecting the record which he was about to hide up unto the Lord. It is recorded in the tenth chapter of Moroni: “And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.” Then he very pertinently adds: “And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things.”

Many of us have received that testimony; but of those who have so received there are some who do not stand by it as they should. I think it well that we speak plainly to one another at times. There are those who forget what the Lord has said through the Book of Mormon, and who are led away into the jungle of error, much of which belongs to the marshy and uncertain ground preempted in the name of higher criticism. Permit me to give you an example; one may suffice.

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH AND THE BOOK OF MORMON

It has been declared and proclaimed by a certain school of Bible students, commentators and scholars, that the Book of Isaiah was written not entirely by Isaiah the Prophet, the son of Amoz—in many respects the greatest of the prophets of that age—but that the book is the work of at least two men, and perhaps of many, part of it written by Isaiah himself, and the other part by another man, without local habitation or name, who lived somewhere, near the end of the period of the Babylonian captivity or exile, fully a century after the death of Isaiah the Prophet. That idea concerning the duality of the Book of Isaiah has been exploited, and there are learned readers of the Bible, who, with superior air, point out certain chapters of the Book of Isaiah which they say were not written by Isaiah the Prophet, but by this “deutero” or second Isaiah. So he is called in view of even the scholars’ ignorance as to his true name or place of abode. The claim is made that the chapters of Isaiah from the second to the thirty-ninth inclusive, were really written by Isaiah, and that thence on to the end of the sixty-sixth chapter, the last in the book, the subject-matter is not the writing of Isaiah at all, but that of another man, who falsely ascribed the authorship to the Prophet.

Such is the speculation concerning the duality of authorship in that book; but, once started, these learned investigators have undertaken to dissect Isaiah and to spread before the gaze of the people both his gross and minute anatomy, to the extent of denying his authorship of other parts of chapters, and of certain verses, singling them out from the rest, and they have left to the credit of the Prophet Isaiah only twenty-four and a half chapters of his book.

BOOK OF ISAIAH COMPLETE BEFORE 600 B. C.

I well remember when the positive and emphatic denial of the unity of the Book of Isaiah was put forth by the German school of theologians. So too I remember the many questions that arose among our people regarding it, not a few of such questions coming to me personally. To some of the inquirers I said: "Why trouble yourselves about the matter? I know that the claim is false." "Well, have you looked into it?" I was asked. "Sufficiently so," I replied, "for I have received the testimony promised by the Lord through the Prophet Moroni concerning the integrity and genuineness of the Book of Mormon."

In the Second Book of Nephi, I find transcriptions of several chapters of Isaiah, that is to say, chapters as the material is now divided and designated in our Bible—twelve chapters at least, taken from the brass plates of Laban, which plates were brought from Jerusalem to Lehi in the wilderness, as you know, 600 years before the birth of Christ. Laban was a rich man. He could afford to have books made of metal sheets, while others perhaps were content with poorer and less enduring material—just as some people can now afford to have de luxe editions and others are willing to accept poorer paper and bindings. But on those plates of brass, brought from Jerusalem in the year 600 B. C., you will find the writings of Isaiah, not only the early chapters allowed to Isaiah by modern scholars, but the later chapters as well, which are ascribed by the critics to the second or false Isaiah. Let us remember that we have in the Book of Mormon transcriptions from the brass plates of Laban, comprising the record of Isaiah, oft-times word for word the same as the translation appearing in the Bible, chapter after chapter. The entire Book of Isaiah must have been in existence at that time.

Abinadi, a Book of Mormon prophet, quoted from what is now called the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah to the priests of Noah; and the fifty-third chapter comes in that portion which is ascribed to the false Isaiah; but the Nephites had it, Lehi had it, Laban had it six hundred years before Christ; and my testimony as to the genuineness of the Book of Mormon is sufficient to set at rights with me any question as to the authorship of the Book of Isaiah.

INTEGRITY OF ISAIAH AFFIRMED BY THE RESURRECTED LORD

Would you have higher authority than that of mortal prophets of Book of Mormon record? Then take the words of the Lord Jesus Christ himself when he appeared a resurrected being amongst the Nephites. In preaching to them he quoted one entire chapter of Isaiah—as we find recorded in the twenty-second chapter of Third Nephi. That quotation by our Lord is practically identical with the fifty-fourth chapter of Isaiah. I speak of the chapters as we now have them. I repeat,

Jesus Christ quoted to the Nephites almost word for word what Isaiah had written in what we now know as the fifty-fourth chapter of his book. Then the Lord said: "And now, behold, I say unto you, that ye ought to search these things. Yea, a commandment I give unto you that ye search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah."

This is the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. In other places, before his death, he had cited Isaiah. While in the flesh he quoted from that prophet, and from the latter chapters of the book, which modern critics say are not the words of Isaiah. By way of further illustration read John 12:38, wherein we find the citation from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, which modern critics affirm was not written by Isaiah the Prophet; and in the fortieth verse of the same chapter appears a citation from the sixth chapter of Isaiah, which part the critics do ascribe to Isaiah himself.

But be it remembered that the critics who thus seek to rend, mutilate and generally discredit the Book of Isaiah are not the only ones whose voice should be heard in so important a matter. They have no monopoly of the truth, and when they die wisdom will not perish with them. A great institution of wide influence, The Philosophical Society of Great Britain, otherwise known as the Victoria Institute, has taken up the matter of the unity of Isaiah, and has pointed out the errors of the critics with respect to the claim of duality, thus registering its decision that the Book of Isaiah is a unit, written by the son of Amoz, the prophet whom the Lord verily loved.

STUDENTS AND TEACHERS, BE CONSISTENT AND TRUE TO YOUR TESTIMONY

Regretfully I find that in some of our theological classes, and in our seminaries, not only pupils but teachers are following after that false lead and are segregating the words of the Book of Isaiah, part as being his and other portions as the works of another. Could there be a grosser inconsistency than that of proclaiming a belief in the divine inconsistency than that of proclaiming a belief in the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon while teaching or believing that the Book of Isaiah is other than what it purports to be—the writings of Isaiah the son of Amoz throughout?

I cannot feel those in our Church schools and seminaries who put the theories of men above the revelations of God have any rightful place among the teachers in our theological institutions, whether quorum classes, seminaries, or Church school of any name or grade.

DIFFERENCES IN STYLE OF WRITING

On what, you may ask, do these critics base this segregation of chapters and verses, as to authorship, in the Book of Isaiah? On two points: First comes the difference in style of composition. The only part of the Book of Isaiah, which is admitted to have been written by the prophet, is worded generally in a spirit of sadness; the tone or color is that of depression, dark presage, as befits the subject. The author is telling of the calamities that will come upon Israel unless they repent and turn from their wicked ways. The picture is painted in dark colors. The latter part of the book, from the fortieth chapter on, is more joyous, much more cheerful. The author is speaking of the triumph that shall eventually come to God's people. The critics say that Isaiah could not have written in these strikingly different styles. Do you find any modern writer telling a sorrowful tale in happy and exultant words? Is it so that one writer cannot inscribe a story of grief and at another time a story of surpassing joy? Our literature contradicts the thought! Think of the two splendid poems by Milton, his twin pictures, "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," known to most of our students of literature. One is a picture of pessimism, pensiveness, and gloom; the other a scene of optimism, joy and gaiety. There could not be greater contrast. Milton could adapt his style to his theme and did so splendidly; but Isaiah, preaching and speaking under the inspiration of the living God, could not do it, according to the critics who have assailed his work.

BE TRUE TO YOUR TESTIMONY!

To my younger brothers and sisters, to my student friends, I say stand by your testimony. When you have received it from the Lord, let it be your guide. It will be no handicap to you in your researches, your studies, your explorations and investigations. It will not detract from your reputation for learning, if you deserve any such reputation, provided you stand by the truth. As you know, in the Book of Mormon we have that wonderful story of the iron rod seen by Lehi. To those of you who want to explore I say, in all earnestness, tie fast your guide rope to the rod of iron, which is defined as the Word of God. Hold to it firmly, and you may venture out into the region of the unexplored in search of truth if you will; but do not loosen your hold on the rope; and remember that there is very little safety in holding to a rope that is loose at both ends.

By following this course I have had many satisfying explanations of questions that troubled me. Let me illustrate. It has been the general conception that certain animals known to have existed on the eastern hemisphere were not to be found on the western hemisphere in Nephite times; but in the Book of Mormon I find record, positive and simple, that certain of these animals were found by Lehi and his colony. Now, the testimony that the Lord had given me as to the integrity of the Book of Mormon did not furnish me with all details by which I could confront the evidence that was being gathered, which was all of a negative character, relating to the alleged non-existence of the horse and other animals upon the western continent at the time indicated. Some of you may say that as you do not find, ordinarily at least, the bones of buffaloes in this section, that buffaloes never lived here. But go search in the gravels of City Creek, and you may be lucky enough to find, as I have found, the bones and horns of buffaloes. One shred of positive evidence will nullify a volume of negative assumption; and the declarations made in the Book of Mormon, if not already verified, will surely be verified every whit.

The Book of Mormon is not to be judged according to the canons of criticism applicable to any book professing to be the product of a modern brain, any more than is the Holy Bible to be so judged. Each of these is a volume of scripture, profusely giving the revealed word of God.

REJECTION OF PROPHECY

The second objection made by the critics as to accepting Isaiah as a unit is based on the prophet's mention of King Cyrus, the Persian, a century and a half before Cyrus was born. As King Cyrus is named, the record containing the account of him, says the critics, could not have been written until after his birth, reign, and accomplishment of the divinely-appointed work ascribed to him by the prophet; in short, they say, that account must have been written by somebody who lived after Cyrus, the Persian king. Is there no prophecy? Are there no prophets? And, by the way, is Cyrus, the Persian, the only one whose name was given before birth? What of Ishmael, of Isaac, of John the Baptist? What of the Lord Christ himself? Their names were all prescribed and recorded long before their respective births.

Josephus, the Jewish historian, knew nothing of the alleged duality of the Book of Isaiah; for he tells us that Isaiah's prophecy was presented to King Cyrus, named therein, and "that the fact of his own name being in the text greatly encouraged him to carry out the prediction."

Some of us are very apt to be led away by a statement because we find it in a book bearing the name of some man assumed to be great. Let us read in a more discriminating way, and seek for the guidance of the Lord as we read.

I bear you witness, as witness has been borne before, and I speak it to you with all the assurance that the Three Witnesses and the Eight Witnesses put their testimony on record—that the Book of Mormon is just what it claims to be, as set forth by the ancient historian and prophet, the translation of whose words appears on the title page of the current work. There is nothing in the Book of Mormon to be explained away. The Book teaches, explains, and expounds; it will settle many of your problems, it will guide you in the path of truth. I know of what I speak for I have found it to be a reliable guide. Brethren and sisters, hold fast to the iron rod. May God help us so to do, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

THE LAW OF TITHING

My subject is tithing. I can scarcely hope to contribute a single new thought to this matter, but I have felt that the importance of it would serve to challenge your interest, and I have hoped that some good might result from a discussion of it. For some things that I may say

I acknowledge indebtedness to a little volume which has recently been placed in my hands called, "Dealing Squarely With God."

THE RELATIONSHIP OF MONEY AND PROPERTY TO CHRISTIANITY

"You can usually tell the sincerity of a man's interest in anything by the way he puts his money into it." Indeed it has been said that the measure of a man's Christianity may be determined by the way he gets and spends his money. It is said that Jesus had more to say about money and property, strange as it may seem, than about any other subject. In sixteen of thirty-eight of his parables money and property are made his theme.

MONEY AND MYSELF

After all, "Is not money myself? Money is the medium for which men exchange their abilities, ingenuity and labor. When a man gives his money he is giving himself, and the way a man gives his money is the way he gives himself. Money is myself. I am a laboring man, we will say, and can wield a pickaxe and hire myself out for a week at two dollars a day. At the close of the week I get twelve dollars and I put it in my pocket. What is that twelve dollars? It is a week's worth of my muscle put into greenbacks and pocketed. That is, I have got a week's worth of myself in my pocket." So, when a man gives the money that he has earned, he is giving literally of himself. Giving is worship. We are commanded "not to appear before the Lord empty-handed." Not that the Lord needs the gift, but that man needs to give.

TEST OF FAITH IS GIVING

The first principle of religion is recognition of God—faith. The real test of that recognition is giving. By that test we may judge with accuracy the religious attitude of our country. In a recent year statistics reveal the fact that more money was spent for face powders and cosmetics; more for ice cream, soft drinks and chewing gum; more for cigarettes, respectively, than the total sum expended to support all churches. May that not be a criterion by which we may safely judge the religious attitude, the deep-set religious feeling of the people of the country? Do not the words of Malachi seem pertinent:

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD

We do not rob God by withholding our gift in the sense that we deprive him of the substance of earth. He always has that substance, never relinquishing it. But we rob him of the satisfaction and the joy that he must feel when his children respond to his mandates and open their hearts in giving and in worship. Someone has said, "God never gives a quit-claim deed, he only grants a leasehold estate, and he who receives the lease must ever return the rental."

BOUGHT WITH A PRICE

Now the Lord has commanded that a rental be returned for all the substance and for all the blessings which he has given to his children. Christ bought us with a price, so we are told in the scripture. Is it to be thought that we are to gain salvation without a price, without giving and paying for it? When we speak of paying in this sense we do not mean that pay which is given as if in barter, but we mean the return of substance which is committed to our stewardship and which we hold in trust for the one who has so blessed us.

PARTNERSHIP WITH GOD

I like to think of the Lord as a partner, because the essence of partnership is a sharing of profits. It is however indispensable in a partnership that there shall also be a sharing of the burdens of the enterprise. The honor and the satisfaction that come to one in realization that he lives his life in partnership with God is to me a lofty and exalting thought. One cannot hope to realize the profits from that venture without bearing his portion of the expense—the giving which is requisite.

PAYMENT OF DUES

The Church generally is probably the only society in the world where a man is not suspended from membership for failure to pay his dues. I think that in substantially every other organized body of men for social or material gain if a man fails to pay his stipulated contribution he is dropped. While the Church does not drop from membership those who fail to pay, I feel very certain that those who fail to pay their stipulated portion are automatically dropped from the real advantages of Church participation and the blessings that inure from inactivity within it.

THRIFT HABITS

“Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven,” speaking to those whom he had admonished to pay their tithes and offerings. What comes from the windows of heaven? Both temporal and spiritual blessings. Temporal blessings accrue largely from the cultivation of thrift habits. The payment of tithes of necessity compels an orderly arrangement of one’s affairs. Accounting is indispensable. Budgeting is necessary. Saving follows. All of which are necessary to financial success.

ECONOMY

It was Victor Hugo who said: “Above all, teach the children to save. Economy is the sure foundation for all virtues.” I heard a banker say not long ago that if tithing served no other purpose than to secure an orderly adjustment of one’s affairs, a budgeting of the income and expenses, it would be invaluable. I feel sure that he who pays his tithes not only has a better conception of economy, but he is indulging in a practice which will bring him into better thrift habits and enable him to go forward toward financial prosperity.

SPIRITUAL POWER

Observance of tithing brings spiritual power, and after all that to me is the main thing. Religion is more than mere repose or relaxation. It is positive spiritual exercise. It makes for the growth of the soul, it cultivates all of the virtues. So one who is serious about religion will be willing to give to it the things which are necessary and the things which are vital to himself.

HONESTY

One who is honest with God is apt to be honest with his neighbor and with his employer. The need of honesty is attested everywhere and particularly in our own communities by defalcations, the extent and magnitude of which make us all blush with shame. I can scarcely conceive of a man who is honest with his God not being honest with his fellow man; and I can well advocate the payment of our tithing in a straightforward, square, honest way as being a safe foundation on which to build those principles of integrity that shall make honest men and women in the community.

NEED OF THE TITHE

The need of the tithe in the prosecution of God's work must be apparent to all of you. There are so many avenues in which sums may be expended to promote the work that I can scarcely take time to mention them. Not long ago I had the privilege of traveling in one of the missions of the Church. I was delighted to observe that in many rural sections which are not in the van of our progress and civilization the Church has caused to be erected inexpensive but beautiful small chapels. I could well conceive the influence that these chapels might exert not only in the furtherance of our religious views, but in their effect on the home life, the community life, the habits and practices of the people. These little chapels were clean and orderly, and I am sure they will bring an inspiration to many hundreds of home-owners to clean up their establishments, to live in an orderly and a more beautiful way. If the Church were endowed with sufficient means these little chapels could be extended throughout the whole land and would bring wonderfully beneficent results.

USE OF TITHING FUNDS

With our temples large sums of money are required. Think of the great work of redemption there performed. Our whole missionary cause is, in large measure, dependent upon the financial support that comes to the Church and also that which comes to those who are called on missions. There is a very definite relation between the finances of our people and the propagation of the Gospel of Christ. There is a very definite relation between missionary work and debt. I propose this constructive principle of the Gospel embraced in the law of tithing as a solution for many of our financial problems, as a foundation upon which men may build to bring themselves in a position to accept the calls that come to them to spread the great truths which are committed to our custody.

ENJOYMENT OF TITHE PAYING

Every man who pays his tithing should enjoy it. The Gospel of Christ is a gospel of enjoyment. "Man is that he may have joy." When one pays his tithing without enjoyment he is robbed of a part of the blessing. He must learn to give cheerfully, willingly and joyfully, and his gift will be blessed. In order that he may receive more enjoyment he needs to pay more frequently. Why deprive oneself of the joy that comes from this voluntary giving until the end of the year, when by payments throughout the year we may increase and enhance not only the joy of our giving but the practice of it.

MONTHLY PAYMENTS

I have found it to be a very difficult problem in mathematics to pay one-tenth out of one-twelfth. I commend that thought to those who are receiving monthly stipends and who indulge the practice of paying their tithing at the close of the year. I am sure you will find it very difficult indeed to get the tenth out of the twelfth if your tithing remains for payment until the last month. I can heartily recommend to you the payment of your tithes as your funds come into your hands, not only because it will be easier, but because greater blessings will inure to you.

CONSECRATION

We consecrate our lives in this Church to the advancement of the cause of God. There is no higher evidence of that consecration than this giving which has been enjoined upon us by the Lord. "He who gives himself with his gift feeds three—himself, his hungering neighbor and me." So the law of tithing is the epitome of the Gospel. It is genuine worship and true recognition of the sovereignty of God. It is real consecration, the giving of the muscle and energy of life to the cause; and it begets the abundant life of love and service for which the Christ came. It is a measurement of true religion. By the extent of its observance every man may determine for himself the vitality of his own faith and love of God. A prophet has said, "The tenth shall be holy unto the Lord." It will be holy unto you, men and women of Israel, if you give it lovingly, joyfully, willingly, to the great cause. God help us so to do, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Miss Bertha Sessions rendered a sacred solo entitled "Immortalis."

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I trust that I may be led by the Spirit of the Lord to say something this afternoon that will be profitable.

A CRITICAL TIME

One of our speakers yesterday said that we were living in a very critical time. For many years we have been living in peace and comparative prosperity, we have had no contentions with our neighbors; on the surface at least their feelings have been kindly, and apparently everything has been in the nature of peace and prosperity. But these are the times when Latter-day Saints should take heed concerning the revelations of the Lord and desire to keep his commandments with full purpose of heart, more perhaps than at any other time.

The Lord said in a revelation given in the early days of the Church:

"And I now give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life.

"For ye shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God."

INGRATITUDE IN TIMES OF PROSPERITY

In the days of our prosperity, when we are at peace, when we have the luxuries as well as the necessities of life, there may be a tendency on our part to forget the Lord. This seems to be a failing of humanity. We are taught this lesson all down through the ages so far as the people of the Lord are concerned, as we read of them in the Holy Scriptures. In Palestine as well as upon this continent, when the people were prospered they forgot the Lord. They turned from him and felt self-sufficient rather than to feel the spirit of humility and to put faith in the Lord, and to thank him for his blessings.

The crime of ingratitude is one of the most prevalent and I might say at the same time one of the greatest with which mankind is afflicted. The more the Lord blesses us the less we love him. That is the way men show their gratitude unto the Lord for his mercies and his blessings towards them.

THE WORDS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

I recommend to you, I shall not take time to refer further to it, the words of King Benjamin to his people as he gathered them around him, and taught them to keep the commandments of the Lord. You will find these things recorded in the first chapters of the book of Mosiah in the Book of Mormon.

I want to read, because I think these words are better than any that I might give you, from the 12th chapter of the Book of Helaman. These words, it would appear, were written by Mormon after recording some of the conflicts between the Nephites and the Lamanites and the destruction which came upon the people because they had forsaken the Lord:

"And thus we can behold how false, and also the unsteadiness of the hearts of the children of men; yea, we can see that the Lord in his great infinite goodness doth bless and prosper those who put their trust in him.

"Yea, and we may see at the very time when he doth prosper his people, yea, in the increase of their fields, their flocks and their herds, and in gold, and in silver, and in all manner of precious things of every kind and art; sparing their lives and delivering them out of the hands of their enemies; softening the hearts of their enemies that they should not declare war against them; yea, and in fine, doing all things for the welfare and happiness of his people; yea, then is the time that they do harden their hearts, and do forget the Lord their God, and do trample under their feet the Holy One—yea, and this because of their ease, and their exceedingly great prosperity.

"And thus we see that except the Lord doth chasten his people with many afflictions, yea, except he doth visit them with death and with terror, and with famine and with all manner of pestilence, they will not remember him.

"O, how foolish, and how vain, and how evil, and devilish, and how quick to do iniquity, and how slow to do good, are the children of men; yea, how quick to hearken unto the words of the evil one, and to set their hearts upon the vain things of the world!

"Yea, how quick to be lifted up in pride; yea, how quick to boast, and do all manner of that which is iniquity; and how slow are they to remember the Lord their God, and to give ear unto his counsels, yea, how slow to walk in wisdom's paths!

"Behold, they do not desire that the Lord their God, who hath created them, should rule and reign over them; notwithstanding his great goodness and his mercy towards them, they do set at naught his counsels, and they will not that he should be their guide.

"O, how great is the nothingness of the children of men; yea, even they are less than the dust of the earth.

"For behold, the dust of the earth moveth hither and thither, to the dividing asunder, at the command of our great and everlasting God."

ALL THINGS OBEDIENT EXCEPT MAN

Now this prophet did not mean to say that the Lord has greater concern for and loves the dust of the earth more than he does his children. He did not mean to say that we, the children of the Lord, in his sight are considered less than the dust of the earth. The point he is making is that the dust of the earth is obedient. It moveth hither and thither at the command of the Lord. All things are in harmony with his laws. Everything in the universe obeys the law given unto it, so far as I know, except man. Everywhere you look you find law and order, the elements obeying the law given to them, true to their calling. But man rebels, and in this thing man is less than the dust of the earth because he rejects the counsels of the Lord, and the greater the blessings he receives, (this because of his agency), the more willingly does he turn from the source of those blessings, feeling self-sufficient, and puts his faith and his trust in the arm of flesh rather than in God.

KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS

I want to endorse the remarks that were made here yesterday, wherein we were instructed and reminded to keep the commandments of the Lord, to observe the Sabbath day, to keep the Word of Wisdom, to pray, to attend to the various duties that are given unto us as members of the Church and men holding the priesthood; to live, in other words, in accordance with every word that proceeds forth from the mouth of God.

NECESSITY OF CONSTANT INSTRUCTIONS AND GUIDANCE

Why should we be under the necessity constantly of being reminded of the Word of Wisdom, of the law of tithing, the duty that is upon us to pray and thank our Father in heaven for his many blessings? Yet we find that it is necessary constantly to call the attention of the saints to these things, to instruct them, to guide them, so that we may be kept always in the path of duty and righteousness. Otherwise they fall into error. What a wonderful thing it is the Lord has given us by revelation, this privilege of meeting together in conference as we are now, and from time to time in the stake conferences and in the various other meetings, to be instructed! In these meetings we are taught the principles of the Gospel, and admonished when it is necessary. If we were not it would only be a short time until we would find the different branches of the Church and various stakes falling apart and doing things in different ways, and to some extent at least falling from grace, failing to keep the commandments of the Lord and to walk in his righteousness. The Lord has provided ample means by which we may be instructed and taught, that we may be one in all things.

BLESSINGS CONTINGENT UPON OBEDIENCE

Now, my brethren and sisters, in this time of peace—I do not know how long it will last—in this day of prosperity, let us be humble and remember the Lord and keep his commandments and feel that the dangers before us are far greater than they are in the days of trial and tribulation. Do not think for a moment that the days of trial are over. They are not. If we keep the commandments of the Lord we shall prosper, we shall be blessed; the plagues, the calamities that have been promised will be poured out upon the peoples of the earth and we shall escape them, yea, they shall pass us by. But remember the Lord says if we fail to keep his word, if we walk in the ways of the world, they will not pass us by, but we shall be visited with floods and with fire, with sword and with plague and destruction. We may escape these things through faithfulness. Israel of old might have escaped through faithfulness, but they refused to keep the commandments of the Lord and they were not saved. Therefore I plead with you: pay your tithing, keep the Word of Wisdom, pray unto the Lord, honor him in all things by keeping his commandments, that his blessings may be poured out and that we may receive them in abundance, and in humility we may walk before him and be entitled not only to the blessings that come to us in this mortal life, but to the blessings of eternal life, the greatest gift of God. So I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER WILLIAM R. SLOAN

President of the Northwestern States Mission

I have enjoyed the spirit of this conference. I am happy to represent before you the work as it is progressing in the Northwestern States mission.

We sang as the second hymn yesterday morning, "Guide us, O Thou great Jehovah, Guide us to the Promised land." Then, as we sang the second stanza: "Open, Jesus, Zion's fountains, Let her richest blessings come," I could not help but feel, surely the blessings and the rich blessings have come to this people.

A year and a half ago, in holding conferences with my missionaries, I asked these questions of each group: "What has your mission done for you? What have you done for the mission?" One elder reported: "President Sloan, I sat down the other evening and I wrote page upon page of the things that my mission has done for me. Then," he said, "when I tried to write: 'What have I done for the mission?' I could scarcely fill one page." If that question were put to us individually: "What has the Church done for us?" I wonder if the richer blessings, many of them, have not come. I see before me these wonderful volumes, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, the Pearl of Great Price; I see a great organization with ten hundred eighty-four wards, with one hundred one stakes of Zion. I see a great growth of buildings, chapels, schools, and seminaries throughout all the land, an evidence of God's blessings to us as his children. Brethren and sisters, what are we doing for the Church?

A few months ago, one of our splendid good girls in Portland, working for a large firm, received her pay-check and as she was returning home she lost her hand-bag. Upon reaching her home she discovered the loss. It contained her money, the earnings of a month's work. She felt very sorrowful about it, but advertised in the paper. Two or three days later the telephone rang. She answered the phone, and a lady at the other end asked her name, so on and so forth. She had found her hand-bag. She said: "As I looked through it I found your money and I found receipts, and among other receipts I found one for tithing to your Church. I thought 'If that little girl is honest enough to pay her tithing, I can't keep this money from her.'" She said further: "I had made up my mind that I would not return the purse, but I am returning it to you now, happily."

May I be personal just a minute and recount an experience of my own. On the 19th of October, 1926, I was invited into the office of President Grant and his counselors. I don't know if you may have had that experience, but to me it was new. I shall never be able to recount my feelings as I went and sat in the presence of these wonderful, good men. When the presidency had revealed to me the purpose for which they had invited me there, that it was to ask me to preside over a mission, I can never describe my feelings. Then I returned home, and I did so in tears, all the way. That night when we retired, I lay in my bed not able to close my eyes in sleep. Sleep had vanished, and I wrestled with the Lord, in tears, all night. I pleaded with the Father, "What can I, a weak mortal, do in such a mission as that?" The prayer was answered, and a voice spoke to me as I am speaking to you: "The Book of Mormon." My prayer was answered.

A month and a half later I went to the mission. When I heard the reports read in conference at Seattle on the 19th of December of that year, I found that we had distributed 1850 copies of the Book of Mormon. President Young said: "President Sloan, would you like to speak a few minutes?" I said, "Yes." I arose. The Spirit came, and I told the missionaries that for 1927 we would expect 18,000 copies of that book distributed in the mission. I shall never forget the reaction as it came to me. It seemed to me as if I sat alone, except for the Spirit of the Lord, as it had been given. At the end of the year, brethren and sisters, we had succeeded, the Lord had blessed us; and in 1928, I am happy to tell you, our mission distributed approximately 21,000 copies of that wonderful book. I want to tell you that there is no book in all the world from which a man or woman can gain the spirit of the Gospel more than by reading that wonderful volume.

My time is up. I am happy to report and to bring the love and confidence of the missionaries of the Northwestern States. They are a noble, sweet, wonderful group of young men and women. They are working hard. I bring you this report, fathers and mothers, from the mission.

When President George F. Richards was in Portland, laying the corner stone of our new chapel, we asked Doctor Irvine, the blind editor of the Portland Journal, to be one of our speakers. That most wonderful man stood there and paid tribute to this Church and to our achievements. In his closing remarks this is what he said: "Your creed, my freinds, is a gentle, sweet, lovable creed. Your doctrines are beautiful as if they came from the hand of God." So I bear testimony that this work is not of man, but it is of God, and it will succeed through his help. For this I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HENRY H. ROLAPP

Former President of the Eastern States Mission

Dear brethren and sisters, I stand before you as a recently-released president of the Eastern States mission. I have been succeeded by President James H. Moyle whom you heard yesterday. I was appointed to succeed President B. H. Roberts who had filled that mission so wonderfully well. I report to you that when I left the mission it was in excellent condition. We have done wonderfully well. In that mission we have baptized about two hundred non-Mormons during each year, in addition to many of the children of the saints.

The Lord has not blessed me with any ability to make great speeches, but I had an excellent corps of young men and young women to do that for me. I just traveled around amongst them and heard of our progress and of the little things of the Gospel I used to talk to them about. I talked to them about the value of prayer, and I am sure that I have never seen greater evidences of improvement in that direction than I did during my time in the Eastern States mission. I talked to them about observing the Sabbath day, and I am confident that among the Latter-day Saints of that mission there was a strict observance of the Lord's Day. I talked to them about keeping the Word of Wisdom, and I want to say to you that in my opinion that word was thoroughly observed in the Eastern States mission. I talked to the missionaries about their loyalty and faithfulness, and it has been a great satisfaction to me to find that the testimony of the Gospel has come to those young missionaries after they have been in the mission a comparatively short time.

I want to say to you fathers and mothers that those missionaries, those boys and those girls, and those older men who came as short term missionaries have done a wonderfully fine work. They thoroughly believed in the Gospel, and they had a testimony of it, after they had been in the mission a very short time. Fortunately most of the young people that came into the mission had been good Sunday School people. They had been good model people, but they knew comparatively little about the Gospel of Christ. Yet, by some miracle the Lord permitted his Spirit to come upon them, and I am sure that in ninety-seven cases, if not more, out of every hundred, within one year they could stand up and preach the Gospel, knowingly.

I talked to them about the law of tithing, and it is observed in the Eastern States mission averagely better than it is in Zion. The Saints in the Eastern States mission are paying a higher percentage of tithing than they are anywhere in the Church in Zion. To me the law of tithing is one of the great things of the Church. It is not a recommendation; it is a command. I find that ninety per cent of what I am permitted to receive is quite sufficient for me. There is not one of you who actually receives only ninety per cent of what he is earning that is not wholly satisfied. That other tenth does not belong to you; it belongs to the Lord. I taught that to the saints there.

We have a number of Germans coming into New York and into Brooklyn, hundreds of them. They constitute more than sixty per cent of the saints in Brooklyn, and about forty per cent of the saints in New York. They have done wonderfully well. Their little tithing comes in each Saturday night. They go and deliver it to their branch president, and he gives them their receipt. I cannot think of a thousand people among the many thousands we have in that mission who are not full tithe-payers. I honor them, and I glory in it. I have found that the Lord has blessed me each year with just a little bit more, because I was willing to observe that law. I have told that to the saints, and they believed it.

I am thankful to the First Presidency for calling me on a mission, and I am indeed thankful to the Lord that I was called on a mission. It has given me a greater insight into the work of the missionaries and into the faith of the Latter-day Saints than I could have received in any other way. I am delighted to have been on a mission. I feel sure that the testimony that I have will continue with me during the few years that I shall yet live. I am glad that I have had this opportunity. It will be a heritage to my sons, to know that their father has been on a mission, as they have been on missions, and that we have done our part in furthering the work of the Lord. God grant that the spirit of serving God may always be strong in the hearts of the saints, that there may always be a desire to do the will of the Lord, and they shall be blessed. God grant us this spirit, for Christ's sake. Amen.

ELDER ERNEST C. ROSSITER

Former President of the French Mission

My brethren and sisters and kind friends, I feel honored, and I am indeed happy this morning in being called to the stand to report on my labors during the time that I was in the French mission, and to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of this Gospel.

I am happy to see such a vast congregation this morning, the largest that it has been my privilege to address. I assure you that I feel my weakness and pray that God will be merciful to me in the few remarks which I may have to make this morning.

I feel that it is an honor to be a member of this Church, and especially so, to be able to go out into the world and preach unto the people, many thousands of whom are seeking after the truth which we have to give unto them.

The French mission today is in a very prosperous condition. We are getting into the hearts of the real French people. I am happy to tell you that we are not only converting the Protestants among the French, but also a great many of the devout Catholic people, many of them very well educated. The First Presidency have been very kind to us in giving us a greater number of missionaries the last three years, which has enabled us to expand into France. Heretofore our efforts have been confined to Belgium and Swiss Roman. There are in France a great many people who have the blood of Israel in their veins. We feel that we are developing a very splendid mission in that country, and that it will be only a few years hence when we will be able to make a very splendid showing and that the French mission will come to the fore, as have all the other European missions. At the time I left the mission field we had about fifty-three missionaries, and all of them are real missionaries, doing a splendid work, learning the language in a remarkable way. That has been one of our tasks, to persuade our missionaries to learn the French language and speak it to the people in an intelligent and pleasing way to them, because in that way we are able to please the people and make friends of them.

France has produced some very splendid people throughout the world in the Protestant field as well as in the Catholic field. The Huguenots came from France largely, went into Switzerland, some into the new world, and thousands of them have accepted the Gospel. The Normans who were in Northern France, went to England, many of them; and it is from that class of people that my family has come. I am therefore very much interested in the French people, because I have French blood in my veins.

During the last three years I believe we have made more progress in the French mission than in many years previous, from the fact that we have had more opportunity to reach out among the French people. We have opened up new ways and means to find them, preaching the Book of Mormon, that wonderful book which was so well explained to you by Doctor Talmage this morning. I was very much interested in his remarks. That is getting into the hearts of the French people. The stereoptican views have attracted thousands of people to our meetings. That is one means we have of showing people the real facts about Salt Lake and Zion. The French people have always had an erroneous opinion of our people, having heard only of the evil, the bad side, the false reports. Only recently we held a mission presidents' conference in Paris, which resulted in a vast amount of good. The newspapers opened up their columns to fair publication of our doctrines, which resulted in a wider investigation, and that publication was spread throughout the world. We received many inquiries through letters and personal inquiries from people asking how they could become members of the Church. We feel that the work is just getting a fair start among the French people. Your missionaries who have been called to that land can consider themselves blessed and honored. There is no greater opportunity for any missionary than can come to him through a call to the French mission. The progress, the advancement, the education, the learning of a modern language, for which he can get credit in his school, and the personal development which comes to him, are wonderful things. The fathers and mothers of the boys in the French mission can consider themselves blessed through having their sons in that mission at the present time.

I wish to bear my testimony to the divinity of this work. I know, my brethren and sisters, that God lives and that he is a remunerator of all those who diligently seek him. I do know that this Gospel is true. God has revealed it to me through his Holy Spirit. I can truthfully say that I have a burning testimony within my bosom of this great work and only hope that I may be able to retain that testimony to the end of my days, when I shall again see my Maker, meet him face to face and talk with him. I bear you my testimony that our present presidency, the prophets of this Church, are indeed inspired to carry on this work, and I stand ready at any time to serve them as best I can, because in serving I know that great blessings come to those who will do it willingly. I desire to continue on in this work the best I know how. May God bless us all in our endeavors to serve him, I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I wish to announce that Brother Rossiter who has just spoken to you is forty-six years of age, and that he has spent thirteen years of his life as a missionary, or over twenty-five per cent of his life thus far. If you will deduct the years of his childhood and teens you will find that the greater portion of his life has been given to proclaiming the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

I am convinced that service of this kind is one of the strongest testimonies of the divinity of this work that can come to a thoughtful man. It seems to me that nothing short of an abiding knowledge of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged would cause a man to give so much of his life's labor—giving the very best that is in him—for the spread of the truth.

ELDER ELIAS S. WOODRUFF

President of the Western States Mission

I am very grateful that it has been my privilege to be called into the ministry and particularly into the mission field, and for the experience of associating with the saints who reside in the branches scattered throughout the missions, and with the elders and sisters who have been called there as missionaries. We are trying to appreciate the privileges Gospel to the people of the Western States district. We rely upon to make ourselves feel and understand that we are instruments—poorly prepared though we may be—through which our heavenly Father expects to carry on the work of bringing the message of the Gospel to the people of the Western States District. We rely upon the blessings of the Lord rather than upon our own intelligence or learning. We have learned and are learning by experience, that if we may enjoy the association of the Holy Ghost and its inspiration and guidance we will be more successful than if we attempt to rely upon ourselves. If the Lord is to perform a marvelous work and a wonder, which he is doing, it will have to be performed through the material that is available; and if the material available is willing to serve, willing to try to do what the Lord wants us to do by his great power and wisdom, he will have no great difficulty in performing the marvelous work and a wonder.

The Lord has blessed us in the Western States mission. We are meeting with success in our labors. Our tithing has increased this year over last year, up to the end of this first quarter, even as it did last year over the previous year. We are able to, and are distributing more pamphlets and selling and loaning more copies of the Book of Mormon than we did last year. We are grateful for the opportunity that is given us to do it.

We have little prejudice to contend with. Generally speaking, the people receive us with great kindness, very little abuse. I was thinking of what Elder Joseph Fielding Smith stated this morning with reference to that. I have wondered why we meet with so little opposition and with practically no persecution. I have tried to caution first myself and then my associates against a feeling of security, the feeling that all is well with us, because we seem to get along so well. I sincerely hope that we will never feel so secure that we will forget the protecting care of the Lord which is over us, or forget his blessings.

The Lord is blessing our branches. The branches of the Western States mission are growing in interest, in attendance and in activity. I wish to relate to you one incident which has to me been very faith-inspiring. I will not name the branch. That is unnecessary. Suffice it to say, one of our branches has received a great financial blessing at the hands of the Lord, by being obedient to his requirements. The history of this branch has been rather unfortunate. There was contention among its members, lack of appreciation of each other's virtues, a falling down in their payment of tithes and offerings, sometimes a lack of attendance at their meetings; and the branch had in a measure divided itself, so that there were two factions in it. We, (myself and associate missionaries), were holding a conference there last June. The Spirit of the Lord seemed to say to me: "Prophecy to this people that if they will love each other and keep the commandments of the Lord, the Lord will bless them." I was fearful that it was not the Spirit of the Lord directing me; therefore, I did not give voice to the impressions that came to me until the last meeting we held. By the way, we stayed there three days. At the close of the last meeting, I could no longer resist the feeling that seemed to be upon me. I promised those people in the name of the Lord, by prophecy, that if they would repent of their weaknesses, if they would love each other, and support each other, if they would pay their tithes and their offerings, the Lord would relieve them of their financial distress. They had a large dam and a reservoir without water in it. The impression came to me very distinctly; "Do not promise them that the reservoir will be filled." I said: "I do not promise you that the reservoir will be filled, but I do promise you that the way will be opened that your crops will be irrigated; you will be prospered and you will be happy if you will do these things." They sincerely accepted what I said. I went away from there feeling very humble. I can tell you now after nine months have passed by, that the reservoir has not been filled, but the legislature of the state in which they reside has appropriated $25,000.00 to help them build another reservoir. They are building on a stream that flows into their fields. Another party has given one of them a contract to get out three million feet of timber. They increased their tithing in 1928 nearly fifty per cent over the previous year. The Lord is answering with a blessing upon their heads. The president of that district wrote me a letter, giving me these facts, with great appreciation. The Lord's protecting care is over us, he is blessing us, and we are grateful to be under his dominion.

I pray that he will bless the Church and every member thereof, and above all, his servants who preside in the Church, that the work of the Lord may be carried on as he would have it, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We try always, at these conferences, to hear from all the General Authorities, also from mission presidents who have been recently released, and from those who have come in from their mission fields for conference and will return thereto. We have at the present time forty-two General Authorities, recently retired mission presidents, and presidents who will return to their respective missions. We therefore find it necessary to ask the speakers to be brief in their remarks.

President Grant, in announcing the closing hymn, "O Say, What is Truth?" to be sung by the congregation, said: "This hymn was written by one of the most loyal and faithful members of the Church, the late John Jacques, and was the favorite hymn of our well-beloved departed President, Anthon H. Lund."

After the singing of the hymn the benediction was pronounced by Elder Danford M. Bickmore, President of the Hyrum Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The meeting commenced at 2 o'clock p. m.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Come, Come, Ye Saints."

Elder Charles S. Clark of the Cassia Stake offered the invocation.

The Chaminade Ladies' Chorus, under the direction of Prof. Anthony C. Lund, sang a sacred selection, "Holy Father."

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I am reading from Paul's epistle to the Galatians:

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

"For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

Years ago, Sister Snow, one of our gifted poetesses, wrote a hymn, the first lines of which are:

"The trials of the present day
Require the Saints to watch and pray,
That they may keep the narrow way
To the Celestial glory."

The trials which she referred to were not the kind we are now familiar with. The trials of her day were of mob violence, of hardship, of struggle and strife.

As we heard this morning, we have passed beyond that period of the Church's history, and yet we are not without our trials. They are of a different character, and still they require the saints to watch and pray if we are to preserve ourselves in the way to celestial glory.

THE PRESENT GENERATION

I am not one of those who find pleasure in condemning this generation. I have a deep sympathy for the young people of our time. I believe they are as good at heart as their parents. Indeed I feel that God has kept them in reserve, as he did their fathers and mothers, to come forth in an age when he needs them; and that they also can be made true and faithful. I feel, however, that no other generation has ever needed wisdom, guidance, and help as much as does this generation of young people. They are in a new world, face to face with conditions quite unlike those that obtained in the time of their parents. So that my quarrel shall not be with them so much as with conditions that they must meet. I have a spirit of patience and of charity towards them. Yet I feel in my heart an anxious desire to awaken the members of the Church to the need of lending parental aid and assistance to these boys and girls, such aid and assistance as perhaps no other generation has really needed.

CORRUPTION OF MORALS BRINGS DESTRUCTION OF FAITH

I remember in my early childhood being considerably shocked by a statement which appeared in this city from an enemy of the Church. After having attempted to convert the young people of the Church from the faith of their fathers and having failed, the suggestion was made, that if you want to convert the young people of the Mormon Church you cannot argue with them, you cannot attack the Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith—but if you really want to convert them corrupt them, build brothels, get them into these institutions, and have their morals destroyed; then you can easily turn them from their faith.

I believe that this is true, that the easiest way to destroy a man's faith is to destroy his morality; that when his morals are corrupted his faith totters; he cannot stand, except he repent, of course.

METHODS OF THE ADVERSARY

So that I believe that while the enemy is not arraying men and nations against the Church, he has not quit the field. Let us not be deceived. With new methods, quite different from those employed in the days of our fathers, he is diligently at work, using more effective means to destroy, to corrupt, than he has ever used before; and the assaults that he is making are against the individual himself.

I found in the mission field it was utterly impossible for any man to successfully attack the doctrines of this Church. When the elder was thoroughly familiar with the teachings of the Church he could defend the Church's position. I have never been afraid of such assaults, I have never been afraid of mob violence nor of disasters that should come from the elements; but I have been afraid of the power of the evil one to hurt this cause when he could corrupt the missionaries; and his favorite means of stopping the missionary is to get him to commit sin. He was never more successful in stopping the Lord's work than when he could induce the bearer of the message to sin and to transgress. I have discovered in my own experience with hundreds of missionaries that when the devil lays a snare for the feet of a missionary, he generally baits the hook with a woman.

THE TRIALS OF PEACE AND PROSPERITY

We are in the age of self-indulgence. It is not peculiar to this Church; it is in the world. The spirit of it is rampant everywhere. It beats upon our shores from all points. It enters into the midst of the people. It is a deadly siege in an attempt to destroy that which persecution, mob violence, privation and hardship failed to destroy,—the integrity of this people. I am not a pessimist either. While I recognize the storms that are raging against our standards, I am as sure as that I live that the promises of the Lord will be fulfilled, and that this work shall not fail, nor shall it be given to another people. I recognize however, with my brethren, that the sorest trials that have ever come to the Church in any age of the world are the trials of peace and prosperity. But we are to do a new thing, a thing that never has before been done—We are to take the Church of Christ not only through the age of persecution and mob violence, but through the age of peace and prosperity. For we must learn to endure faithfully even in peace and prosperity.

I am not praying for the return of persecution and poverty; I am praying for peace and prosperity; but above all things for strength and power to endure this test. For it was not the design and the intention of the Lord to have this people always in suffering in bondage and distress. They shall come to peace and prosperity, but it is the sorest trial that will come to them.

SNARES OF THE EVIL ONE

I recognize that there are some things connected with this subject that need to be brought to the attention of parents and of the watchmen presiding in the various stakes, wards and missions of the Church, watchmen who ought to distinguish, and they do I am sure, the presence of evil, and set up a defense for the people of the Church, particularly the young people.

I believe that there is need for greater care over our young people during the period of their courtship. I have been grateful for all the blessings and joys of the automobile, but with it has come also dangers. The courtship of too many goes forward in the automobile, and there lurks a danger to many, because, unchaperoned and out of reach of parents, away from all restraint, they seem to think they are alone. But they are not, for the devil is often there to lay snares for their feet, to destroy their own happiness and to darken their spirits by leading them to sin and transgression.

During the war I saw the breaking down of what seemed to me to be the most precious thing that the girls and women of this nation have, maidenly modesty, until now it has come to be a sort of custom among many young people (I regret to say even among us), that they feel at liberty to promiscuously engage in embracing and kissing each other when there is no thought of anything serious so far as engagement or marriage is concerned—only the thrill they get. I protest against it and say to you that there is danger in it, and that the fire will burn those who play with it.

The sacredness of the kiss and affectionate relationships belong only to the engaged and married state, and ought not to be indulged in by those who are only seeking the thrill of the moment. There will come danger if we do not guard and keep, by all the strength and power we have, these splendid young people in the path of rectitude and safety.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE

I believe that virtue is its own reward. We are to be a peculiar people. I do not think the Lord meant we were to be freaks or in any sense ugly or undesirable; but our peculiarities shall consist in that we are different from other people in some of these most desirable things. I remember, while on my first mission more than thirty years ago, meeting a gentleman who could not believe that these Mormon missionaries were clean and undefiled. He said, "You do not mean to tell me that married men will go upon a mission and stay for two years and keep themselves morally clean." I said: "I certainly do. That is our standard." "Well," he said, "You won't find it anywhere else."

THE SINGLE STANDARD

I feel sure that this is true. Our standard that requires a young man to be as clean and as chaste and as pure as the girl he asks to be his wife, the mother of his children, is peculiar. We do not find it generally in the world. When I think of the assaults that are coming I recognize the weakness of the world's position because of its double standard. It required a higher standard of women than of men, and now it has given to women equal rights with men, not only in the franchise, but in other things. Some women are coming to ask the same privilege to sow their wild oats that men have, and then expect honorable marriage.

We have no such double standard. We ought to be able to succeed under these circumstances better than others, because we have a single standard for men and for women. We expect our boys to be as good as our girls, and as clean. The Master said, in answer to the question, Who is guilty of committing adultery? that whosoever looked upon a woman to lust after her had committed adultery already with her in his heart; and the Prophet Joseph Smith said that unless such a one repents he will lose the Spirit. It is the quickest way to lose the Spirit.

PROTECTION THROUGH MODESTY

There never has been a day perhaps since these words were uttered by the Master when there was greater temptation for men to think evil than in this age with its immodesty, in almost every avenue of life. I am not crying for reform in dress, but I do plead with the mothers of Zion to undertake modesty in dress. We may like to follow the fashion, but let us follow it in modesty. The most precious thing that a girl has is her modesty and if she preserves this in dress, in speech, in action, it will arm, and protect her as nothing else will. But let her lose her modesty, and she becomes a victim of those who pursue her, as the hare is of the hound; and she will not be able to stand unless she preserves her modesty.

PATTERN MAKERS FOR THE WORLD

I am therefore of the opinion that there is no peril that is threatening us today such as this peril of immorality. It is in the world. The standards that have long been maintained are being questioned and by many discarded. Are we also to succumb? No. If that day comes, and it will, when the people from the ends of the earth will say, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob," it will be to learn of the ways of this people. If we act and live like the world, why need they come here? They are to find something different here. It is easy for us to drift with the tide. It doesn't take much courage to do that, but it is difficult to go against the current. God has called upon this people to be pattern-makers for the whole world, to hold up an ensign that shall attract the attention of the ends of the earth. Is it not worth fighting for to be admired and respected by all the good and the great? This is the battle that is before us, to preserve our standards.

MARRIAGE FOR A HOLY AND SACRED PURPOSE

Then when we come to the question of marriage, our standards invite young men and women to live worthy to enter into the holy contract of matrimony for time and for all eternity; and that involves upon them another sacred obligation, which is to fulfil the first great commandment of God, "multiply and replenish the earth." Not companionate marriage, no, but marriage with a given and definite purpose. I plead with you parents and teachers in Zion to hold up the ideal and the standard before our young people that they enter marriage for a holy and sacred purpose. Not that they are to use these glorious bodies with their God-given power of procreation as mere harps of pleasure. If they do they shall reap disgust for each other and stand condemned before God.

I do not know of course what we agreed to before we came into this life, but I have a deep conviction that we promised our Father's children who long had been waiting for the privilege and opportunity to come into mortal life that we would remember them when we came into life ourselves. If we wilfully and deliberately neglect that promise and forget them and determinedly live a childless life, we shall stand condemned in the presence of those to whom we have made sacred promises and before God himself.

POVERTY NOT A BAN

Are poverty and the expense of raising children to be a ban that shall deter us from maintaining the high standards of our fathers and mothers? No. Poverty never was a ban against children rising to eminence. Lincoln was not held back from the highest office within the gift of the people because he was born of poor parents in a log house. Nor need it be in this age of liberty, education and great opportunity for even the poor. Let us not be afraid to assume the full obligations and receive the blessings that God has promised to those who keep this first great commandment.

As far as the nations of the earth are concerned, I have made some study of their statistics and they show that going hand in hand with a decreasing birth rate is an increasing divorce rate. The cement that binds hearts together, children, is lacking, and as a result dissolution comes; and as the family institution begins to crumble, so will the government and the Church.

THE CRIME OF SEXUAL IMPURITY

I plead with you, therefore, my brethren and sisters, that we rally to our standards. Certainly our teachers were right when they held up an ideal that virtue was as sacred as life itself, and that we had better lose our lives than lose our virtue. That was the teaching I received; and next to the crime of murder itself is the crime of sexual impurity. The boy who would deliberately look upon a clean, chaste, and pure girl to rob her of her virtue is almost as guilty as though he contemplated sending a knife into her heart to destroy her; for when she loses her virtue she loses that which is more precious than life itself. If she does lose her virtue the devil is apt to deceive her, for he often does, and make her believe, and a young man also, that now he or she has committed this sin they are lost forever. Repentance is in order always, and mercy for the sinner.

THE WAGES OF SIN

I was saying to a young woman who was confessing her own sins recently, wondering if there were any hope for her, that if she continued the sale of her glorious body for the filthy lucre of this world she soon would come to the end of her career, and, like an old worn-out shoe, be cast aside, and die prematurely, full of disease, in some charitable institution.

REWARD OF THE VIRTUOUS

When you contrast that condition with the glorious privilege God has offered to the sons and daughters of Zion who keep themselves clean and pure and undefiled, to go into the temples of God to receive a companion for time and eternity, that they may be worthy to pass on, by the angels and the Gods, to their glory and inheritance and attain unto the power of endless increase, is it not inducement enough to call for sacrifices, for cleanliness of life, for purity, so that we may reap these glorious blessings and holy privileges?

A WORTHY EXAMPLE

I believe that the strength and the power is in every boy to be as good as was Joseph our forefather who was sold into Egypt. From the time of my childhood the story of his life has appealed to me. When he, comely and desirable, was sought after by the wife of the ruler, he resisted her again and again; and when she seized upon him he fled from her presence, though he left part of his clothing in her possession. Condemned falsely, he still stood true to his convictions, and God vindicated him.

Let the young men of Israel, the descendants of this Joseph, look upon their ancestor and be inspired to die rather than to be defiled, that they may be worthy to come into the great heritage that God has for his faithful sons and daughters. For if this generation shall keep themselves clean and undefiled they shall reap honors and distinction like unto which their fathers who subdued the deserts and made it blossom never attained. We shall indeed be peculiar.

REQUIREMENTS TO WEATHER THE STORM

I have confidence and a faith that the great majority of this people shall weather the storm, but it will require the closing in of our ranks. It will require closer co-operation between parents and children. It will require every effort and every power that this people can put forth to preserve this generation in purity. God give us the strength and the power to do it, that we may receive the great distinction and blessing and the eternal joy that shall come as a result of achievement and accomplishment, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I have been very greatly impressed, my brethren and sisters, by the spirit of the conference so far, and I feel strengthened and built up in my faith by reason of the instructions and admonitions and the testimonies that have been given. I am thankful to my Heavenly Father that I am accounted worthy of membership in the Church; that I have been accounted worthy to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. My missionary labors have been a source of very great joy to me, and they continue to be so.

I rejoice in the opportunity of laboring with the noble young men and women who are called from out the ranks of the Church and who are now and have been for the past years laboring with me in the mission field. They grow and develop in a degree that is marvelous, in their contact with the world, in their contact with opposition, and even in their contact with the indifference that they encounter in the world. I think someone said yesterday that they are born seemingly with a testimony, and as soon as they begin to labor and to study and to reflect, this testimony springs into real life and activity and they grow and develop in a wonderful way. Their spirit of obedience is very remarkable, my brethren and sisters. Those who have labored with me, in nearly every instance have not hesitated at all to go where they were directed to go, or to stay whatever length of time they were asked to stay. If we had no difficulty about elders going home other than that which we have from the elders in the field our difficulties would be few indeed. We do, I am sorry to say, have some little difficulty in keeping our very fine missionaries in the field, because of the attitude assumed by friends and relatives, and in some instances presiding officers, at home. I wish that it could be understood by the people of the Church generally, as we mission presidents understand it, and we have our understanding from the General Authorities of the Church, that a mission in the world is not for any stipulated length of time. Some may be honorably released at a year's expiration, and others may stay well beyond the two year mark, even in some instances running into three and five years in some missions. It would make it very much easier for your missionary boys and girls if you could maintain them there as long as the Lord requires them to remain; and that duration of time shall be indicated through the servants of the Lord whom he has entrusted to preside over your young men and young women in the missionary field.

In our particular field of labor the work is progressing very satisfactorily, considering conditions and all concerned, even more satisfactorily than one could well hope for. We are thankful to the Lord for this and feel a desire to continue our labors and to work zealously for the redemption of that particular branch of the house of Israel with which we are laboring, namely, the Lamanite people, who are descendants of Joseph and who have resided upon this land of America.

I have been particularly impressed during this conference by the reference that has been made to the Book of Mormon. It has made my heart rejoice to hear the strong testimonies given in favor of its divine authenticity, and it is a source of joy to know that the men of science, archaeologists, who are delving into the ruins of the past, are developing only things that corroborate the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon; for in very deed all that is coming forth is in favor of it. So far as my studies and observations are concerned I have found nothing that in any way controverts the claim that we make for the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

It has been my good pleasure, my brethren and sisters, to travel a very great deal in Book of Mormon lands, and it would have been strange indeed if I had not taken some interest and had I not found some things that to me are evidences of the divine authenticity of that book. I have not been among those who have tried to place or locate certain cities, or even definitely certain lands; but I have read in the Book of Mormon of a mighty civilization that has existed upon this continent in the remote past—the Jaredite civilization, preceding even the Nephite civilization. I have read in the Book of Mormon of their spreading out upon the face of the whole land. I have read about the wonderful buildings they have left, the wonderful temples that they have erected, the extent of their great cities. I have studied about the materials used in the construction of those cities; and it has been my happy pleasure, my brethren and sisters, to see verily demonstrated before me the fact that there has lived in the remote past upon this continent a civilization that exceeded in every way that found even by the Spanish conquerors in Mexico and by the Spanish conquerors in Peru, who conquered the most highly civilized nations found here by European conquerors.

I have stood in amazement at the immense dimensions of the stones used in the construction of great buildings in Mexico. I have seen juttied together as lintels over three great doorways that led into a great hall from a courtyard, stones that were five by six by twenty-five feet in dimension. Brother Ballard and I, in returning from our missionary sojourn in Buenos Aires, came by the great ruined city of Tiahuanaco, at the extreme southern end of Lake Titicaca, at the great elevation of 12,500 feet above the sea level; where we actually measured stones that were six by eight by twenty-five feet, and they were fitted together in buildings, without mortar, in a system of dry masonry. So well fitted and adjusted were some of these huge stones, that even after all the ages that have passed since they were placed there, you cannot insert a knife blade between the joints.

I have seen many things that demonstrate to me that the Book of Mormon is true. It is not a difficult thing for me to believe in inscriptions on plates of gold. When Brother Ballard and I were returning from South America we had the opportunity of going ashore at Lima, Peru, the capital of the Peruvian government. There we had access to a national museum where a great collection had been made, which was being housed in new quarters that were not open to the public. We secured entrance, through the good offices of our ambassador to that country, and after witnessing many archaeological wonders we came to a glass case that was perfectly filled with gold ornaments. There were cups and candlesticks seemingly, of very curious workmanship. They were wonderful indeed. They were a few of the great things that had been left after the cupidity of the Spanish conquerors had robbed that country of all the gold that could be found, but yet some was left behind. After examining through the glass case many of the objects, our attention was attracted to a pile of gold leaf in one corner. As near as I could calculate its dimensions, it was about the same size as our Juvenile Instructor, and the pile was about as high as half a dozen Juveniles. The thickness of the leaves, it seemed to me, was similar to the outside cover of that magazine. They were of pure gold leaf. All you would need to do would be to insert a ring through the edges of them to have a set of plates that would contain at least as much as we have in the abridgment of the Book of Mormon that was brought to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I do not say these things to be sensational or to boast, but I tell you that my eyes have beheld them. I do not doubt the story of the Book of Mormon because of these things. I have delved a very great deal into old Spanish literature during the great number of years I have resided in Latin American countries, and I have been able to search out many curious traditions concerning the belief of the ancient people, as they were recorded by the early chroniclers that came with the conquest of Mexico; things that bespeak the fact that the people must have had a knowledge of the creation and of the flood that was in every particular coincident with or exactly like the account given in the Bible. The story of the creation is not recited very much in detail in the Book of Mormon, but one cannot but understand from that record that the people had a knowledge of it precisely as the Jews had it, because of the fact that the Nephites brought with them the first five books of Moses, upon which plates perhaps, as they were spoken of this morning by Elder Talmage, were contained these writings. They had this record precisely as it is in the Bible.

I have in my possession some pamphlets from which I have made a few extracts that I should like to refer to. One is in regard to the flood. These pamphlets are in Spanish, and I have made a hasty translation of them into English, but I would like to call them to your attention.

You remember that it is recorded in Genesis that the Lord commanded that the waters from above be separated from the waters beneath, and the account goes on to tell how they were arranged in their proper places. There is a tradition that was recorded by Padre Pedro de los Rios (Codice Rios (Vaticano A.), folio 12, anverso) speaking of Quetzalcoatl, a great being traditional among them, to whom they attributed the creation of the world and many other things. And this is said about him by Padre Rios as he recorded the tradition that he found among the Indians:

"This is the image of the first Lord that the world had, who, when it pleased him, breathed and separated the waters of the heavens from those of the earth, the which had before been together, and he it is that arranged them as they now are."

You will see a close analogy, my brethren and sisters, between this tradition and the account given in Genesis, which account truly must have been had among the people of this land, if it so be that the Book of Mormon is true.

There is a tradition among these people concerning the destruction of the world by the flood; and furthermore, they recount that in the traditions of the native people there was an account of the destruction of the world at another time. This excited the curiosity of one Diego Munoz Camargo. You will find this account written in his History of Tlaxcala, published in 1892, on pages 153 and 154. He says:

“There being a very great error among these natives, and very general throughout this new Spain, because they said this world had had two endings or two windings up, and that one had been by deluges and tempestuous waters, and that the earth had been turned upside down, and that those who had lived at that time had been giants, whose bones are found in the broken places.

You will recall, my brethren and sisters, that the Genesis account also states that there were giants living in those days. The tradition says:

“And those who lived at that time were giants whose bones are now found in the broken places.”

“They also say that there had been another ending of the world, and that it was caused by winds and hurricanes that were so great that everything in the world was destroyed, even the trees and plants of the mountains; and that the men of that time were taken up from the ground and were lost to sight. And they hold as a certainty, furthermore, that there is to be another ending of the world and it is to be by fire.”

If you will take the pains, my brethren and sisters, to look up these references you will find that my statement in regard to this is true. These things attract my attention very greatly, and there are innumerable things of this kind that could be recited that are just as wonderful as these that I have mentioned.

I would like to recount just one more tradition, which is in regard to the miraculous conception of Jesus Christ or Quetzalcoatl. Our account of the conception and birth of Jesus Christ and that of the conception and birth of Quetzalcoatl, who was their great Deity, are almost the same. You will find this in the Codice Telleriano Remensis.

“Quetzalcoatl was born in Chiuenauicatl, which is where the hand is—He it is that was born of the virgin that is called Chimalman in the heavens. This Quetzalcoatl is he of whom it is said, ‘He made the world,’ because they say that this Tonacatecuhtli (the supreme God who resides in the most high heaven) when it pleased him breathed and begot this Quetzalcoatl; and he, (Quetzalcoatl), they say it was that made the first man.”

This is very remarkable, my brethren and sisters, taken in connection with the account given in the New Testament, of the conception of Jesus Christ; and if you will couple that also with the first chapter of John, wherein it says that the Son of the Most High God, who was with the Father from the very beginning, was the Creator of the earth, and that by him and through him and of him all things that were made were made, you will see that we have ample reason to accept, even from these external evidences, the fact that the Book of Mormon is the word of God:

Now to me it is a reality. It is my faith and belief in this Book of Mormon that has kept me going throughout all the dark years of my missionary service in Mexico. For it seems that no more obstacles could be placed in the way of missionary progress than have been, because of conditions that have reigned in that land. But the Book of Mormon recounts to us that the people of the land, the descendants of those who wrote these great prophecies of the Lord, are a covenant people of the Lord and they are to be redeemed.

I want to read to you something that has given to me a great deal of faith and hope, and if the book is true as we declare it to be, these promises that have not yet had their fulfilment will most surely be fulfilled in behalf of that people. I read to you now from the thirtieth chapter of Second Nephi, beginning with the third verse:

"And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many who shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed.

"And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews.

"And the Gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers.

"And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes; and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightsome people."

I believe that prediction. I am working earnestly, my brethren and sisters, for its fulfilment. It would be almost easier, looking at the thing from a natural standpoint, to believe in the extermination of the people rather than that any of them would be spared. But they are to enjoy this great redemption.

I would like to refer to statistics that reveal the fact that since the coming of the Spanish conquerors among the Indian people,—at least speaking of those south of the Rio Grande, clear on through Mexico and down to Central and South America,—nine-tenths of them have succumbed. That is in a period of about four hundred years. Mathematically calculating it would not take long for the other one-tenth to be wiped out, for it seems that the same condition of strife and war and bloodshed prevails among them. Looking at it naturally it almost looks as though not even a remnant of them might be left. But in this respect, and in order that my faith may not falter, I take courage from the word of the Lord as it came to Nephi concerning this very thing; for verily he was shown just what would happen among this people, that his own branch should be destroyed at the hands of their brethren, and that his brethren should dwindle in darkness and unbelief, and that there should be wars and strife among them for generation after generation. But the Lord said to him something that must have been very consoling to him, and indeed, my brethren and sisters, it is very consoling to me. Speaking of the great Gentile nation that should be brought in to bring them down and to inhabit the land, the Lord maintains that it is the land of the inheritance of the sons and daughters and the descendants of Lehi, to whom he gave this land as a perpetual inheritance. And in this connection the Lord says to Nephi as recorded in the thirteenth chapter of first Nephi:

"Nevertheless, thou beholdest that the Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity, and have been lifted up by the power of God above all other nations, upon the face of the land which is choice above all other lands, which is the land that the Lord hath covenanted with thy father that his seed should have for the land of their inheritance; wherefore, thou seest that the Lord God will not suffer that the Gentiles will utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed, which are among thy brethren. Neither will he suffer that the Gentiles shall destroy the seed of thy brethren."

So I take it, my brethren and sisters, that these prophecies and promises are valid. The Lord intends to redeem that people. He intends to redeem them through those of us who are brought out from among the Gentile nations and who in very deed believe the words of the book that has come to us. I testify to you with those who have testified before me that it is the word of God. It has been revealed through the instrumentality of the greatest prophet that has resided in this world, save it be the Son of God himself; and it will stand the test of time. It will stand the test of any investigation that can be brought to bear and in the end it will triumph. The Lord help us to believe it and help us to act well our part in carrying out the work assigned to us in this great work of the Lord, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

An ancient prophecy, in the second chapter of Isaiah, contains, in the first four verses, two notable predictions. In the fifth verse the prophet makes this telling appeal to the people of Jacob: "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."—Isaiah 2:5.

WHAT PEOPLE DESIRE TO KNOW

I received a letter the other day from Evanston, Wyoming. The writer said that in recent remarks in this tabernacle I indicated that there are characteristic differences between the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and other churches. My correspondent adds that I failed to point out the differences. I attempted then to point out that our missionary system is one of the characteristic features of our Church work. I hope this afternoon briefly to indicate another outstanding feature.

In the ninth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, it is said:

"And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the High Priest.

"And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way"—that is, any who are disciples of the Lord, any of the believers in the Gospel of Jesus Christ—"men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem."

THE LIGHT AND THE VOICE

"And as he journeyed, he came near to Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

"And he fell to the earth and heard a voice."—Acts 9:1-4.

He saw a light and he heard a voice. Later, Paul the Apostle appears before King Agrippa in his own defense: and, standing before this great king, he said, telling this same story:

"Whereupon, as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests,

"At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed, with me.

"And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me."—Acts 26:13, 14.

Notice that he says: "I saw a light," "I heard a voice." It was a vision.

EFFECTS OF THE VISION

We have seen that Isaiah says:

"O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."
—Isaiah 2:5.

That light from heaven which shone into the life and soul of Saul transformed him from a man who was persecuting the followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene to one who thereafter gave them his most loyal and ardent support. It changed him from a man of hate to a man of love. It is that spirit—something that comes into the human heart—that we believe in these days results when one in authority, placing his hands upon those who are faithful and repentant, says to them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

Ours is a land of liberty and freedom, especially a land of religious freedom. Its motto, "In God we trust," might well have come from that remarkable picture—that scene of which we all have read—Jesus the Son of God, in the Garden of Gethsemane upon his knees. That is the spirit which has characterized leading people of the United States in the entire history of our nation.

THE SPIRIT OF AMERICA

Have you examined the special stamp issued in 1928 by the United States government? In the left-hand corner is this inscription: "1778"; in the right-hand corner, "1928"—one hundred and fifty years later. Between these two dates are the words "Valley Forge"; and on the stamp, the stamp of the United States government, officially made in the year of our Lord 1928, is Washington, the father of his country, upon his knees. The motto of our country, as it appears upon our dollar, is: "In God We Trust." To this land of liberty—of religious freedom—people came that they might worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. During the first critical period, they were led by George Washington, who frequently and effectively sought divine aid.

THE WISDOM OF FRANKLIN

Standing in the Constitutional Convention, Benjamin Franklin said :

"Mr. President, I perceive that we are not in condition to pursue this business any further. Our blood is too hot. We indeed seem to feel our own want of political wisdom, since we have been running about in search of it. We have gone back to ancient history for models of governments and examined the different forms of those republics which, having been formed with the seeds of their own dissolution, now no longer exist. In this situation of this assembly, groping as it were in the dark, to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of light to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible to danger, we had daily prayer in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard; and they were graciously answered.

"To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting, in peace, on the means of establishing our future national felicity; and have we now forgotten that powerful Friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need his assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time; and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men."

THE FAITH OF LINCOLN

No less a man than Abraham Lincoln, foremost and most typical of Americans, was wont to retire into his office, and there, behind a locked door, to appeal to divine providence for help and guidance. While the fearful Civil War was raging, Lincoln issued a proclamation setting apart the 30th day of April, 1863, as a day of fasting and prayer. In this choice land, "choice above all other lands" (II Nephi 1:5), he appealed to the people to go into their various places of worship, to assemble around their own hearthstones, and to appeal to the Most High for divine direction :

"Whereas it is the duty of nations as well as of men to own their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions in humble sorrow, yet with assured hope that genuine repentance will lead to mercy and pardon, and to recognize the sublime truth, announced in the Holy Scriptures and proven by all history, that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord;

"And, insomuch as we know that by his divine law nations, like individuals, are subjected to punishments and chastisements in this world, may we not justly fear that the awful calamity of civil war which now desolates the land may be but a punishment inflicted upon us for our presumptuous sins, to the needful end of our national reformation as a whole people? We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our own hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us.

"It behooves us, then, to humble ourselves before the offended Power, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness.

"Now, therefore, in compliance with the request, and fully concurring in the views, of the Senate, I do by this my proclamation designate and set apart Thursday, the 30th day of April, 1863, as a day of national fasting and prayer. And I do hereby request all the people to abstain on that day from their ordinary secular pursuits, and to unite at their several places of public worship and their respective homes in keeping the day holy to the Lord and devoted to the humble discharge of the religious duties proper to that solemn occasion.

"All this being done in sincerity and truth, let us then rest humbly in the hope authorized by the divine teachings that the united cry of the nation will be heard, on high and answered with blessings no less than the pardon of our national sins and the restoration of our now divided and suffering country to its former happy condition of unity and peace."

THE POWERS OF HEAVEN

The spirit of America, the spirit of Lincoln, is most distinctively that spirit which appeals to the powers of heaven.

Considering now a time more recent, have you not all read the words written during the last sixty days by Calvin Coolidge, until recently President of the United States? He, an American with the American spirit, tells us just what he did when he learned officially of the death of President Harding. The word came to him in the night. He says: "I arose and put on my clothing"—and then, to quote his exact words—"before leaving that room I knelt down * * * and asked God to bless the American people, and to give me power to serve them." That act illustrates anew the spirit of our country.

One month and two days ago today, in the city of Washington, I had the genuine pleasure of listening to the inaugural address of President Hoover. His closing words were: "I ask the help of Almighty God in the service of my country." Do we not find in these words the spirit of America? That spirit is found not only in words that were uttered long ago; for these words express the actual spirit of America today. Our land has been made sacred by the prayers of its people.

ANOTHER MODERN INSTANCE

Can anyone be surprised, therefore, that a hundred years ago, a boy fourteen years old, no more, seriously religious, and given to reading the scriptures, was led, like these leaders, by the same American spirit? For when he came to the words of Scripture (James 1:5), "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, * * * and it shall be given him," he followed this advice and sought his Heavenly Father in prayer.

How appropriate it was that in this religious country, following the example of its great men, he should go straightway into the sacred grove and there make his appeal to the Most High.

VISIONS OF LONG AGO

Saul of Tarsus, afterwards Paul the Apostle, saw a light, heard a voice, beheld a vision. Since visions and revelations were possible then, are they not possible now? To those who accept this book called the Bible, to those who believe its words concerning Paul, may I not ask again: Since it was possible for him to hear a voice, to see a light, was it not possible for this boy, believing and hoping, also to see a light, to hear a voice, to receive a vision? We hold that as a result of this boy's visions, the inspiring prophecies I quoted at the beginning are now being fulfilled.

Consider another Scripture: John the divine heard a voice that said: "Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter."—Rev. 4:1.

This is a strong statement: Not things that may be; not things that will probably be; but "things which must be hereafter."

John adds this declaration:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."—Rev. 14:6.

We hold that the fulfilment of that prophecy came as the result of an appeal made by a boy with faith believing, as he knelt in the sacred grove. John the Revelator, with inspired insight had the vision, and drew the picture; and the angel he beheld has flown through the midst of heaven, bringing the everlasting Gospel to be preached to all people.

IN THE TOPS OF THE MOUNTAINS

We have seen that Paul saw a light, heard a voice. Joseph Smith saw a light and heard a voice; and as a result of his vision these prophecies have been and are being fulfilled.

Let us now return to the two quotations referred to in the beginning: "And it shall come to pass in the last days"—I draw attention to "the last days"—"that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it."—Isaiah 2:2.

Over the radio or otherwise, you who desire to know something that is peculiar to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, may take this as one of the characteristic things: The mountain of the Lord's house is established in the top of the mountains. It is here, exalted above the hills. Unto it all nations have already come. If I were to call the names of all the nations this afternoon and were to ask those to stand who have descended from people of these various nations, I believe there would be a demonstration that this outstanding prophecy has been and is being fulfilled.

THE PRESENT SPIRIT OF PEACE

That is the first part. Consider now the second:

"And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah 2:3, 4.

That also is a prophecy now being fulfilled. Then come the words already referred to: "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord."

Our papers, our literature, our magazines, have been filled during recent years with articles that endeavor to point out the way to peace. Peace is in practically every issue. In the Deseret News last night I noticed an article, asking whether or not the entrance of the United States into the World Court will be given consideration in the coming special session of Congress. The League of Nations—see what it is accomplishing. Statesmen, scholars, educators, men of money, in every country are struggling to bring peace to the world. Clearly in fulfillment of this prophecy are the following: the Locarno pact, a marvelous step forward in the interest of peace; the effort put forth by the United States in the virile words, "The outlawing of war," in the Briand-Kellogg peace pact, made for the express purpose of renouncing war; the United States going into the World Court. The article that I read last night indicates that the President of the United States, while he has publicly expressed no definite opinion, has such an intense interest in the World Court that the new formula prepared by Elihu Root and the jurists of the nations will, without doubt, be acceptable to him.

"IN THE LAST DAYS"

In all this we are not talking about the peace of one nation, nor of a few, but of many nations—all the countries of the world, the jurists of the nations, the wise men of our day. "In the last days, the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains."

The Lord is to judge among the nations, and to rebuke many people. They are to beat their swords into plowshares, their spears into pruning-hooks. Nations are not to take up swords against nations any more.

This is the place. This is the time. This is the Church. These prophecies are being fulfilled. I say unto you, who have gathered in the top of the mountains, where the mountain of the Lord's house is exalted above the hills, let us, in the language of Isaiah, walk together in the light of the Lord, that we may be united and walk in purity, love, honesty, and truth; that all prophecies made concerning us may be fulfilled.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy

The sincere prayer in my heart this moment, my brethren and sisters, is that I may be inspired and directed by the Spirit of the Lord to say something to you that will comfort you if you mourn; to say something that will encourage you if you are discouraged. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart * * * and thy neighbor as thyself." If each individual knows and feels this truth to be fundamental and lives it, much of our energy will be released to develop our gifts and spiritual lives. We will be patient with our neighbor's faults and excuse them as we do our own. We will help him; we will be kind to him; we will be strictly honest in our dealings with him. We will live a life that will be an example to him.

We have this afternoon some distinguished visitors from Denmark, sitting in the congregation. We bid them welcome to these services. They may recall that above the gate of the University of Denmark at Copenhagen, there is a beautiful eagle with out-stretched wings. Underneath the eagle is a Latin inscription which in English reads: "The eagle is looking toward the celestial light." A lovely and inspiring thought for the youth of Denmark. So we too, my friends are looking toward the celestial light; we are humbly striving with you toward perfection.

My life's work has brought me into close contact with the youth; with young men and young women in colleges and universities. They wish to talk honestly about what life has meant so far, and what it may mean. They are young, intelligent, cultured people; but many of them are taking no part in a spiritual development for themselves; nor are they helping others in this regard. They need awakening religiously. They need to be shown the way, the truth, and the life; and then be given an opportunity for intelligent expressional activity. They must be converted and filled with a spirit of influencing their friends and companions and associates. Besides, these young people write to me from all nations and tongues for help and information and spiritual guidance.

I meet on this Temple Block mission the travelers, the tourists, the students, the professional people, the humble individual who is out for pleasure. All are eager to hear the message of Christ's Gospel—the brotherly Christian religion. They all want to know the history, and the religion of this people. Preachers and ministers of all Christian sects hear us and invite us to come to their churches in their cities and speak to their congregations. I have had invitations to speak in many cities in the United States and in Europe, Japan, and India. The people who come to us are impressed with our lives, our ideals, our religion; and they want it explained to their followers. They want us to do for them what Paul did for Timothy, when he said:

"Wherefore, I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

"Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord; * * * but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God;

"Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Jesus Christ before the world began."

We are able to speak plainly with the people of the world. We must proclaim religion as a way of life, rather than a set of ethical mandates. As Latter-day Saints, we are not left in doubt concerning the things that really spell value and that endure. Unfortunately, in the religious controversies of the day, secondary issues have been exalted above primary truths. The Gospel of Jesus Christ has primary truths that must forever and ever regulate human souls unto divine guidance. We cannot very well mistake religion so long as it upbuilds and makes the Christian man. "Righteousness anywhere and everywhere is the paramount sovereign and effectual witness of Christian souls." So on this Temple Block where thousands of people come to visit us, we try to show with love for God and his children that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints upholds the witness that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that the priesthood of God has been restored in this day. This cannot help being the inextinguishable light to all nations and people.

As missionaries, we proclaim religion as a way of life, rather than a set of ethical mandates. As Latter-day Saints we are not left in doubt concerning the things that really spell value and endure. Unfortunately, in the religious controversies of today, secondary issues have been exalted above primary truths. The Gospel of Jesus Christ has primary truths that must forever regulate souls unto divine guidance. We cannot very well mistake religion so long as it upbuilds and makes the Christian man. The Church of Jesus Christ upholds the witness that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, and that the priesthood of God has been restored in this day. This cannot help being an inextinguishable light to all nations and ages.

I think we should proclaim more and more the standard Church works which are the Holy Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price. In them do we find the principles of eternal life; and the holy commandments that teach us to love God, and our neighbors as ourselves. "Love your enemies, * * * do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." In these books do we have the superb procession of idealists which the world needs today. As Latter-day Saints, we should know and keep ever in mind the teachings of the Savior of mankind, and let Jesus Christ be our Guide and our Light. We all realize that life is a struggle, and is filled with so many hardships and pains; so many sorrows and trials. So the supreme power in all this struggle is prayer—the turning to God through Jesus Christ, and adding the force of the eternal to the petty cares of life.

We may well turn to our sacred books from now on more and more, and receive the teachings that they hold for us, for in them do we find eternal life. A word now about our holy books.

The Holy Bible contains the richest and most enlightened thought concerning man and God that has ever been written. The work taken as a whole teaches the fatherhood of God and the great plan of salvation for the human race. God is the Creator of the world and all things therein, and has established through revelation a bond of divine relationship with his children.

Great prophets like Moses, Isaiah, Hosea, Micah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel sought to raise the spiritual life of the times in which they lived. They inspired the people of their countries to believe in God, and to hope for a Redeemer of the world.

The Bible tells of people who became acquainted with each other through international commerce and trade with foreign civilization. It tells about the industrial and civic life of peoples of ancient days, and how they kept alive a monotheism, and morality based on belief in God. They had the highest possible idea of God, who gave to his servants the highest knowledge of moral and religious laws. The New Testament comprises the writings of the Apostles and disciples of Jesus Christ our Lord. These divinely inspired men taught the Kingdom of God and its coming: the Fatherhood of God and the infinite value of the human soul and the higher righteousness and the law of love. These are all to be obtained by obeying the laws and commandments of God, which are fundamentally, faith in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost; the principles of repentance and holy baptism by immersion by one having divine authority; and the conferring of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands by one holding the priesthood of God. The Bible teaches the sanctity of the Church, because only through the incorporation of religion with the Church does religion gain a full actuality for man. The Bible is the first of the standard works of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Book of Mormon teaches that the same Semitic institutions which the forefathers of the American Indians had in their native country in Asia were brought to America, and under new environment and conditions, were developed in this land. Like the Bible, the Book of Mormon makes God and immortality subjects of faith; and public and private righteousness matters of practice. It identifies God with the principle of morality, and goes farther by identifying God with the story of human progress and life, in which mankind is redeemed from evil. It teaches the deeper consciousness between the Almighty and the individual soul, and unfolds the divine purpose in the rise, fall, and progress of nations.

The Book of Mormon tells how the ancient peoples of America built cities and developed a rich religious and political life, and in time how Jesus the Christ gave his teachings to the people, just as his message of salvation was given to the Jews, Greeks, and Romans. The Church of Christ was established on this continent, and his holy priesthood given to those who were chosen for his work. Prophets wrote the history of the people, and their most important message is that God is the Father and Creator of the world and mankind.

The religious teaching of the Book of Mormon is monotheistic, and embodies the revelations of God to his people on this the American continent. Likeness to God is its supreme aim, and the highest duty of man is, "Ye shall be perfect, even as your Heavenly Father is perfect."

The Pearl of Great Price embodies the visions of Moses as revealed to Joseph Smith the Prophet in 1830. It also comprises the Book of Abraham which is a translation of some ancient records from the catacombs of Egypt, to which are added the writings of Joseph Smith concerning his first vision and revelation, and his baptism and ordination. The principal part of the Book of Moses treats of the work of God in the creation of the world and of man. God is the Creator of the Universe and the Father of the race, and in God's image man is created.

The teachings of the Pearl of Great Price are in complete harmony with the Holy Bible. Man has fallen below his higher self and the divine principle of the moral law has been lost. There is the same pure monotheism, the same personal conception and moral character of God; and his command to his children to recognize the supremacy of the law of salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord. It shows the importance of the lofty conception of one living God, who reveals himself to man and enters into gracious relation with him as God and Father.

The Pearl of Great Price gives the true idea of the nature of God. It shows how God became an intense reality in the minds of the ancient Hebrews; and the sublime central thought of the book is that man does not search after God alone, but God draws graciously near to man and manifests himself in person and by his holy influence.

The Doctrine and Covenants contains the revelations of God the Father to Joseph Smith and other prophets of God in this dispensation. It was first published in 1835. It tells about the restoration of the plan of God in the salvation of the human race. It is largely ethical in its message, and, like the Book of Mormon, makes public and private righteousness matters of practice. The book opens by telling of a mighty work that is about to be ushered into the world. This is the restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, with the giving to man of the holy priesthood of God, the Aaronic and Melchizedek, as it existed in the days of the prophets of Israel and at the time of Christ. The outstanding truth of the book is that God is identified as the Father of the race, and the Gospel of Jesus Christ is restored in this day with all its gifts and blessings. It puts the principle of righteousness through obedience to the plan of salvation into the foreground; and all its teachings grow out of the principle that for man to attain the highest development he must place his faith in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, and receive by divine authority the priesthood of God. It also emphasizes the importance of man's spiritual life, and his great mission on earth; as well as the glory of immortality and the power of eternal progression in the hereafter.

May we go on with life more unafraid, and come to a realization of our best selves. I pray God's blessing upon us all. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

There are a number of returned mission presidents whom we would have liked to hear, but time will not permit.

We wish to state that Brother Joseph Wilford Booth, who passed away in Armenia, gave seventeen years of his life as a missionary in that section of the country. No more faithful, God-fearing, humble, splendid man have we had pass away in the mission field.

Sister Martha Horne Tingey has given most splendid work as the president of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association for many years, and as a counselor in the presidency while Sister Elmina S. Taylor presided for many years previous to that time. She retires with the love, the confidence and the blessing of the General Authorities of the Church, and with the love and confidence of all the members of her General Board. All who favor extending to Sister Tingey a vote of appreciation for her most splendid labors will manifest it. (The congregation raised their right hands.)

I think the hands were raised higher for her than for any of the rest of us.

The congregation sang, "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder M. Ezra Sorensen, President of the Bannock Stake.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock Sunday morning.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Sunday morning, April 7th, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., President Heber J. Grant presiding.

All the seats in the great Tabernacle were taken, and the aisles of the building were crowded with people who stood during the services. Many who were unable to get inside the Tabernacle listened to the services as they were broadcast by radio in the Assembly Hall on the Tabernacle grounds.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah."

President Clifford E. Young of the Alpine Stake offered the opening prayer.

The choir sang the anthem, "The Morning Breaks, the Shadows Flee."

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. NIBLEY

My dear brethren and sisters, I approach this task in fear and trembling. That is not a pleasantry or a figure of speech; it is an actual fact. I need your sympathy and faith, and the sustaining influence that it gives.

THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH

We have had a great deal of excellent instruction during our conference. The Spirit of the Lord has accompanied the teachings of the elders, from the President of the Church throughout the whole list of speakers. I have noticed that there has run through their teachings this distinctive thought, that it is only by the Spirit of the Lord that the Church can be built up. I would like to read from the Doctrine and Covenants a few words in respect to that idea. In a revelation found in Section 50, commencing at the 17th verse:

"Verily I say unto you, he that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth or some other way?

"And if it be by some other way it is not of God.

"And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth or some other way?

"If it be some other way it is not of God.

"Therefore, why is it that ye cannot understand and know, that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth?

"Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understand one another, and both are edified and rejoice together.

"And that which doth not edify is not of God, and is darkness.

"That which is of God is light; and he that receiveth light, and continueth in God, receiveth more light; and that light groweth brighter until the perfect day."

The Lord here makes it plain that, in bringing converts into the Church, the teacher must have the Spirit of the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, the light of truth. And the one that receives that testimony must also partake of that same Spirit. Both then, are edified; both are enlightened by the power of the Spirit of the Lord, the one that teaches and the one that receives.

THE SPIRIT OF EVIL

Science has pretty nearly banished a belief in the devil from among thinking people. Irreligious people of the world tell us "that was good enough to frighten children with, a hundred years ago or five hundred year ago; but there is no such power or influence in the world, at all." But they will not tell us, and it cannot be said, that evil does not exist. The origin of evil has been discussed by thinkers of the world for many hundreds of years; but evil is still here, the spirit of evil that which tempts us and leads us away from righteousness. That is here, whether it be of the devil or not; call it devil or satan, or just a general influence extant all over the world. The spirit of good is here, too; the spirit of righteousness is here; it is existant over the entire earth, and I suppose in the universe everywhere.

CONTENDING INFLUENCES

So these two contending influences are here. St. Paul said: "When I would do good, evil is present with me." Have you not found it so? You elders, and you sisters also, in governing in your homes—you brethren in governing in your wards and stakes and missions, have you not found the spirit of evil extant, the spirit of Satan that fights against God? He is not yet conquered; he will be in time. We are told in the revelation of St. John that when we pass on to an exalted state there will be no death, no sorrow, no evil, because Satan will not have power to tempt the saints of God any more but that day has not come yet. That evil one is still wrestling with us. You find it every day. A man goes to the bishop to settle his tithing. He figures it up himself; he settles it in his own mind. Have you ever felt the temptation, something running through your mind like this: "Now, I gave so and so at such and such a time; ought I not to take that out of my tithing?" If you receive a call to go on a mission, have you not felt: "Well now, I have been on a mission; I have been working in the ward, I don't feel that I can go on a mission now?" So, all through the activities of life and the activities of the Church, that tempter abides more or less with us, except as we banish him by the power of the living God, the power of truth by which we receive the truth, that Spirit which I have read to you, that Spirit which leads to life, which makes me say, or you say, if we listen to it: "Why, of course, I will pay my full tithing. Of course I will go on a mission if you brethren want me. That is first all the time."

IF ONLY TO DECEIVE

In Los Angeles a week or two ago I counted, in a newspaper advertisement, thirteen different churches where there were meetings of spiritualists; people who believe that we are operated upon, in our affairs, by these spiritualistic influences. We are told that they do have some kind of communication with these unseen agencies very often. There have been such manifestations for many years in the world, and many notable people who believe in them. One of the most distinguished of these, a great scientist, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, lectured on the subject from this stand. We heard what he had to say, but he brought forth nothing new. I don't know of a single new principle distinctive or of value, I don't know of any truth that makes for the upbuilding and strengthening and the betterment of mankind that has come from that source. And yet those spirits or those influences may sometimes tell us truths, if only to deceive us. Carlyle said of Shakespeare that his intellect was the greatest that this world has yet been blessed with, in any human being; and Shakespeare makes Banquo say regarding these spirits, the witches that appeared to Macbeth: "But 'tis strange and oftentimes to win us to our harm the instruments of darkness tell us truths,"—let me repeat that by way of emphasis—"the instruments of darkness tell us truths,—win us with honest trifles to betray us in deepest consequence."

In another scene of the same great play we are told that Macbeth listened to the voice of the evil one through these same witches who led him on and on toward his ruin, until he saw how he was being deceived, and then he uttered these words: "I pull in resolution and begin to doubt the equivocation of the fiend who lies like truth."

GRACE BEING ADDED TO GRACE

Not so with the Spirit of the Lord, the Spirit of righteousness, the Spirit of this work of which I have read. It leads us the other way. We receive the truth, and more than the truth as reasoned out by man. We receive the light and truth of the Holy Spirit, of the Comforter, which leads to God. Yet have we not at times had some experience with these influences that are trying to draw us away from the Lord, influences of such a character that they are lying like truth? Against them we are constantly warned and must be constantly on guard. They will deceive the very elect, if it is possible, if we listen to them. But if we listen to the other power, then our salvation is sure and certain. We become, as I have read to you, more and more in that spirit which leads to God, grace being added to grace. In another section, on the same subject, are these words:

"I give unto you these things that you may understand and know how to worship, that you may come unto the Father, in my name, and in due time receive of his fulness."

"For if you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fulness, and be glorified in me as I am in the Father; therefore, I say unto you, you shall receive grace for grace."

INTELLIGENCE—LIGHT AND TRUTH

Then can we say truly: "I have received of that witness and testimony, that I know this is the work of God;" and partake of that same spirit which is spoken of a little further on in the same revelation: "The glory of God is intelligence"—not merely intelligence as we understand intelligence—but "in other words, light and truth." What kind of light and truth? What kind of intelligence? Is it the intelligence which men acquire and which we perhaps think is comprised in book learning, or the intelligence which the natural man is capable of acquiring? No, not at all. The glory of God is that intelligence which comprises light and truth. What does this light and truth do for us? "Light and truth forsake that evil one." That is the kind of intelligence; that is the kind of light and truth that is meant—that which forsakes evil and cleaves to good. And so the wayfaring man, the unlettered man, may receive that Spirit of light and intelligence which pertains to the glory of God, and be filled with it. Obeying all the commandments of God he is more intelligent than those even though they may be learned, who do not partake of that Spirit. A man with that intelligence can be taken on and on until he receives a fulness of glory, and he becomes like unto God.

IN NO OTHER WAY

Now, I want to say, in closing, that the presidency of this Church, the Twelve Apostles, the Seventies, the leading brethren in the stakes and wards and missions, can build up this Church only by the Spirit about which I have read to you. In no other way can it be built up; assuredly not by the spirit of man. Churches may be established. Lodges may be organized, many organizations formed for the help and benefit of man—and many of them do much good too, and are praiseworthy; but they have not this distinctive feature that this Church has, which was revealed in the beginning and is emphasized, iterated and reiterated all through the revelations, namely, that without that Spirit of light and truth, that Spirit of the Lord, that Spirit of the Comforter, that power of the Holy Ghost, his Church cannot be built up. If it be attempted by any other way than the Lord speaks of here in the passages which I have read, then it is not of God. So, my brethren and sisters, let us take it to heart; all of us who labor for Zion must know and understand that we must keep that influence and that power which comes from God in our hearts, the light of his Spirit burning in our souls. It is illustrated in what Brother Harris said last night in the priesthood meeting, and what we have often heard, respecting what President Young told Brother Karl G. Maeser when he sent him to take charge of the Brigham Young Academy at Provo. President Young said: "Brother Maeser, I don't want you to try to teach even the multiplication table without the Spirit and influence of the power of God."

You brethren, you sisters—sisters of the Relief Society, those at the head of it, and the sisters of the Primary, and the Young Ladies—you brethren in all the quorums of priesthood, let us get this into our hearts, minds and souls, that we are charged with the responsibility to oversee some portion of the work of the Lord. Get this into our hearts, that by the Spirit of the living God, and only by that power and Spirit, can this work grow and prosper and be established. That power and Spirit does not come from the wisdom of man. It pertains to the glory of God, which is intelligence, the kind of intelligence which forsaketh that evil one. May we keep that, my brethren and sisters, in our minds firmly; get it rooted in our hearts and souls; and then work in humility, in faith, and he will increase our power, by which means, as I have read to you, we will be helped to go from grace to grace until we become filled with that Spirit to the fulness of power and glory, filled with the Spirit of power which forsakes that evil one to walk in the light of God's countenance, to his glory and honor. By that influence and power, and by none other, will this work prosper and his kingdom come.

The Lord bless us all, I pray, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SYLVESTER Q. CANNON

Presiding Bishop of the Church

It is a cause of rejoicing to me, my brethren and sisters, to be privileged to meet with you in this grand conference. The instructions that have been given and the spirit and power that have been manifest have been a source of great joy and satisfaction to me.

I am very grateful for the fellowship of my brethren of the First Presidency and the other General Authorities, and of these brethren who preside in the stakes and wards, and of all the members of this Church. I rejoice in the faith and devotion of the Latter-day Saints, and the spirit of love and kindliness which characterizes their lives and actions.

VITAL STATISTICS KNOWN ABROAD

In President Grant's opening discourse he cited some vital statistics of the Latter-day Saints. In listening to them I was reminded of the fact that these statistics, which are collected by the Church, are recognized abroad. For instance, President Grant called attention to the fact that our birth rate is about 30 per thousand, and our death rate about 7.5 per thousand. I think that during the past year it was 7.8 per thousand. For the last three or four years previously the ratio has been about four births per death.

Recently, Dr. Max Haenle of the University of Erlangen, Germany, who had been visiting in the United States for some time, called upon us and told us that a number of the prominent sociologists of Germany were interested in these figures and could hardly believe that among the Latter-day Saints, or among any people, there could be such a high ratio of births to deaths. Because, ordinarily, where people have a high birth rate they also have a high death rate.

EXTENT OF CHARITY ASSISTANCE

President Grant also referred in his discourse to the work that is being done by the Latter-day Saints in the way of charity and the distribution of funds for the welfare of those in need. I should like this morning for a few moments to discuss some phases of this work that is being carried on by the Church.

The Lord Jesus Christ, while he was upon the earth, stressed the importance of helping those who are in need. In these latter days, through the revelations of the Lord, it has been made plain to us that the poor should be looked after; and that we should give of our means to help them. There should be manifest on our part proper consideration and interest in the welfare of others.

FASTING AND FAST DONATIONS

In this connection I would like to call your attention to the importance of a principle that I believe we are neglecting. That is the principle of fasting and the giving of fast donations. The reports of the Church as a whole last year indicate that the average per capita fast offering was twenty-two cents per year. This is based on the total membership. Actually about one-eighth of the members paid fast donations, and the average amount for those who donated was $1.70 per capita for the year. I am inclined to think that many of us are failing to observe the principle of fasting. Fasting in moderation is a sound health principle. It is also a principle that promotes faith and spirituality. It is a powerful means, in connection with prayer, for the gaining of desired blessings. The Lord Jesus Christ emphasized this fact. Also, in the revelations given to us in these days, he has declared that fasting and prayer will bring results that otherwise may not be obtained. If every one of us were to fast and were to give the equivalent in value of our fast one day per month it would provide sufficient means in the Church to take care of all those who are in need. I believe that if this same principle were observed throughout the United States there would be ample funds to provide for all the charity requirements of the nation. I am sure that when we fast our hearts are more open to consider those who are in need. I commend, therefore, to the Latter-day Saints and to the presidents of stakes and bishoprics of wards the importance of stressing the observance of the fast day and of directing the thoughts and minds of the people towards those things that are for the mutual welfare and blessing of the Church as a whole.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL WELFARE

The Latter-day Saints are recognized by the people of the world as being greatly interested in the welfare of those who are in need. We are giving, I believe, in proportion to our membership, more attention and greater service to those who are in need of help than any other community in all the world.

I am reminded of a statement that was made by a rather prominent official who came here some time ago,—a representative of one of the prominent national welfare organizations. He made some investigations in this city and state, and after his return east he wrote a letter of which the following is an extract:

"The Church is certainly doing a great deal for its people and I would like to say to you some things that I have said ever since my return to New York,—I believe that your Church group as a whole has the most socialized outlook on welfare matters of any group with which I have come in contact."

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THOSE IN NEED

As the Lord has given this responsibility to the Church of looking after those who are in need, we recognize the importance of it. Yet the primary responsibility for the welfare and care of those in need is not upon the Church. You remember the Apostle Paul said upon one occasion:

"But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

Not only the moral responsibility rests upon those who are related to the family proper, to take care of those who are in need, but in this state at least, the legal responsibility rests upon them to take care of their relations. I can hardly conceive of parents, who have the means, expecting the Church or the state to take care of their children who may be in need. Nor can I see how children who have means can feel that the Church or the state should be responsible for the care of their parents if they are in need. In this connection let me state that statistics show that, generally speaking, those Latter-day Saints who observe the principle of tithing are less dependent in their old age than are those who are not faithful in the observance of this commandment. Next to the relatives, the state law recognizes that the counties are responsible for the care of the poor.

DANGERS OF INDISCRIMINATE GIVING

The Church, while it has no legal responsibility, does undertake to supervise and to help to see that no one suffers. That is the spirit of this work. It is important that in our charity work we should learn how to act in such a way as to promote the greatest welfare of those who are in need, and at the same time to avoid that indiscriminate giving which tends to cause dependence rather than promote independence. The spirit of the Gospel and the policy of the Church have always been to try to help people to help themselves, to endeavor to place them in a position where they can be relieved of dependence and of difficulty and secure conditions which will promote progress and prosperity.

FAMILY THE BASIC UNIT

The family is the basic unit of society and of the Church. We should all strive to maintain happy normal families to the end that there may be perfect unity, happiness and peace, and that the religious influence and the spirit of the Gospel, may prevail in all these homes.

CARE OF ORPHANS AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN

Among other things the care of the orphan is upon us as well as upon the state. Of course the responsibility rests primarily upon public institutions. We recognize the fact, however, that it is better that orphan children should be placed in foster homes than in institutions. In general it is found that a home is far better for a child than any institution can be. And so, with the approval of the First Presidency and in a modest way, we are inaugurating the policy of endeavoring to take care of orphan boys. We are also seeking to find foster homes for neglected children who cannot be properly taken care of in their own homes. This is being done in co-operation with the Relief Society. We have the Lund Home for boys and are undertaking now to make that more of a clearing house for boys than an institution where they will be kept continuously for long periods. We are trying to place them in suitable homes with kind and loving foster parents, members of the Church, who will seek to train them in righteousness and have an influence over them in the home that they cannot obtain elsewhere. In like manner we are planning to help orphan girls, or those who are dependent or neglected, to place them in other suitable homes if they cannot be taken care of in their own homes.

REQUIREMENTS FOR NORMAL FAMILY LIFE

Students of social welfare recognize five essential factors to a normal, happy family life. These factors are, first, health; second, employment; third, education; fourth, recreation; and fifth, spiritual welfare. The causes of poverty may be various unfavorable conditions such as sickness, unemployment, infirmity, improvidence, injury or mental or physical deficiency. Now we are concerned in the Church with seeing to it that so far as possible all those who are in need are aided to gain permanent relief. Not that they should be given financial help only, but have other careful attention. An investigation should be made in kindness, in sympathy and wisdom, and under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord, as expressed by President Nibley this morning, to determine what their needs may be. If they are suffering from ill health we should provide suitable medical or nursing care and see also that they receive the healing ordinances of the Gospel. If they are lacking employment we should try to obtain suitable employment for them through the co-operative supervision of the Bishopric and the Relief Society. In case of improvidence, if people are spending more than they earn, of course that spells ruin,—it means failure. It is important that they should be taught how to budget their accounts. As President Nibley has sometimes said, they must spend less than they earn. Otherwise they cannot expect to make progress and gain success. If they are lacking in education we should plan ways and means for them to gain education. Also it is very desirable that proper recreation shall be provided the membership that they shall be trained in spiritual things and become established in the truth of the Gospel.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

With regard to the matter of employment, it seems to me that the training of our young people generally in vocational education,—in the learning of trades and professions,—is of vital importance. We find that many of those who seek employment are without any specialized training, and yet this is an age of specialization. Increasing specialization is being required in all of the various vocations and professions. It is a wonderful thing for our young people to be trained and developed in those lines of activity whereby they may be able to gain a useful, successful livelihood, and make steady progress in the affairs of life.

PROVIDING OF EMPLOYMENT

Responsibility rests upon the various agencies to endeavor to secure and provide employment for those in need. In times of slack private industrial undertakings and enterprises, it is the responsibility of the cities and counties and states, to provide public work for those who are in need in order to avoid having to give help without return. Otherwise, people become dependent and do not develop the responsibility that they should carry. The dole system in England is evidence of the kind of policy that is wrong in principle. On the other hand, if provision can be made for more extensive public work in slack times by the public corporations, a great deal can be done to help men to help themselves and to make them feel that independence which everyone ought to have.

BISHOPRICS, RELIEF SOCIETY, AND SOCIAL SERVICE

Now, with regard to the matter of investigation of those in need: We feel that it is very desirable that the bishoprics throughout the Church call upon the Relief Societies to assist them by rendering that service for which they are preparing under the direction of the General Board of Relief Society. Every case of need should be investigated carefully, tactfully and sympathetically. Following the investigation the bishopric and Relief Society can determine what is needed to relieve the conditions, thereupon the form of relief needed should be provided. It should be kept in mind that while the Church agencies are doing all of this work, any financial help should first be sought from those who are responsible therefor.

We are desirous that in all of the wards throughout the Church the officers of the Relief Society who are being trained in the essentials of social welfare work, in common sense and good judgment, shall, in kindness, endeavor to help those who are in need to solve their problems, in order that they may become more useful and successful members of the Church and of society. I am sure that every one of us realizes the importance of striving to so prepare ourselves, and to so qualify for the labors of life, that we may be able not only to be free of any help from the Church, but that, on the contrary, we may be able to be of service to the Church in a spiritual way, and also to help in a financial way to advance the purposes which the Lord has in view in the formation of this great work. It requires not only labor, it requires also means. If every one of us can qualify and be placed in such position that we can help rather than be helped we shall feel much happier. We shall rejoice, the Lord will bless us, and we will go forward as united, happy families. I desire to suggest therefore, that if the bishops of wards will place greater responsibility upon the Relief Society, under their direction, they will be relieved of much detail. At the same time the Relief Society can function in one of the great objectives for which this organization has been formed.

DEVELOPMENT OF INDUSTRIES

In order to provide more employment we need more industries. We should all seek in our various communities to develop those industries that shall be for the welfare of the people and for our own progress and prosperity. So far as possible no raw material should be shipped out from our midst. We should take the available raw materials and put them in finished state for consumptive use. If we will do these things we will be prospered and blessed, and greater headway will be made, and greater satisfaction prevail in the various communities of the Church.

Our ideal in all these efforts should be generally to secure happy, prosperous, religious homes. That the Lord may help and bless us to sense our responsibility, that we may endeavor to act wisely in all these things, and partake of the spirit and power of the Gospel, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet, "An Angel from on high," was sung by Cyril Martin and Ida Hepworth, the choir joining with them in singing the chorus.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

As I have anticipated the discharging of this great responsibility my mind has continually dwelt upon the value of true religion and of right thinking as the important factor in a truly religious life.

I was pleased to hear President Grant in his all too brief address at the opening of this conference stress the necessity of religion in life. I am in perfect accord with all he said and with the entire proceedings of this Conference.

TRUE RELIGION

I believe that the most important need of the world today is true religion.

True religion has three manifestations; first, the thought, the feeling, the mental and spiritual attitude of the individual toward his God; second, worship; and third, service to one's fellows. Evidently a man may conform to the outward forms of worship yet not be religious. But a man must be religious if he direct his thoughts and his words towards God and let his worship and acts among his fellows follow in accordance therewith.

WRONG THINKING

Charles Foster Kent in his Life of Jesus, speaks of "The Fatal Crime of Wrong Thinking;" and approximately two thousand years ago one of the greatest leaders and one of the ablest and wisest of men said: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." No one emphasizes this truth more strongly than did Jesus. "With him," says Kent, "the deadly sins were not neglect of the ritual, nor even crime punishable by the laws of all civilized nations, but wrong ideas, motives and feelings. He decried the fatal effect of hatred and jealousy in the mind of the individual more vehemently than he did the act that hate and jealousy prompt."

Let me cite two instances. On one occasion Jesus said regarding the evil effect of harboring anger:

"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment;

"But I say unto you, That he who is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment."

Thus the Savior emphasized the fatal effect of wrong thinking. He knew that if the mind could be directed rightly, if the evil thought and tendency could be resisted, as President Nibley mentioned this morning, the evil act would be minimized. Jesus does not lessen the seriousness of these acts, or say that we should not punish them, but he emphasizes the greater need of keeping the thoughts clean, the mind pure. An evil tree will bring forth evil fruit; a good tree will bring forth good fruit. Keep the tree pure, the thoughts pure, and the fruit will be pure and the life pure.

Again, he decried the evil of cherishing anger.

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

"Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother."

Note how that is worded:

"If thou rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee"—not only if thou hast ought against thy brother.

A double meaning in that. A man at the altar who would truly keep his life in harmony with the fundamental principle of religion should go to his brother who might be harboring ill will against him, and before rendering the act of worship, seek understanding and reconciliation. In similar phrases the Savior emphasizes time and time again the necessity of thinking right and the evil of wrong thinking. This is the case in his admonition not to condemn one another: "Judge not (or condemn not) that ye be not condemned."

Now, brethren and sisters, these illustrations will suffice to emphasize the point I have in mind, that in true religion, the fundamental thing is to keep our thoughts right towards our God and towards our fellow men.

UNSTABLE OPINIONS

Now what are the sinful influences around us that tend to divert young people's minds, from this right channel? We are living in an age which, measured by the standards of the Gospel, is full of unstable opinions; and into that world of shifting uncertainty our young people are thrown. Think for a moment how their thoughts are diverted from our standards as they read some of the articles in current magazines.

From a leading magazine of the last month, I have culled, just at random, this in relation to religion:

Academic scholars who are shaping the thoughts of youth are declaring that one religious faith is just as good or just as useless, according to the professor's particular viewpoint, as another. "Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaism, Christianity, all spring from the same source, and in the ultimate analysis mean the same thing."

That is one of the things which I call unstable, and which threaten young people with an influence that will throw them into the fatal crime of wrong thinking. In customs, and fashions, what was considered bad taste yesterday, has become quite acceptable today.

In regard to the ideals of success and the standards that lead to success, I quote this surprising statement:

"Success is not the result of hard work, clean living and personal integrity. The vulgar, proud and haughty, not the meek, inherit the earth."

Young men and young women read those things, and their minds are diverted from the channel of right thinking and right living. Unstable opinions, shifting uncertainties!

SINFUL INFLUENCES

Again the wholesomeness of our ancestral home-life is questioned. That thought too is leading our young people to think in a wrong direction.

Modesty, "that diamond setting to female beauty," is in some circles considered prudish, puritanic; and the influence is leading astray some of our girls who are susceptible to the influence of society.

Ride along the highway, see the obnoxious and sometimes obscene advertisements, how they flaunt themselves in the face of every traveler; and even obnoxious advertisements steal into our homes over the radio.

Now, the important question with us today is, what are we doing to counteract this tendency towards fatal wrong thinking? I am going to name only three common phases of our Church which I think are fundamental toward right thinking and right living.

A SENSE OF RESPONSIBILITY TOWARD OTHERS

I should like to name first the duty that rests upon every parent and upon every teacher within this Church to arouse within the mind of the child a sense of responsibility toward other individuals and towards society. The sacredness of personality is a fundamental teaching of Jesus Christ. One great writer in this age, Harry Emerson Fosdick, is right when he says, "Christ thought of personality as the central fact in the universe and used it as a medium of interpretation of all other parts." In the thought he approaches the more sublime teaching of the Lord given through the Prophet Joseph:

"This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

In this truth is found a fundamental principle of true religion, and it touches the very heart of the government of society and the peace of the home. Let the child in the home realize that there are certain things which he cannot do to gratify his own appetite, if in doing so he brings sorrow or inconvenience to other members of the household. A sense of duty to others should be a governing factor in his actions. Let me illustrate: In the paper the other morning was an account of a tragedy of a sixty-five year old mother who ended her life after a struggle of years to keep her boy from the clutches of the law. She did save him until just the other day. The law could not touch him, and she spent her fortune and her life and even scrubbed floors of offices to gratify that boy's selfishness and indulgence. Well, he passed many years without coming in contact with the law, but the crime of wrong thinking was his years ago when he thought that that mother should sacrifice herself to gratify his own indulgence.

O, youth of the land, think of the responsibility of keeping your name unsullied! Think of bringing comfort and happiness to the mother who bore you! There is the fundamental thought that will lead you towards God and worship in true religion. He is a recreant indeed who, to gratify his appetite or his passions, will bring a stain upon the honored name he bears or sorrow to the heart of his mother. If a man come from such a home, with such right thoughts as respecting the rights of other persons and of society, he will not go far wrong in his acts toward his fellowmen.

PRAYER

I wish to name as the second principle a little simple thing which even in the naming this morning will indicate to you perhaps how many have wandered from it, the simple principles of prayer. There are men in our midst who say that prayer is not efficacious. Unfortunately some of our young people believe such fallacious remarks. Prayer is a fundamental principle of religion, the Christian religion particularly, and prayer is a force for good. A praying man is a growing man. He is a powerful man, as we have heard throughout this conference already. Christ said:

"When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

It is said of a superior officer in the great war, that when he was a youth his mind had been so diverted from the truth that he thought prayer was a presumption. One day he found himself engaged in a conflict in which earth and heaven seemed to mix. He felt his senses reel, and in the midst of the conflict he found himself crying from his heart: "O God, let me not lose my head, for my men's sake!" He wrote afterwards: "That prayer was answered, and the D. S. O. which I now wear is the result of God's answering that prayer. I sometimes think I should deposit it in some church, but when I look at that bit of ribbon it reminds me of my prayer."

We are not in a great conflict of nations as were that soldier and his comrades; we are not seeking the life-blood of each other, but I tell you every day that we start out on our daily work and mingle with our fellows we enter into conflict, and it is the appropriate thing for every young man in the world to say in secret, to think and feel in his heart, "O, let me not lose my head this day as I meet temptation, as I am tempted to misjudge my fellows. Keep me from trespassing upon the rights of others."

REVERENCE

A third principle that contributes to right religious attitude is reverence—reverence for the Sabbath day and all things sacred. Reverence directs thought toward God. Without it there is no religion. Let us not make Sunday a holiday. It is a holy day, and on that day we should go to the house of worship and seek our God. If we seek him on the Sabbath day, get into his presence on that day, we shall find it less difficult to be in his presence the following days of the week. There should be more reverence for the house of worship. I am offended when I see in Sunday School, or perhaps in Mutual, members leave the service after having rendered a musical number. Undoubtedly, they go to some other place to render the same service. Even that is not sufficient justification for the mark of seeming irreverence in leaving a worshipping assembly. Better secure somebody who can stay throughout the service, for the assembly in a dedicated chapel is in the presence of God. All are supposed to have come to meet him and worship him, and there should be present that spirit of order and reverence which will direct the worshipers' thoughts in the right channel.

God help us to serve him with our minds, might and strength. With kind consideration for all mankind and particularly for those who have given us honored names and pure lives; with prayer and reverence in our hearts, may we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, that all other things may be given to us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

I confess I am taken somewhat by surprise in being called upon to occupy this position, for, as I saw the time of the General Conference rapidly slipping away and contemplated the great number of those yet, presumably, to be heard from, I thought surely I can quietly retain my seat without fear of being called upon to face this vast congregation; but now that I am called I sincerely hope that I may enjoy the favor of the Lord while I stand before you.

President Grant emphasized in his opening address the importance of religion and quoted from some eminent authorities an opinion that religion is the true basis of all morality. I heartily concur in that opinion. I do not believe that there is any morality independent of religion. The present policy of the Church, as announced by President Grant, in withdrawing from secular education, must not be construed by the people as a withdrawal from the great cause of education; but it does seem like an unnecessary duplication of work for the Church to undertake to do, in an adequate way, what is already being so well done by our public schools.

The greatest work of the Almighty is to educate his children. This Church itself is a great institution of learning and is charged with the responsibility of educating the world, and, in this connection, with particular reference to our secular education, our public schools are rendering to us and to our Church in common with our fellow citizens of other religious views and their churches, a splendid service in the accomplishment of this divine purpose, namely, the education of mankind.

That education, from our point of view, is primarily the work of the Church is fully borne out by these illuminating aphorisms found in our own modern scriptures and the writings of the Prophet Joseph Smith: "The glory of God is intelligence." "No man can be saved in ignorance," and "A man is saved no faster than he gets knowledge." From which we may assume that the great work of the Master is one of education. From the very beginning it has been so. Our first parents were led to partake of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, a very important part of our education. Was that a calamity to the world or to them? No! On the contrary it was a wonderful blessing. Cast out of the Garden of Eden where all was peace and tranquility, for its governing law had been violated; but admitted into this world of struggle and strife—this school of experience where we are still partaking of the fruit of that tree. Blessed are we if, with the knowledge thus obtained, we choose the good and reject the evil.

Education then is manifold. It has to do with everything pertaining to the growth and development of mankind. It is secular but also spiritual, mental and physical; moral and religious education go hand in hand—the training of the heart and of the hand—all are included in the curriculum of "God's Great School."

In our quest for knowledge it is strange, but interesting, to observe its reaction upon the human mind as manifested in the varying attitudes of mankind towards God and religion. Some have become atheists—some agnostics, some believers. Atheists who deny the existence of God, who say there is no God, how foolish! How can one look out into this natural world where everything bears the impress of divinity and continue to maintain such an attitude? Is such a condition of mind due to superior knowledge? Is it not more likely due to the lack of it?

"A little learning is a dangerous thing.
Drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring."

What benefit comes from such an attitude? Does it produce happiness? Or promote morality? Or in any way benefit mankind? Certainly not! It sets God aside and thus removes the very basic principle of all true morality. It having no reverence leads to profanity and defiance, thence rebellion against God and hence leads to profanity and defiance, thence rebellion against God and his counsels and disregard of one's fellow man, for the love of God and the love of man are inseparable. What is the basis of such morality as may be found among atheists? Not the fear of God for they say there is none. What then? Let me answer that question: It is the fear of Man. Society imposes penalties upon evil doers. Jails and penitentiaries are built for them. So if they desire to mingle in society and avoid the penalties they must maintain a certain degree of morality and decency; but those whose morality is built upon this foundation say to themselves: "If the law does not forbid (and there are many evils which the law does not forbid) or if we can only gratify our evil desires without being found out, then we may carry on, without compunction, to our hearts content." What a miserable basis upon which to build the moral life—the fear of man! How foolish! "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God." But when a man fears God and has an abiding faith in him, he knows that his all-seeing eye will penetrate into the deepest recesses of the heart—he knows that God will find him out. Then we may well say: "Be not afraid of the face of man but fear God and keep his commandments."

The apparent conflict, and let me say it is only apparent, between religion and science, arises from two definite causes. An imperfect knowledge of science on the one hand and an imperfect knowledge of religion on the other. True science is knowledge classified and must be true, hence it is a part of true religion which embraces and accepts all truth. How I rejoice in the wonderful development of science and invention, and I hope I may ever have an open mind ready to receive all knowledge let it come from whence it will, for it has but one source; it comes from God who is the fountain of all truth.

Revelation is truth made known whether that truth be religious or secular. Every invention or discovery, in fact all our understanding comes from God, for "there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." It does not detract from the glory due to the inventor to say that God uses him as an instrument in his hands in bringing truth to light. God sends us his prophets to teach us in the way of life; he also sends us scientists, inventors and discoverers. They too are servants of God and have a part in the great work of educating mankind.

I am not an atheist and deny that knowledge leads to atheism, nor am I an agnostic who holds that nothing can be known beyond material phenomena, who regards faith as a positive weakness, mistaking it for credulity, thus pulling down the blinds and shutting out from his soul the light of faith while he gropes around in darkness and despair. No, I am neither one nor the other. God forbid! I thank the Lord that I have a believing heart and see his hand in all that lies about me. Whether I look out into the starry heavens or watch the budding of the trees and the unfolding of their leaves or whether in my secret chamber where no human eye can see me, I am holding converse with my Maker; I feel and sense his presence in every fibre of my being, and my heart is filled with joy and gladness for the testimony he has given me of the truth of his glorious Gospel as restored to earth in all its primitive purity in these last days, through Joseph Smith the Prophet.

I think sometimes that I am perhaps a philosopher. But do not let that be taken to mean that I am professing great learning, for such is not the case. But if we may say that to be a philosopher means what its classic origin indicates—a lover of wisdom, then am I indeed a philosopher, for I love wisdom; no matter how much I may lack or be wanting in wisdom, yet nevertheless I love it and I want more wisdom. There is no wisdom in denying God or in shutting out the light of faith or in closing one's heart against the whispering of the Holy Spirit. It is rebellion against the Creator of heaven and earth. "The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord," and we are living in the day spoken of by John the Revelator wherein he says:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.

"Saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

Here then is wisdom. O ye inhabitants of the earth, hearken to the words of the prophets. Open your ears and your hearts to that means of knowledge and understanding which God has given unto us through his great teacher, the Holy Spirit, that is striving with all the children of men to bring them back to God, after we shall obtain the education that he has provided for us in this earth-life which we are now living. May God help us to learn our lessons well and to prepare ourselves for that which he has in store for us if we will only accept it; for great is the knowledge, the learning, the education—even the knowledge of the things of God whom to know is life eternal—if we will only be wise in our searching after truth.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

"But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."

May we then receive our diplomas through our diligence and faith in this great school, even the "crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

Of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the California Mission

I feel, my brethren and sisters, that this is a very wonderful privilege that has come to me, and as has already been said by a previous speaker, a tremendous responsibility. I sincerely trust that the Lord's good Spirit, that influence that has been manifested through the proceedings of this conference thus far, may be with me in the few moments that I occupy.

My thoughts naturally dwell upon matters pertaining to missionary work, as my responsibility is in the mission field. I have had a rather unusual and remarkable experience, I feel, while laboring in California. My appointment to that field of labor took place just a little prior to a period of depression in a business way in the states of Utah and Idaho and in other sections, while in California there was a great degree of business activity. Great buildings were being erected, thousands of homes were being built, and new divisions in the great city were being opened up. Men who were out of employment were attracted from many other states and came to California hunting for work. In the days that I have in mind they were quite generally successful in finding employment, and in turn they communicated with their friends and relatives. The result has been a great influx of Latter-day Saints into the state of California.

When I took up my missionary work we had on the records of the California mission about four thousand souls. At the present time we have over ten thousand souls, and there has been taken from the mission some twelve or fifteen thousand members who are in the three stakes that have been organized in California. So our responsibility and our labors to a considerable degree have been to look after these Latter-day Saints who have come there in such large numbers, and it has been necessary to organize fifty, sixty, or seventy branches of the Church. Of course thirty or possibly more of those organizations are now in the stakes that have been established in Los Angeles and San Francisco. But there are people still coming to California. Many of them are disappointed when they arrive, for the reason that opportunities for employment are not as they have been in times gone by: and there are a good many idle men who are anxious to work but who cannot find employment.

This great influx of people has made it necessary to do a large amount of building, and building operations have been made possible by the generous attitude of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I suppose that some of the people do not know that from the funds of the Church liberal contributions are made for the erection of chapel buildings, not only in the stakes of Zion but throughout the missions of the world. We have usually received from the First Presidency from the general funds of the Church at least fifty per cent of the cost of the chapel buildings that have been erected in the California mission, and this fifty per cent, speaking roughly, is sufficient to buy the material that goes into the buildings. The result has been that many buildings have been erected, probably thirty chapels, representing a value of six or seven hundred thousand dollars. Nine of those buildings were commenced during the past year and will be occupied, all of them, during the present year.

The people have operated to a considerable extent in the same manner that this sort of thing was done in pioneer days. Aside from the assistance to which I have referred, the people who make up the branches have given of their skill, (and many of them are mechanics), and they have labored faithfully to build these buildings; sometimes going after the regular day's work was over and working four or five hours, away into the night, that they might have places in which to worship the Lord our God.

We have had wonderful assistance from the missionaries who have been sent to us. I have looked into the faces of stake presidents—Brother Chipman, formerly president of the Alpine stake, Thomas Clark Callister of the Millard stake, President Wayne H. Redd of the San Juan stake,—they have all been in California. President Miles L. Jones, who has now been called to preside over one of the missions in America, and other men, some of them members of stake presidencies, have been with us in California. One of these men said to me yesterday, when I invited him to come again to California: "O, Brother Joseph, I could never again have such a joyful time as I had while I was with you in California." But I am sure he could have just as joyful a time again.

I have been wondering, as I have looked into the faces of these splendid men who are here in this congregation, how these stake presidents came to receive these missionary appointments? My understanding is that they offered their services in response to the call made by the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I understand that there has been a suggestion made by the Presidency that short-term missionaries may in some cases come from the ranks of stake presidents, from the ranks of bishops, and from high councils in the various stakes of Zion. I am sure that these men whom I have named and other men whom I could name, have accomplished a marvelous work in the California mission. I very much doubt if they realize how great has been their ministry and how wonderful their influence. Some of these men when they got into this labor became tremendously interested, so much so that when the usual period of a short-term mission of six months had passed by they did not want to return home and they doubled the period. We have had short-term missionaries who have actually suggested, when it was necessary for them to return, that they be not released. They had the spirit of this work upon them, they felt its importance, and in some instances we have left their names upon the record, and they have come back and have again taken up the work of preaching the Gospel, all at their own expense. Surely God's work is great and marvelous.

We find occasionally new evidences coming to our attention to strengthen us in the work of God. I would like to read an item that has had a remarkable bearing upon my own feelings in regard to the wonder of the work of the latter days. This clipping is from the Los Angeles Examiner, I think of July, 1927. It says:

"Dr. Robert A. Millikan, head of the California Institute of Technology, at Pasadena, yesterday made some startling statements, showing that the question of the existence and traits of these cosmic rays may be considered as scientifically determined, together with the fact that about one-tenth of the energy in the heat and light given forth by our sun and stars is returned from space by these rays. This was of such a striking nature, it opened such perspectives to the imagination and vision of the astronomical and physical features of the universe that the reporter persuaded Dr. Millikan himself to write just his thought, and the doctor wrote: 'It is a legitimate speculation, that since we now have evidence that the sun and stars are actually radiating away their masses in the form of heat and light, somewhere in the universe the reverse of that process is going on, and light and heat are condensing back again into ordinary matter, new stars thus being in the process of forming as old ones disappear.'

"Coming from the one whom many learned men consider the foremost physicist of the world, these statements carry immense weight and portend future research endeavors of a phase new to science and new to all the world."

And then, listen, my brethren and sisters, to this quotation from the Pearl of Great Price, the Book of Moses, as given in vision and translated by the Prophet Joseph Smith:

"And it came to pass that Moses spake unto the Lord, saying: Be merciful unto thy servant, O God, and tell me concerning this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, and also the heavens, and then thy servant will be content.

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: The heavens, they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man; but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine.

"And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words."

The great scientist, or the commentator on his words, declared that the forming of new planets as suggested was new to science and new to all the world; and yet the great prophet of the latter times, not a scientist, made declaration through this vision that the very doctrine that is dawning upon the minds of men was revealed by the Lord God of heaven. Praise to his name!

I hope that we will take the admonitions that have been given, and that our testimonies will hold us secure in the work of God, no matter what information may be presented that may be difficult for us to explain. May God help us to be true to our testimonies and to his cause for ever and ever, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

An anthem, "Let the mountains shout for joy," was sung by a quartet consisting of Hyrum Christiansen, Pearl K. Davis, James N. Astin, and Jessie Williams, with the choir.

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Anchor C. Schow, President of the Lehi Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The closing session of the Conference commenced promptly at 2:00 p. m. President Heber J. Grant presided.

The choral music of the meeting was furnished by the combined Salt Lake and Ogden Tabernacle Choirs, under the direction of Prof. Anthony C. Lund.

The congregation and combined choirs sang the hymn, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning."

Elder Wilford W. Warnick, President of the Timpanogos Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The combined choirs rendered the sacred anthem, "How lovely are the messengers."

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

Some splendid things have been said during this Conference, and I am happy to find myself in hearty accord with them all. It may be supposed that differences of opinion have been expressed by certain speakers. But I do not recognize any such differences. It seems to me that there has been a wonderful unanimity of thought and utterance in the remarks of those who have addressed us.

DIFFERENCES OF VIEWPOINT

What appear to be differences in the teachings of the Lord's servants at times, are not differences in principle, nor in conviction, but only differences of viewpoint. We are all looking at the same object, but not through the same pair of eyes. The splendid discourse of Elder Ballard and the equally interesting talk of President Harris (the latter at the Priesthood meeting) set me to thinking along this line.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

I recall a trip to Rigby stake that I took some years ago, in company with my kinsman, Elder J. Golden Kimball. We were to attend a conference on Saturday and Sunday, but arrived at Rigby in the afternoon of Friday. A woman's meeting was in progress in the basement of the Tabernacle, and one of the sisters was holding forth to a large assemblage of mothers, wives and daughters. As we went in these words fell from her lips: "The girls of today are just as good as their mothers were when they were young—only they know more." And to clinch her argument she quoted a dialogue between a mother and a daughter, in which the mother said: "I never thought of doing such things when I was a girl." "No," answered the daughter, "if you had you'd have done them."

ELDER KIMBALL'S PRO AND CON

The conference opened in due season, and Brother Kimball arose to speak. The first thing he said that interested me was this: "There isn't one man in a thousand that knows how to treat a woman." And the sisters all over the house looked at each other and nodded their heads approvingly. Then Golden fired off the other barrel: "And there isn't one woman in a thousand that knows when she's well treated." I came home more than ever convinced that there are two sides to every question.

THE YOUTH OF ZION

I have faith in the young people of this Church—not because I believe them without fault, nor because I think all are walking in the ways of wisdom and shunning the downward road. I have faith in them because of the character of their parents, because of the ancestry from which they have sprung, and because of the promise made by the God of Heaven, that "this Kingdom shall never be thrown down nor given to another people."

A WORD FOR THE WAYWARD

You parents of the wilful and the wayward! Don't give them up. Don't cast them off. They are not utterly lost. The Shepherd will find his sheep. They were his before they were yours—long before he entrusted them to your care; and you cannot begin to love them as he loves them. They have but strayed in ignorance from the Path of Right, and God is merciful to ignorance. Only the fulness of knowledge brings the fulness of accountability. Our Heavenly Father is far more merciful, infinitely more charitable, than even the best of his servants, and the Everlasting Gospel is mightier in power to save than our narrow finite minds can comprehend.

A PRECIOUS PROMISE

The Prophet Joseph Smith declared—and he never taught more comforting doctrine—that the eternal sealings of faithful parents and the divine promises made to them for valiant service in the Cause of Truth, would save not only themselves, but likewise their posterity. Though some of the sheep may wander, the eye of the Shepherd is upon them, and sooner or later they will feel the tentacles of Divine Providence reaching out after them and drawing them back to the fold. Either in this life or the life to come, they will return. They will have to pay their debt to justice; they will suffer for their sins; and may tread a thorny path; but if it leads them at last, like the penitent Prodigal, to a loving and forgiving father's heart and home, the painful experience will not have been in vain. Pray for your careless and disobedient children; hold on to them with your faith. Hope on, trust on, till you see the salvation of God.

Who are these straying sheep—these wayward sons and daughters? They are children of the Covenant, heirs to the promises, and have received, if baptized, the gift of the Holy Ghost, which makes manifest the things of God. Could all that go for naught?

Something that President Nibley said much impressed me. As I interpreted him, he was reminding us of how Latter-day Saints are made, and how we must build up the Church and Kingdom of God.

A SCENE FROM SHAKESPEARE

Shakespeare, in that wonderful play, "The Merchant of Venice"—I presume you are all familiar with it—pictures a court scene in which Shylock, a Jew money-lender, is suing Antonio, a Christian merchant, whom he hates and would fain destroy. Shylock holds a bond from Antonio for a loan of three thousand ducats, which bond, if the loan be not paid within a certain time, permits the Jew to cut a pound of flesh from the merchant's body, nearest his heart, that being the penalty of the forfeiture. The money not being paid on time—Antonio's ships having been lost at sea—Shylock demands the strict fulfilment of the bond.

Portia, a beautiful and talented lady, disguised as a lawyer, represents Antonio and entreats the Jew to be merciful. Shylock spurns the thought, and insists upon his pound of flesh. Portia then tells him to take it, but warns him to shed no blood, lest he violate the law of Venice, which severely punishes an alien for seeking the life of a citizen. "Take your pound of flesh, but if in the taking of it you shed one drop of Christian blood, or cut off more or less than just one pound of flesh, thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate." Shylock now tries to recede, but the law still holds him. For contriving, though indirectly, against the merchant's life, all his goods are confiscated—half to the State and half to Antonio—and his life "lies in the mercy of the Duke." Then comes a most wonderful decision—wonderful in its supreme absurdity. The Duke, who is the Judge, gives the Jew his life on condition that he "presently become a Christian."

It is hard for me to believe that Shakespeare wrote those words—unless his purpose was to satirize the State of Venice and its method of dispensing justice to Jews. Shakespeare was noted for his rare good sense, and I have always been told that good law is good sense. But where was the good sense of trying to convert a Jew into a Christian by a decree of court? Up to that point the logic is faultless, the wisdom abundantly manifest; after that, it is conspicuous by its absence. Christians, real Christians, are not made that way.

A COLONIZING PROPOSITION

I place beside this fancied incident an experience of my own. I was on a train in the State of Idaho, and had just taken breakfast and resumed my seat in the Pullman coach, when a gentleman came and sat beside me. Said he: "I gathered from your conversation in the diner that you are a Mormon." I nodded assent, and he continued: "I have long desired to talk with some of your leading men. I know only one prominent Mormon"—and he named Rulon S. Wells as the man. "I am deeply interested in colonization, and regard the Mormon people as the most successful colonizers in the world. I have noted the vain attempts made by Baron Hirsch and other wealthy Hebrew philanthropists, to colonize poor Jews from the large Eastern cities upon arid lands in the West; a project upon which they have spent millions, and failed because of the utter lack of experience as colonizers on the part of those whom they have sought to benefit. Now, if the Mormon leaders would form a co-partnership with Baron Hirsch and his colleagues—they to furnish the millions, you the skill as colonizers—what a magnificent work might be accomplished! And mind you, you could stipulate in the contract, that every Jew thus colonized should become a Mormon! And just see how that would build up your Church!" I remained silent, thinking of poor old Shylock and his proposed conversion to Christianity. Does any Latter-day Saint or latter-day sinner within the sound of my voice, believe that this Church could be built up by a colonizing contract or anything else of a commercial character? No; "Mormons" are not made that way.

HOW MADE

There is but one way to build up the Church of God—and that is God's way, not man's. Faith, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the reception of the Holy Ghost under the hands of divinely authorized ministers of the Gospel—these are essentials in the process. That gift of God which imparts a testimony of the Truth, supplemented by toil and sacrifice and continued obedience to the divine will—that is what makes true Latter-day Saints. Divine revelation is the rock upon which this Church is built, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it.

AS DICKENS SAW THEM

What was the character of the early converts to "Mormonism"? They were stigmatized as ignorant and malicious. It was ignorance and malice that so stigmatized them. "Scum of the earth." "off-scourings of civilization"—these were some of the pet names bestowed upon them by their enemies. How utterly unjust, how grotesquely misapplied these epithets, must be apparent to everyone who has any knowledge of the facts. The great Charles Dickens, then a reporter on a London newspaper, after visiting an emigrant ship anchored in the Thames, a ship loaded with Latter-day Saints and about to sail for America, described them as "in their degree the pick and flower of England." And if that be true of England, it is true of America, and true of all the countries from which the Saints of latter days have come. As a matter of fact, they were among the best men and women of their time. Many were descended from the Pilgrims and the Patriots who founded this Nation, and in their veins, as sons and daughters of Israel, flowed the blood of priests and kings, illustrious through a thousand generations.

AN ENGLISH HEROINE

A few years ago I spoke at the funeral of an aged English woman in the town of Payson. She had been at one time a member of the Eighteenth Ward in Salt Lake City, and I was her Bishop. Born in far-away Gloucestershire, as a young girl she joined the Church after hearing the first "Mormon" sermon to which she had ever listened. She went home a Latter-day Saint, and her parents turned her from the door. She had disgraced them, they said, by connecting herself with a people, who, like the early Christians, were everywhere spoken against—the unpopular and despised "Mormons." From that hour she earned her own living, earned it honestly, virtuously, and within ten years, her father, mother, brothers and sisters, by the mercy of God and influenced, no doubt, by her heroic example, had all been gathered into the Church. They emigrated to Utah, and here she continued her good work in the Temple, redeeming hundreds of her dead ancestors and becoming literally a savior to her father's house. Is it not amazing that a little slip of a girl, only nineteen years of age, could manifest such strength of character, such devotion to principle? "Scum of the earth," forsooth! Would to heaven there were more like her! And there are many like her in this Church, many thousands of them, just as true and steadfast as she. They are the mothers, present or prospective, of our boys and girls, men and women of the future.

"I CANNOT MAKE THE SACRIFICE"

Let me now cite a different example. In the State of Ohio in the year 1877, while on my first mission, I formed the acquaintance of a very estimable lady, the widow of a Union officer who had fallen in battle during the Civil War. She loved her departed husband, revered his memory, and expressed for him the fondest, deepest devotion. When I told her of the doctrines of salvation for the dead, marriage for eternity, and the sacred sealings that pertain to the Hereafter—explaining that these were among the purposes for which the Latter-day Saints build temples and officiate therein—she was wonderfully interested. "Do you mean to tell me," she asked, "that if I become a Latter-day Saint I can have such work done for my dear husband, and be his wife in Eternity?" "Yes," said I, and she exclaimed: "I have never heard anything so beautiful, so sublime. Convince me of its truth, and I will be baptized if it were in a lake of living fire." Those were her very words.

"I cannot convince you," I said, "but the Lord can, and will if you ask him." "I will ask him," was her hearty response; and no doubt she did, for she wrote me in a few days to this effect: "The Lord has given me the testimony that I desired, and I am now ready to be baptized." Overjoyed, I answered telling her that I would make up a little party and meet her at a certain point on the shore of Lake Erie, and there baptize her.

The party was made up and about ready to start, when I received another note from her, reading as follows: "I never knew before what a poor, weak, frail creature I am. I thought myself strong enough, brave enough, to take this step—but I am not. If I should become a Mormon, all my friends would forsake me, I would lose my social standing, and my name would be cast out as evil. I cannot make the sacrifice. And yet I believe the doctrines that you have laid before me, and regard you as a true servant of God. I hope the day will come when we can stand upon the same plane as brother and sister in the Church; but I cannot do that now."

I felt no anger—only disappointment and pity. How like the impetuous Peter, I thought, who said to Jesus, "Though all men forsake thee, I will not forsake thee;" and yet, when danger threatened, he denied him thrice—denied that he knew his Savior. But Peter repented, and the Holy Ghost, descending upon him, banished all timidity and made of him a brave man, ready to die for the Master. It is said that when about to be crucified, he begged the boon that it be with his head downward, not deeming himself worthy to die as his Lord had died.

This good woman—for she was a good woman, a child of Israel, no doubt, else why did she believe?—had she been baptized she would have received the Holy Ghost, and it would have heartened and sustained her through every trial. She thought herself brave enough to be baptized in a lake of fire. But when weighed in the balance she was found wanting. It has taken braver women to build up the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

THE IMPELLING MOTIVES

The motives that impelled the founders and early members of this Church were vastly different from the motives generally imputed to them. It was not for gold and silver, houses and lands, nor any of "the good things of this world," that they forsook home and country, crossed the stormy ocean, dragged rickety hand-carts over sun-parched plains and snow-clad mountains, to settle in a wilderness and suffer hardships and privations innumerable, while redeeming the waste and filling it with farms, vine-yards and happy homes. No; it was for God and his Kingdom—nothing less. It was the love of Truth that inspired and impelled them. And they did not wait for Truth to become popular before espousing her cause. The poet Lowell little knew how admirably he was painting their portrait when he penned these glowing lines:

Then to side with Truth is noble,
 When we share her wretched crust,
 Ere her cause bring fame and profit,
 And 'tis prosperous to be just;
 Then it is the brave man chooses,
 While the coward stands aside,
 Doubting in his abject spirit
 Till his Lord is crucified,
 And the multitude make virtue
 Of the faith they had denied.

Perhaps a little verse of my own may not be deemed unworthy of association with Lowell's heroic stanza. I wrote it as an inscription for a bronze statue, "The Hand-Cart Family," a work of our gifted Norwegian brother, Torleif Knaphus, unveiled some time ago by President Grant at the Bureau of Information:

Nor gold, nor glory, their exalted quest,
Who won for East the wide unconquered West.

They toiled o'er frozen crest, o'er parching plain,
Eternal wealth in higher worlds to gain.

Forever in remembrance let them be,
Who gave their all for Truth and Liberty!

And like begets like! Fear not for Zion's future. The sons and daughters of the heroes and heroines who laid the foundations of this work, will build thereon and bear off the Kingdom triumphantly. When put to the test, they will "show the mettle of their pasture."

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Notwithstanding the anxiety I have had since the commencement of this conference, anticipating the call to speak, I appreciate the invitation extended by the President of the Church for me to occupy a few moments of the time in this, the concluding session of our conference. I realize that I must be very careful not to offend by trespassing upon the time, for I realize there are a number of brethren whom it is desired to hear before the conclusion of the meeting.

I have enjoyed this conference very greatly, notwithstanding the anxiety I have experienced. In fact, I have thought it to be one of the best conferences we have ever had, and as I looked upon the congregations of saints assembled here to receive the word of the Lord, and remembered that by the use of these amplifiers and radios there would be many thousands of other members of the Church and non-members who would hear what has been said, I have been greatly pleased and have been made to rejoice. But when I contrast the number here assembled with the total membership of the Church, which I understand is about 655,000, I am made to realize that there is but a very small percentage of the people that get the benefit directly from this conference.

THE CONFERENCE PAMPHLET

I have a thought in mind that I desire to express, a plan by which these splendid discourses may reach a greater number of our people. The proceedings of these meetings have been kept and will be printed verbatim and appear in a pamphlet or booklet known as The Conference Pamphlet, for distribution. I think that these pamphlets ought to be found more generally in the homes of the saints. I think we should publish a very great many more of them than we have had need for in the past. I have thought, during this conference, that some of these discourses were real gems. The Spirit of the Lord has been poured out upon us. The speakers have been magnified. They have given us the word of the Lord in such impressive, convincing manner that I have felt that we ought to provide means by which these words might have a wider circulation. Take, for example, the talk made by Elder Stephen L. Richards on the subject of tithing, one that is usually spoken of as a very dry subject.—He dressed that subject in such attractive attire that it was made beautiful, impressive and convincing. That discourse should be read in the homes of all the saints by all those who have not had the privilege of hearing it.

THE IMPORTANCE OF TITHE-PAYING

The subject of tithing has claimed considerable of the time of this conference. A most excellent discourse upon that subject was delivered at the priesthood meeting by President Grant—very impressive indeed. The importance of the subject demands that it have consideration in our conferences and that it have consideration in our homes. I desire my family to be blessed of the Lord. I therefore desire that they pay their tithing. This Gospel which we have received is one of sacrifice all along the line—In order to be disciples, worthy of the Master, we must be willing that all of our substance be used as far as necessary for the carrying on of the work of the Lord. We must be willing to lay down our lives if need be for the Gospel's sake. We may not be called upon to make such great sacrifices but we are called upon to give one-tenth of our interest annually as a tithe with which to assist in carrying on the work of the Lord, looking to the saving of souls; and sacrifices of this kind bring forth the blessings of heaven: I have proved it. Others have proved it. I know it is true. It brings a peace, a joy, a hope, and an assurance of the blessings of the Lord and his favor that scarcely anything else will do.

Now, this places a responsibility upon parents. I have an unmarried son; not because he does not believe in the law of tithing do I want him to read that discourse, because he does believe in it, and practices it to the extent that he has means, interest or income; it is not that I think the young people of Zion do not believe in the principle of tithing or that the saints generally do not believe in it,—but it is that we may have understanding of the obligations resting upon us, and the blessings that may accrue to us by faithfully performing that duty.

GEMS OF INFORMATION

I call attention to another discourse, that delivered by Elder Ballard. I thought it was a wonderful discourse. He never could have delivered it without the help of the Lord, and I endorse it fully. It is what we might call a delicate subject, referring to the subject of sex, purity of life, and so forth; but in a most masterful manner that discourse was delivered, in words that could be understood and yet would not offend the delicate sensibilities of any young woman. I desire that the young people of Zion who are not present shall have opportunity of reading that discourse. The Lord has blessed the Church with some very efficient teachers of his word and will and I appreciate them, and I would like the members of the Church to have the opportunity of receiving these gems of information and truth. If I can leave this word impressed upon the minds of Latter-day Saints in such a way that they will secure the Conference Pamphlet, and possibly in their home evenings consider it with their sons and daughters, then I shall feel that my remarks have not been made in vain.

“A MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER”

Brethren and sisters, we are reminded that yesterday was the ninety-ninth birthday anniversary of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Already preparations are being made for a grand centennial celebration, suited to the occasion to take place one year hence. There have been ninety-nine years of wonderful accomplishments in the earth. A wonderful work, a marvelous work and a wonder among the children of men. A reform has been wrought in the minds and lives of many thousands of people. A reform has been wrought in the religious creeds of this world; and the reformation of the future, I am sure, will be very much greater so far as respects the creeds of this world. Think of it. Hundreds of thousands of honest souls have found a life of happiness, joy, hope—yea, assurance of eternal life,—through yielding obedience to the laws and ordinances of this Gospel, and have passed on to their reward; the reward of the faithful; the reward of eternal life. And there are now in the Church, in the neighborhood of 655,000 souls enjoying the blessings of the Gospel, happy in serving the Lord, in making the sacrifices, having a testimony and a knowledge of the truth of this work, so that they are not in doubt. The future is clear before them. If they can but continue true and faithful to the cause and the covenants and obligations they have entered-into, the reward of eternal life is certain. Ninety-nine years of accomplishments. These accomplishments will be portrayed in an impressive manner at the end of a hundred years.

APPRECIATION OF BLESSINGS

In your presence, my brethren and sisters, I feel to acknowledge the hand of God and his blessings unto me and unto my people whom I love. For I love the Latter-day Saints and I love the Lord and his great work. I appreciate the Gospel, its blessings and ordinances, as of course you do. I appreciate my membership in the Church, the fellowship I have with the Latter-day Saints, and the association I have with them. I appreciate my association with the leaders of this Church whom I know personally and well, and know them to be servants of God, worthy of their calling. I am thankful to be permitted to labor with them in the midst of this people, to contribute a little, that which I am able to do, towards the advancement of the work of the Lord here upon the earth. I am thankful for his sustaining power that has attended me in my humble administrations. If I could have done many many times more than I have for this cause, I would still be indebted to the Church. The Church owes me nothing. It owes no man anything. No man who ever became a member of this Church has fully paid the debt of obligation that he owes to God and to this Church and his religion, no matter how faithful he may have been.

DILIGENCE AND FAITHFULNESS URGED

Brethren and sisters, do not be discouraged with the duties and obligations resting upon you; of paying your tithes, offerings, contributions, necessary in the labor of the ministry at home or abroad. If we attend to these regularly and faithfully, they will tie us closer and closer and anchor our faith and our souls, and we will be sure of salvation as long as we continue so to do. It is only those who understand these things and have not the faith to yield obedience and make the sacrifices that the Gospel entails, who are unhappy or disappointed in any degree. We cannot afford, brethren and sisters, to be indifferent in this great work or to neglect a single duty.

I know that this work is true as I know that I live. I desire to be true and faithful to the end, and in order to be so, I know that I must have the help of the Lord; and the assurance I have is that if I do my daily duty I will have his help and I will be able to remain faithful. I pray the Lord to help me and you, my brethren and sisters, to be faithful and appreciative of his love, kindness and mercy, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

Of the First Council of Seventy

"We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." (Article of Faith No. 9.)

One of the things that has greatly delighted me in this conference has been the prominence given to the Book of Mormon and to the importance of it as a means of acquainting the world with that system of truth for which we stand. But the passage from our articles of faith just repeated reminds me that the Book of Mormon is only one out of very many things that may aid us in this work of making God's message known to the world.

We seldom hear the Doctrine and Covenants spoken of as a volume of scripture and important as a help in convincing the world of the truth of our message. Perhaps I can present the thought I hold in my mind upon that subject by relating a circumstance that happened very many years ago in the Southern States. On one of the branch streams of the Tennessee river in one of our conference districts, there lived a woman of some considerable local fame, I may say, noted for her strong character, her intelligence and her religious sincerity. It so happened that she invited us to her home on one of our visits to induce her to read the Book of Mormon and to pay attention to the doctrines we had explained. Several of the local ministers who rather depended upon her as something of a pillar in one of their churches, heard with alarm the fact that she was reading the Book of Mormon, and called upon her to persuade her to give up her perusal of it; and gave her the stereotyped idea used by opponents of the book at that time, and brought to her pamphlets and articles from periodicals to show that the Book of Mormon was fiction and originated in the Spaulding Romance. They urged her to read this testimony against the book, and she promised them she would do so. In the course of a week or two they returned to her to inquire the progress she was making, and she answered them in substance in this way: "I am somewhat confused in relation to this Book of Mormon. The Mormon elders tell one story of its origin and you tell another, and I must confess I am somewhat perplexed about it; but," said she, "here is another book that the Mormon elders have presented to me and which I have read. They call it the Doctrine and Covenants. It purports to contain a number of revelations to Joseph Smith which he is said to have received. It is nearly equal in volume to the Book of Mormon, and there is no question at all in relation to the authorship of this book. None of you questions, that Joseph Smith wrote it. He is the author of it, and claims everything in it to be inspired of God; and I wish to state to you," said she, "that this book,—the revelations that are in it—contains as much evidence, and even more evidence, that the man who produced it was inspired of God than does the Book of Mormon that it was written by inspiration. Now what have you to say to that, and how will you explain away that?" Of course they had no explanation. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants stands unquestioned as to its authorship, and I wish to express a belief that there is evidence of inspiration in it equal to that of the Book of Mormon.

Let me just hurriedly call your attention to a few of the prominent revelations of the Book. If I had time I would read some of them but that is out of the question. A number of men came to the Prophet Joseph while he was yet engaged in translating the Book of Mormon, and asked him to use the sacred instruments to inquire of the Lord for them. Most of them wanted to know what was to be their lot and part in this great institution that they saw coming into existence. The answer to those inquiries is contained in some eight or ten of the early revelations received as I have described; and in every case they were told that those who were inspired of the Lord with desires to help in bringing forth this work, must proceed upon the lines of faith, and hope and charity, with an eye single to the glory of God, and with an honest desire and purpose to bring to pass the salvation of the souls of men; and that humility united with these other qualifications equipped them for this great and wonderful work that God was about to bring forth. In no single instance were they promised the honors of men or the reward of personal prosperity and fame. That, to me, is one of the clearest evidences that the Prophet was inspired of God.

Following through the Doctrine and Covenants you will come to the wonderful revelation in the 20th Section, in which is outlined the doctrine, and being, and character of God; the ordinances of the Gospel; the moral law in part, together with the arrangement for the first simple step in the organization of the quorums of the holy priesthood; and the exact terms of the ordinances of the Gospel, including that most masterful prayer which consecrates the holy sacrament. In the first part of it is the great and eternal doctrine of our faith in God, the Eternal Father, and in Jesus Christ his Son; and these emblems associated with the prayer bear witness of their being the symbols of man's salvation. In the second part is named the covenants which man makes with God, bringing about that union with God by which man may participate in the enjoyment of his Spirit and always have it to be with him. Then I might mention the section read by President Nibley this morning, Section 50, containing the beautiful doctrine which he expounded. Section 68, laying the foundation for the inspiration and real force of the priesthood within the Church. Section 84, with its doctrine of God's assurance that he will be with his servants. Section 89, the health law of the Church as given by the Lord in the Word of Wisdom. Section 88, the revelation in which the "imminence of God," in the universe; the Spirit that proceeds forth from him, bearing upon it all the attributes and powers of God, creative power, world-sustaining power, vital force, intelligence-inspiring power, the love-manifesting power through Jesus Christ, and harmonizing as no other revelations harmonize, the great universe of God and the union of our world with that universe. Section 107 should not be omitted, which is the doctrine of the priesthood, and which portrays the relationship and operations of the several quorums of the priesthood. All these things are set forth, and it is the record of the living voice of God as it has been manifested in bringing forth this great Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and bears the impress of God's inspiration upon it.

Perhaps I might call your attention to the fourth book of scripture which the Church accepts officially and by which it is willing to be judged.—The Pearl of Great Price. The Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price are prized by us above all other books. If the world but had the Pearl of Great Price, and the knowledge it conveys, it would shed a penetrating light upon all the scriptures that our Christian friends acknowledge, and make known the truth of God; how, from the beginning, instead of dealing with mere fragments and hints at the plan of salvation, it would set forth the whole plan clearly. About all the world has in the Old Testament about the Gospel is the statement in Genesis that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head—wound him in a vital part, overcome him; and the implication that is to be seen in the offering of Abel, and the rejection of the offering by Cain; with here and there an indication of information that underlaid the testimony of those patriarchs that they had some knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. But from the book of Moses and in the Book of Abraham, in the Pearl of Great Price, we get revelation of the plan of salvation that was instituted in heaven among the spirits that were the children of God, and an explanation of the earth life of man that is truly enlightening. Patriarchs from Adam to Noah have been some of the mightiest servants of God and the greatest prophets. They knew very much more than the fragmentary knowledge that has come to the world in our day.

For instance, how helpful it would be if the Christian religious world of today could have such a summary of the Gospel as it was known among the ancients, according to the Book of Moses, and that rather mysterious and unknown character, Enoch, who represents God as giving the following revelation to Adam:

An Ancient Discourse on the Gospel—

"And now, behold, I say unto you: This is the plan of salvation unto all men, through the blood of mine Only Begotten, who shall come in the meridian of time.

"And behold, all things have their likeness, and all things are created and made to bear record of me, both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are in the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath: all things bear record of me.

"And it came to pass, when the Lord had spoken with Adam, our father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was laid under the water, and was brought forth out of the water.

"And thus he was baptized, and the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, and became quickened in the inner man.

"And he heard a voice, out of heaven, saying: Thou art baptized with fire, and with the Holy Ghost. This is the record of the Father, and the Son, from henceforth and forever;

"And thou art after the order of him who was without beginning of days or end of years, from all eternity to all eternity"

"Behold, thou art one in me, a son of God; and thus may all become my sons." (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Moses, 6:62-68.)

This is an outline of the Gospel which Adam knew, which Enoch preached, which Noah plead with the people to accept in his day; and it proves that the patriarchal ages were not as blind to the things of God as the world imagines them to have been.

Permit me to say that the Book of Moses from which I have read, was brought forth by the Prophet Joseph Smith—who received it as a revelation from God—beginning as early as June, 1830, about three months after he completed the Book of Mormon; and by the close of December of that year the whole book as we know it was completed. If the world would only accept the knowledge of the Gospel as it was in ancient times among the inhabitants of the earth, we would find the matter of convincing them of our truth very much improved.

This book of Scripture, the Book of Moses, as well as the Book of Mormon, then, brings light and truth into the world for the salvation of men. God grant that this light and truth may be extended among the nations, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HYRUM G. SMITH

Presiding Patriarch of the Church

I am very grateful, my brethren and sisters, to have this privilege of seeing this house so well filled in another annual conference of the Church. I heartily accord with the wonderful testimonies and teachings which have been given during the conference, and am grateful for the privilege of bearing my testimony, thus mingling my voice with the voices of my brethren.

OUR BLESSINGS

Many of the brethren have expressed appreciation for the blessings which have come to the Church, each one of them having said something pertaining to our great blessings; and I have thought during the singing and the speaking of the conference that surely the Lord has guided and blessed it.

I would like to refer to one verse of the beautiful song that was sung today by the choir, which points particularly to the thought of our blessings. These lines have clung to my memory:

"The Gentile fulness now comes in,
And Israel's blessings are at hand;
Lo! Judah's remnant, cleansed from sin,
Shall in their promised Canaan stand."

I have wondered what claim we hold upon those wonderful blessings, and yet each one of the brethren has explained and borne testimony to the kindness and mercy of the Lord in bringing about these particular times in which we live and the promises of the Lord to his chosen Israel throughout the different times of the world.

THE BLESSINGS OF EPHRAIM AND MANASSEH

I am trying to bring to you a thought that has been prevalent in my own mind relative to these important promises, and I have in mind the great blessings which were given by the great patriarch Jacob to his grandsons Ephraim and Manasseh. When these two lads were taken to their grandfather for their blessings, their grandfather was feeble and dim of sight because of his age. There seems to have been a peculiar custom in those times that when a thing of this kind happened the older son was to receive the blessing of the right hand and the younger son the blessing of the left hand. But for some reason which was not explained, only that the patriarch said that he knew what he was doing, when his son Joseph was perturbed in his feelings Jacob in blessing these two boys crossed his arms, placing his right hand upon the younger and his left hand upon the older, and blessed Ephraim first. In his explanation to Joseph, the father of these boys, Jacob said: Manasseh shall become great, and he shall receive his blessings; but Ephraim shall become greater, and he shall be a multitude of nations.

You heard in the report made by the President of the Church relative to the growth of the Church, that there are today more than one hundred stakes of Zion. It is the policy and order of the Church at the present time to have at least one patriarch, who is authorized to bless the members of the stake, and in so doing, declare their lineage, in a similar way to the manner in which Jacob blessed his grandsons, and his own sons. At the present time in the Church the great majority of those receiving their blessings are declared to be of the house and lineage of Ephraim, while many others are designated as members of the house of Manasseh; but up to the present time we have discovered that those who are leaders in Israel, no matter where they come from, no matter what nation they have come out of, are of Ephraim; while the blood of Manasseh is found in the tribes and nations of the Indians of North and South America. They are great, they are wonderfully blessed, but Ephraim seems to prevail in the greater blessings, greater in responsibility, and in faithfulness to the Lord's work. And so people have wondered about it. Why do the patriarchs declare that most of us are of Ephraim?

THE DAY OF EPHRAIM

It is my testimony that "today" is the day of Ephraim. It is the day which the Lord has set to fulfil his promises made in the times of the ancient patriarchs, when he said that he would scatter Israel to the four corners of the world, and that Ephraim should be scattered in all the nations, and then in the "last days" be gathered out again. Many are being gathered out by our missionaries, as "one of a family and two of a city;" and they are found here, gathered into a gathering place appointed of the Lord, and they are receiving his blessings. This is why so many of us are declared to be of Ephraim. If there were time I would like to speak further about our blessings. The Prophet Joseph Smith, was declared to be of this house of Joseph, a chosen vessel. Read II Nephi, chapter 3, relative to the promises made regarding him. But the principal point I have in mind at the present time is the fact that we may discover our lineage, or where we stand in Israel.

There have been discovered also, a few of the house of Israel who belong to the tribe of Levi,—an ancient priest. There are also a few of some other tribes of Israel, but very few except those of the house of Jacob, as represented by Ephraim in the great multitudes who are enjoying the blessings of the Church, and those who are of Manasseh—the great multitudes of Indians in North and South America.

THE LORD'S PROMISE UNTO NEPHI

The Prophet Nephi (a Manassehite), who was privileged to witness the progress and even the destruction of his people, received a particular promise from the Lord, wherein he was comforted in the fact that though his people would be chastised and destroyed they would not be utterly destroyed, but that they should be mixed with his brethren so that the blood and the blessings of the prophets of that people would not be utterly lost.—Through my experience in meeting up with some of our visitors from the islands of the Pacific Ocean, I was able to discover that the natives of New Zealand and the natives of the Hawaiian Islands are chiefly of that mixed blood which the Lord promised should not be utterly destroyed, but that in the last days, through their faithfulness, should receive the blessings of the Lord and even become a white and delightsome people.

The promises of the Lord are being fulfilled and the blessings are being administered under his counsel through his holy servants.

I pray that the Lord will bless us and that he will continue to inspire the leaders of the Church to lead us in the ways that he would have us go, and that the promises that the Lord has made concerning Israel, (the Jews and others in the great house of Israel) may be rapidly realized.

"JUDAH'S REMNANT"

The Jews are preparing to return to the land that was given to them for their inheritance. Many of them have already returned. So "Judah's remnant will receive their blessings in their promised Canaan." However a few of the Jews have come into the Church.

THE LAW OF ADOPTION

We have also a number in the Church, who, so far as we are able to judge and learn, did not originally belong to the house of Israel at all. Then you say, where do they get their blessings? What is their lineage? Well, I explain that in this way: When you adopt a child that does not belong to you originally, and that child grows up in your family, it obtains its blessings the same as other members of your family. It is the same as your own. If I adopt a child that is born in the world I share my blessings with that child, as he shares his blessings with me. In my household I am responsible, he partakes at the same "table," the same blessings. By the law of adoption that child receives his right to the blessings of my household, and therefore he belongs to my household through the law of adoption. Through our faithfulness we are all adopted into the fold of Christ. We are his and his blessings are upon us, through our faithfulness in obeying the laws of his Gospel. And so, if other people outside of the house of Israel have faith and obedience enough to come into the Church they will receive their lineage and blessings according to the house which they enter. If they enter into the family of Israel they will receive the same lineage as the house or tribe that adopted them, just the same as the adopted child receives the blessings of the family that adopted him.

That is my idea. I hope that I have made it clear. And so today we are discovering, through the kindness and mercy of the Lord, that his promises are being fulfilled and that his blessings are being received by those who are observing his laws and keeping his commandments.

TESTIMONY AND BLESSING

I have a testimony that this is the work of the Lord; that the Prophet Joseph Smith was a prophet in very deed, the descendant of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, through the lineage of Ephraim, a promised vessel in the hands of the Lord; and that those who have succeeded him in the advancement and progress of the Church have also been inspired and blessed as chosen vessels in the hands of the Lord. I am very grateful for the testimony I have of the divinity of this work. I pray the Lord's blessing upon those who carry responsibility in the work entrusted to them,—President Grant and his associates, the General Authorities, you men and women who are laboring throughout the stakes and wards, in the Church schools and in the temples, also the brethren and sisters who are laboring in the mission field. I pray God's blessings upon you all and upon the entire Church and its membership and those who befriend it,—the honest in heart and the worthy throughout the world. May God's blessings go with you to your homes, and help you to serve the Lord and keep his commandments, and help to bring about his holy purposes, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

One of the regrets that we nearly always have in our conferences is that we do not seem to have quite time enough to hear from all of those whom we would like to hear. As you will see by the clock there are only twenty minutes left and we have yet four speakers. We will ask Brothers Charles H. Hart and J. Golden Kimball to occupy fifteen minutes between them, and we shall not have time to hear the others.

ELDER CHARLES H. HART

Canadian Mission*

While traveling through the State of Vermont, last summer, territory newly added to the Canadian mission, while visiting the granite works at Barre, Vermont, my attention was called to an issue of The Granite Cutter's Journal, published in Quincy, Massachusetts, containing a splendid article entitled "The Mormon Battalion Monument", illustrated by four full pages of photographs of the monument. The editor said that one look at the photographs of the monument and he "realized that a single view of it would not be sufficient to bring out its great merit;" therefore all four photographs were reproduced.

A letter from the Secretary of the American Granite Association was quoted in part as follows:

"I think the monument is one of the finest things that has ever come to our attention in this office. It is strikingly original in the matter of design, and the photographs show that the carving around the base is executed with unusual delicacy and accuracy. Insofar as the photograph shows, I do not believe that there is another piece of granite carving anywhere in the country done in such delicate detail unless it is the Robert Burns Monument in Barre, Vermont."

The secretary stated that the Salt Lake monument is good proof of the fact "that anything that can be carved in marble can be carved in granite if it is seamed, designed and executed with proper knowledge of the cutting of granite." He then presented descriptive matter as to each panel. As to the panel "The Enlistment," the article states:

"Upon the north side of the monument is shown 'The Enlistment' of the Mormon Battalion under the flag of the United States of America. Dominating this scene is the central figure representing the eager, fearless and aggressive spirit of youth. A prominent feature of the scene is a portrait of Brigham Young in high relief. Captain James Allen is shown in the background, as are also the youths grouped around the enlistment table. This is the scene of farewell, which sentiment is expressed in all of its poignancy in the grief of the lover, and in the parting of the volunteer with his wife and children."

Then there is presented other descriptions and the inscriptions also upon the monument.

Inasmuch as it became my duty under the appointment of his Excellency, the Governor, and two of his predecessors, to share with others particularly in the raising of the last twelve or fifteen thousand dollars that had to be obtained by popular subscription, and inasmuch as I have never had the opportunity before of expressing my thanks to those people who so generously came to the support of the committee at that time, although I realize that this was purely a civic enterprise, I am wondering whether it would not be in place to extend thanks to the many thousands that I know are within the sound of my voice, for their response to the requests by telephone and personal appeal for the raising of these last thousands.

In passing through the city of Chicago the other day I was reminded of our M. I. A. slogan, "We stand for law, for the people who live it, and for the officers who enforce it." At Springfield, Illinois, there appeared before the judiciary committee the noted criminal lawyer, Mr. Clarence S. Darrow, in opposition to a bill which had been sponsored by the Advisory Council of Chicago, and by the Bar Association of Chicago. Mr. Darrow received about the same cordial reception at the hands of State Senator Roy C. Woods and Judge Harry M. Fisher of the Circuit Court of Chicago, that Goliath of Gath received at the hands of the shepherd boy David. Bishop Whitney has asked the question—some of you may have heard it—"Why was Goliath surprised at the sling-shot thrown by David?" and the answer was, "Because nothing of that kind had ever entered his head before." (Laughter.) I am sure that this modern Philistine received a salutary lesson from the reception which he received at Springfield the other day.

Judge Fisher said that the criminal situation in Chicago is due to the "continuous vilification of our courts; to the impotence of those courts under our law that has led to a belief among the criminal element that it may safely come to Chicago and practice its business and escape punishment."

I wish that the sentiment of the M. I. A. slogan recited in concert in the Church during the past six months, pledging support in sustaining law might be recited in concert not only by our members and others in the State of Illinois, but elsewhere throughout the country.

The work in the Canadian mission is going forward in a way that cultivates the faith of our missionaries. I thought of them as the combined choirs sang so beautifully this afternoon in reference to the messengers who bring the gospel of peace. When major operations were necessary our missionaries have gone to the operating table with calmness and with a faith that has been surprising to the attendants. They have been diligent in circulating the Book of Mormon. One elder just wrote me that he put out forty-five copies in two days, and he gave to each of the state officials of one state a copy of the Book of Mormon. The elders have been very free in presenting their testimony of the Gospel to ministers, school teachers, and other leading people. Hundreds of intelligent people in one province are said to be now ready to listen to the Gospel if we had missionaries to bear that word to them. Our missionaries are very few in number in that province.

May the Lord bless us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

Of the First Council of Seventy

I often tell a story when called up to speak just as we are about to close the meeting, which happens to me occasionally.

A little fellow was sick and he went to the doctor who was a herbalist. The doctor gave him four herbs and told him to boil them in a quart of water and drink it all. The little fellow said: "I can't. I only hold a pint." I am wondering how much you people hold?

I have enjoyed the conference. I have not had much peace here for a considerable length of time. The President has been calling people up from all around me.

I trust, my brethren and sisters, that in the few words I speak I may be able to impress the people of this Church with the fact, as I am quite sure I have done in the past, that I am frank and honest and sincere in my faith as a Latter-day Saint.

I believe all that has been revealed. I have no doubt whatsoever of the truth of this work. I have gone out like others have done, and have found God, and God has answered my prayers. I have heard that still small voice, and I have an assurance, and as much knowledge as has been given to me by the influence of the Holy Spirit, that this is God's work.

I pray the Lord to bless the people. I have no grievance. No man can ever be treated better than I have been. If I have been corrected once or twice it has done me more good than anything else that has happened to me. The Lord bless you. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

From the way we have nearly always been crowded in the conferences that have been held during the past ten years, at which I have had the privilege of presiding, I am wondering if it would not be advisable, as I am sure we dislike very much not to hear from all of the General Authorities, to arrange to hold a conference meeting the night before the usual conference sessions. I thought that inasmuch as two of the brethren, Elders Reed Smoot and John A. Widtsoe, are not here, there might be ten or fifteen minutes left for me. But in some way when people start to talk on the Gospel they get warmed up, and although the clock is right in front of them, they very frequently do not see it.

In my opening remarks I occupied ten minutes, in addition to the time required to give the statistics of the Church, and I was in hopes that I might have some little time in which to speak to you before the close of the conference. I have made up my mind to take it notwithstanding the usual time of closing has arrived.

THE TESTIMONY OF TWELVE WITNESSES

The theme of this conference has been the Book of Mormon. I do not believe that in any court of justice in the world if a man was being tried for murder and twelve reputable citizens testified of their knowledge of the circumstances leading to the murder, and there was no one who could testify against what they said, there would be a failure to convict the man. We have the testimony of Joseph Smith and the testimony of three witnesses to the effect that God gave them a knowledge regarding the Book of Mormon, that an angel of God declared from heaven that the book had been translated by the gift and power of God. These men were Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris. They left the Church, but to the day of their death they maintained their testimony regarding the declaration of the angel, and that they were commanded to bear witness of the divinity of this book, and they did so. Eight men, some of whom were excommunicated from the Church, maintained their testimony that they had seen and handled the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and they remained true to that testimony to the day of their death. The disbelief of all the world does not prove that those men did not tell the truth, because there are no witnesses on the other side.

A TRUE WITNESS FOR GOD

It has been said that the Book of Mormon has fraud written upon every page of it. The Book of Mormon is in absolute harmony from start to finish with other sacred scriptures. There is not a doctrine taught in it that does not harmonize with the teachings of Jesus Christ. There is not one single expression in the Book of Mormon that would wound in the slightest degree the sensitiveness of any individual. There is not a thing in it but what is for the benefit and uplift of mankind. It is in every way a true witness for God, and it sustains the Bible and is in harmony with the Bible. No group of men can write a book of six or seven hundred pages that is a fraud and have it in harmony in every particular with the scriptures that were given to us by the prophets of God and by Jesus Christ and his Apostles.

A gentleman told me that he had read Joseph Smith's own story. He said that no liar ever told such a story. No liar could write such a book; and the evidences of the book's truthfulness are coming to light day by day.

THE USE OF CEMENT

I have often said and desire to repeat here that when I was a young unmarried man, another young man who had received a doctor's degree ridiculed me for believing in the Book of Mormon. He said he could point out two lies in that book. One was that the people had built their homes out of cement and that they were very skilful in the use of cement. He said there had never been found and never would be found, a house built of cement by the ancient inhabitants of this country, because the people in that early age knew nothing about cement. He said that should be enough to make one disbelieve the book. I said: "That does not affect my faith one particle. I read the Book of Mormon prayerfully and supplicated God for a testimony in my heart and soul of the divinity of it, and I have accepted it and believe it with all my heart." I also said to him, "If my children do not find cement houses, I expect that my grandchildren will." He said, "Well, what is the good of talking with a fool like that?" Now, since that time houses made of cement and massive structures of the same material have been uncovered.

Not very far from the City of Mexico there is a monument two hundred and ten feet high, built of cement, that was supposed to be a big hill. My first counselor has stood on that monument. You could put forty tabernacles like this one inside of it. It covers more than ten acres of ground and is two and a half times higher than this building. From the top of that monument one can see small mounds, and as these mounds are being uncovered they are found to be wonderfully built cement houses, with drain pipes of cement, showing skill and ability, superior almost to anything we have today so far as the use of cement is concerned.

THE VOICE OF THE SAVIOR

Another statement that this doctor made was this: that the voice of man can only carry a few hundred feet, and yet the Book of Mormon teaches that when Jesus Christ was resurrected and came to this country he spoke to the people and his voice was heard all over the land, not alone by the people that were near, but all over the land. "That is a lie," said he, "and you know it." I said, "That is no lie at all. Jesus Christ, under God, was the Creator of this earth, and if he had the power and ability to create the earth I believe that he could arrange for his voice to carry all over the world at one and the same time."

The radio is doing what? I read the other day that a song had been heard nine thousand miles away, not only every word of it, but every note. (There are several notes in every word.) We had four letters from New Zealand or Australia, I have forgotten which, to the effect that people there had heard perfectly the programs that had been broadcast over the radio by the Martha Washington Candy Company. In that program the announcement was made that if anybody in a foreign land who heard the program would so indicate there would be sent to him a pound box of candy, and four people wrote for the boxes of candy. It takes the sun eighteen and one half hours to travel that far, yet the voice carried that distance as quickly as you can snap your finger.

I said to this man: "The voice of the Savior could go all over the world if he so arranged it." The radio has proven what I said. Faith is a gift of God, and I thank God for the faith in and the knowledge of the divinity of the Book of Mormon which I had in my youthful days, and that these two alleged scientific facts, which are now known to be fallacies, did not destroy my faith.

LISTENERS IN DISTANT PLACES

I rejoice in the wonderful time that we have had together here. I want to request our people and any that are not of our faith who are listening in distant places to what I am saying, to send a postal card informing us of that fact. If there is a little gathering of a dozen or more people in a home, or in a meeting-house, in any part of the country from Canada to Mexico, listening over the radio to these services, please send a postal card to the Bishop's Office telling how many were listening to the services. And if there are any who are not of our faith who are listening in we would appreciate it if they, too, would notify us that they have heard the services. We would like to know how many people have heard the testimonies that have been borne during this conference, given by men who are devoting their lives and all that is in them for the advancement of truth and the spread of righteousness.

BLESSINGS INVOKED

I pray God to bless each and every soul on the face of the earth that believes in God, and for those who do not, I pray that God may help them to obtain a testimony that he lives, that he is the Father of our spirits, that Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God, the Redeemer of the world.

SHOULD LIVE THE GOSPEL

I hope and pray that the saints will live the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I hope that they will listen to the teachings of the presidents of stakes and bishops of wards. I want to say that we expect every president of a stake and every bishop of a ward to teach the people the truth. We want them to tell the people that they are expected to obey the Word of Wisdom, to be honest tithe-payers, to remember the covenants that they make in the temples of God, and not mutilate their garments: that we expect them to quit playing cards; and that we expect them to do their duty as saints, and to preach the Gospel by living it.

May God help each and every one of us that has a testimony of this Gospel to live it, is my earnest prayer. I pray God to bless the Latter-day Saints and the honest the world over, and I do it in humility and in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

An anthem, "Worthy the Lamb," was sung by the combined choirs.

The benediction was pronounced by Elder William R. Smith, President of the Woodruff Stake.

Conference adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing. Accompaniments and interludes were played on the great organ by Edward P. Kimball, Tracy Y. Cannon, Alexander Schreiner, and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

JOSEPH ANDERSON,

Clerk of the Conference.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The congregation joined in singing the hymn, "Hail to the Brightness of Zion's Glad Morning."

Opening prayer was offered by Elder Thomas W. Richards, President of the Malad Stake.

The hymn, "Come, let us Anew," was sung by the congregation.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I rejoice in the opportunity of again meeting with the saints in general conference. I am grateful for the blessings that we as a people have enjoyed during the past six months.

As is customary we announce in our opening meeting some of the changes that have taken place during this period.

PRESENTS CHANGES

Changes in stake and mission officers since last April conference:
New stakes organized:

Moroni stake, formerly a part of North Sanpete stake, James L. Nielsen appointed president of the new stake.

Sharon stake, formerly a part of Utah stake, Arthur V. Watkins appointed president of the new stake.

Stake presidents appointed:

A. Richard Peterson has been appointed president of the Emery stake to succeed Lars P. Ovesen.

Wilford A. Beesley has been appointed president of the Salt Lake stake to succeed Nephi L. Morris.

Ralph B. Keeler has been appointed president of the Juarez stake to succeed Joseph C. Bentley.

Joseph T. Finlinson has been appointed president of the Deseret stake, to succeed Alonzo A. Hinckley.

New mission presidents:

John G. Allred has been released as president of the North Central States mission, and Arthur Welling appointed to succeed him.

Hyrum W. Valentine has been released as president of the German-Austrian mission, and Edward P. Kimball appointed to succeed him.

John P. Lillywhite has been released as president of the Netherlands mission, and Frank I. Kooyman appointed to succeed him.

Joseph L. Peterson has been released as president of the Danish mission, and Holger M. Larsen appointed to succeed him.

A new mission has been organized in Czecho-Slovakia, with Arthur Gaeth as president:

New wards organized:

Spanish Fork Fifth ward, Palmyra stake.

Diamond City ward, Lethbridge stake.

STAKE PRESIDENT DIES

Stake president who has passed away:

Since our last conference President Fred A. Caine of the Idaho Falls stake has passed away. It fell to my lot to labor for three years with Brother Caine in the Japan mission, and to be intimately acquainted with him from then until the time of his death. I wish to bear witness that it has not been my privilege to ever be associated with a more sincere, God-fearing, capable, faithful man than was Brother Fred A. Caine.

Bishop who has passed away:

Elmer H. Johnson, Alterra ward, Roosevelt stake.

At the present time we have:

| | |
|----------------------------|-----|
| Stakes | 103 |
| Wards | 933 |
| Independent branches | 70 |

Independent branches are presided over by a president and two counselors and are practically, to all intents and purposes, wards; they are not, however, considered quite large enough to be regularly organized as such.

There are also at the present time:

| | |
|---|-----|
| Dependent branches | 41 |
| Missions | 28 |
| Branches in Missions | 783 |
| Making in round numbers nearly 2,000 organizations in the Church. | |

APPROPRIATIONS INCREASE

The new appropriations made to the stakes and wards for the building of meeting houses during the first nine months of last year amounted to $868,125.00, and this year, for the same period, they amount to $886,780.00.

NEW HOTEL ERECTED

As you perhaps all know, we have erected a hotel building on the corner opposite this block on the southwest, on some vacant land that has been held by the Church for many years. We feel the necessity of having a building where many of our saints who come here, from Canada to Mexico and from the various missions, can secure accommodations at a more reasonable rate than at the splendid hotel which we erected many years ago, facing this building across the street to the east.

It is only fair to say to the people that we have not utilized any of the means in the nature of tithing that have come into the hands of the Presidency of the Church for the erection of this building. Nor only has all of the money that has been paid as tithes during the last nine months been returned to the stakes of Zion, but even more has been appropriated to them. We have disposed of property and securities that the Church was in possession of, in order to erect this building for the accommodation principally of our people. The drafts upon the Church have been far greater during the last nine months than during any similar period while I have presided over the Church.

BLESSINGS THROUGH PAYMENT OF TITHES

I regret to say that there are a great many of the people who are not paying their tithing. To me it is a marvel that any man having a testimony of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged as Latter-day Saints can sing lullabies to his conscience, figuratively speaking, and not be absolutely honest with the Lord in the payment of his tithes.

Tithing is a law of God and the payment of tithes brings peace and joy to the Latter-day Saint who does it. There is a satisfaction that comes into the heart of the man who is absolutely honest with the Lord in contributing of his means to the building up of the Church of Christ, and into the heart of every true, full tithe-payer. Each and every blessing that you and I enjoy comes from God. We are under obligations to him for the very breath of life, and he gives us everything that we have. He asks us to show our appreciation and acknowledgment to him his goodness, by returning to the Church for its benefit and for the spreading of the gospel at home and abroad, one-tenth of that which we receive, all of which comes from him.

APPEALS FOR HONESTY

Again I say it is beyond my comprehension how any man who is absolutely honest in his dealings with his fellow men and would not think of such a thing as compromising his store bill if he were able to pay, would compromise his obligations to God. I can speak upon the payment of tithing because from my childhood every dollar that has come into my hands has been tithed, and I have endeavored in addition to be as liberal as any of my associates have been in contributing for the various public enterprises that have been required of us—the erection of ward houses, school houses, etc., etc.

I appeal to the Latter-day Saints to be honest with the Lord and I promise them that peace, prosperity and financial success will attend those who are honest with our Heavenly Father, because they are fulfilling the law and an obligation, and he will bless them for doing so. And being strictly honest with the Lord is the most splendid way to teach your children faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The most tender portion of the human anatomy of the male variety of the species, it has been said, is the pocket, and there is something to it. When we set our hearts upon the things of this world and fail to be strictly honest with the Lord we do not grow in the light and power and strength of the gospel as we otherwise would do.

WARD AND STAKE BUILDINGS DEDICATED

It has fallen to my lot during the past year, in April, to be present and assist in the dedication of the new Hollywood stake and Wilshire ward building. It is one of the very finest buildings that we have ever erected in any of the stakes of Zion for stake and ward purposes, and I am sure it will give us a very splendid standing in that section of the country. I rejoice in the beauty of the building and in the surroundings, as well as in the great accomplishment there.

In May, I had the pleasure of dedicating the Dimond ward chapel. The Dimond ward is in the San Francisco stake of Zion. The chapel is a very beautiful one and a great credit to the people of that ward. I was astonished that so small a ward could build such a splendid building.

VISITS WINTERS GRAVE

Also in May of this year I went to Scott's Bluff, Nebraska, with members of my family, where I attended services in connection with the placing of a marker by the Daughters of the American Revolution, at the grave of Rebecca Winters. Rebecca Winters died while crossing the plains, and some fifty years later, the Burlington railroad, in surveying on the north side of the Platte river, came to a broken wagon tire upon which was chiseled "Rebecca Winters, aged fifty years."

They very kindly made a detour so as to miss the grave, and the Burlington Railroad company has since erected a fence around the grave and has kept the ground in the enclosure in very nice condition, having put down a well for the express purpose of securing water with which to water the grass around the grave.

It has been my privilege and that of my wife and some other members of our family, to visit that spot upon three different occasions. On this last occasion the Burlington railroad carried ten carloads of people from Scottsbluff to the grave, which is a mile or two distant from that city. Rebecca Winters was the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, and in Utah, Idaho and this intermountain country, she has nearly six hundred descendants.

NEW STAKE BUILDING

In June I dedicated the Los Angeles stake building at Huntington Park. The chapel and amusement hall are a very splendid and remarkable structure and a very great credit to the people. I rejoice that we have it. The accommodations are very fine indeed, equal, I think, to any of our stake houses. The building is not quite so expensive as the one in Hollywood, but it is equally as commodious and a very splendid structure.

COLORADO RIVER BRIDGE

In company with President Ivins, I was present at the dedication of the bridge across the Colorado river, which will join Utah and Arizona more closely in the future than it has been possible for them to be joined in the past. Formerly it required travel of nearly a thousand miles to get around from the north rim of the Grand Canyon to the county seat, in order to pay your taxes if you wanted to do so in person, in case you owned property in what is known as the Arizona strip on the north rim of the canyon. I can only hope that Arizona will build a good road to the bridge and from the bridge to the Utah line, something that is very greatly lacking at the present time. It is about the worst piece of road from the Utah line to the bridge that it has fallen to my lot for many years to ride over.

VISITS WARDS AND MISSIONS

I have had the pleasure of attending some ward meetings and also some stake conferences during the past six months.

In June I had the privilege of dedicating a fine ward house in Jerome, Idaho. The people there have had a great struggle through many years in constructing this building. It was rather beyond the capacity of the small ward, but the people have done themselves credit, and I rejoice that the work is finally completed and the building dedicated.

In July I visited the Elwood ward in Bear River stake, and dedicated a small chapel there, which is a very creditable structure. They have placed pressed bricks around their old ward meeting house and turned it into an amusement hall, and it looks as fine as though it were an expensive building. The amusement hall and chapel are very creditable, and I congratulate the people on having them.

I had the pleasure of visiting the Elmhurst ward in the San Francisco stake. I expected to be at the dedication of their new building but was unable to do so on account of sickness in my family.

In the past six months I have attended a meeting in the San Jose branch of the California mission. We have a very good chapel at San Jose.

In September I visited Pittsburgh with President James H. Moyle of the Eastern States mission, and there dedicated a fine little chapel, which is a very suitable structure for our purposes.

COAST MEMBERS INCREASE

During the past two weeks I have had the pleasure of speaking in the Sacramento branch of the California mission, and also in the Long Beach ward of Los Angeles stake. When I was in Sacramento only a few years ago we had only two hundred members of the Church there. Today we have over twelve hundred members in that city, and also a great increase in the number of Latter-day Saints in Long Beach.

The work of the Lord is progressing satisfactorily. I am pleased to tell you that from all of the various missions we are receiving calls for more help. The reports that we receive are favorable, and the call for additional missionaries, I believe, comes from every mission that we have. There are something over two thousand of our young men and women out in the world at the present time preaching the gospel. The work of the Lord is spreading, and we are grateful for his blessings that are attending our labors.

QUOTES FROM REVELATIONS

In thinking of what I would like to say today I was reminded of the fact that probably twice if not three times during the past six months in speaking I have quoted the eleventh section of the Doctrine and Covenants. I know of no finer section, it being a revelation to the father of our beloved President Joseph F. Smith. Not only is it a revelation to Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch, but the remarks therein, as the revelation says, are applicable to all the saints who have the right spirit and desire to spread the gospel. This revelation was given eleven months before the organization of the Church.

When the Prophet Joseph was engaged in translating the Book of Mormon there were a great many leading influential men who came to him and asked what the Lord would like them to do. He inquired of the Lord, through the Urim and Thummim, and many revelations were received, telling of the great and marvelous work that was about to come forth, and this is one of them. Many of the men desired to go forth and preach, but you will find that the Lord tells them to wait.

"KEEP COMMANDMENTS"

"A great and marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men.

"Behold, I am God; give heed to my word, which is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of both joints and marrow; therefore give heed unto my word.

"Behold, the field is white already to harvest; therefore, whoso desireth to reap let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God.

"Yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God.

"Therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive; if you will knock it shall be opened unto you.

"Now, as you have asked, behold, I say unto you, keep my commandments, and seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

I have heard a great deal of criticism in my life about our repeating over and over and over again the many things that the Lord has revealed to us, and appealing to the people to keep the commandments of the Lord. And yet we find that the Lord, in this revelation, repeats this declaration time and time again: "Keep my commandments."

"Seek not for riches but for wisdom; and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich. Behold, he that hath eternal life is rich.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, even as you desire of me so it shall be done unto you; and, if you desire, you shall be the means of doing much good in this generation."

And every Latter-day Saint ought to have a desire in his or her heart to do all the good within his or her power for the advancement of the work of God.

"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation. Keep my commandments, and assist to bring forth my work, according to my commandments, and you shall be blessed.

"Behold, thou hast a gift, or thou shalt have a gift if thou wilt desire of me in faith, with an honest heart, believing in the power of Jesus Christ, or in my power, which speaketh unto thee;

"For behold, it is I that speak; behold, I am the light which shineth in darkness, and by my power I give these words unto thee.

SPIRIT WILL LEAD

"And now, verily, verily, I say unto thee, put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good—yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, I will impart unto you of my Spirit, which shall enlighten your mind, which shall fill your soul with joy!

"And then shall ye know, or by this shall you know, all things whatsoever you desire of me, which are pertaining unto things of righteousness, in faith believing in me that you shall receive.

"Behold, I command you that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called.

"Wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my Church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine.

"And then, behold, according to your desires, yea, even according to your faith shall it be done unto you.

"Keep my commandments: hold your peace; appeal unto my Spirit;"

PATIENCE AND STUDY NECESSARY

"Yea, cleave unto me with all your heart, that you may assist in bringing to light those things of which has been spoken—yea, the translation of my work; be patient until you shall accomplish it."

Remember the Prophet was engaged in the translation of the Book of Mormon at this time.

Behold, this is your work, to keep my commandments, yea with all your might, mind and strength.

"Seek not to declare my word, but seek first to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word, yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men.

"But now hold your peace; study my word which hath gone forth among the children of men, and also study my word which shall come forth among the children of men, or that which is now translating, yea, until you have obtained all which I shall grant unto the children of men in this generation, and then shall all things be added thereto.

"Behold, thou art Hyrum, my son; seek the kingdom of God, and all things shall be added according to that which is just.

"Build upon my rock, which is my gospel;

"Deny not the spirit of revelation, nor the spirit of prophecy, for wo unto him that denieth these things;

"Therefore, treasure up in your heart until the time which is in my wisdom that you shall go forth.

"Behold, I speak unto all who have good desires, and have thrust in their sickle to reap.

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world.

"I am the same who came unto mine own and mine own received me not;

"But verily, verily, I say unto you, that as many as will receive me, to them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name. Amen."

A MARVELOUS WORK AND A WONDER

This "marvelous work and a wonder" has come to pass and has spread all over the world where there has been religious liberty; and from every land and from every clime honest, faithful, God-fearing men and women have heard the sound of the true voice of the shepherd through his servants who have gone forth to proclaim the gospel. And men of great influence have been gathered into this Church. Men like John Taylor who presided over the Church, heard the gospel in a foreign land; the parents of George Q. Cannon, and many other leaders in this Church, heard the sound of this gospel and embraced it and gathered to Zion and labored with all the power and ability that they possessed for the advancement of God's kingdom. Year by year this great and wonderful work has rolled on and we are becoming known as a God-fearing people, as a people with a destiny that is sure to be fulfilled.

THANKFUL FOR TESTIMONY

I thank God for a knowledge that he lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, and that Joseph Smith was his prophet. I rejoice in the knowledge that we are being blessed of Almighty God and being led by the inspiration of his Spirit in all of our labors. May God inspire all who shall speak here during this conference; may we go home carrying the message of life and salvation under the inspiration of the Spirit of the living God that is poured out upon this occasion during this conference, is my humble prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Redeemer, Amen.

ELDER DAVID O. McKAY

"It is expedient that the Church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus."

THE JOY OF FRIENDSHIP

I came to this conference at about ten minutes to the opening hour, and had the privilege of greeting many friends, among whom were at least a half dozen of life-long standing, and others whom I have met in the mission field. My soul was made happy as I shook hands with these dear friends. I esteem it a great privilege to renew the warmth of that friendship. Among these missionary friends is one who, in one sentence, seemed to link this opening session of conference with those held in pioneer days. Commenting on the fact that he left his home in Cache valley only two hours before he was sitting in this tabernacle, he said, "I have taken four days to travel that distance to come to conference with an ox team." Just that remark awakened renewed appreciation in my heart for the work of our pioneers; and it made me appreciate, too, the privilege of living in this most wonderful time in the world's history when we have the enjoyment and blessing of so many marvelous inventions and discoveries, particularly the radio by means of which the British Premier this morning greeted the people of the United States, and everybody who tuned in heard his voice instantly. How easily the gospel may yet be preached to every people!

Well, it is good to meet friends. This conference affords us an opportunity to do so; and our souls are made happy as we shake each other's hands in confidence and brotherhood. In contrast, my soul is chilled and my faculties inhibited if I meet one who I think is magnifying my weaknesses and who seems almost to rejoice in them—who turns his head rather than to shake hands. Such a man makes life chilly.

MEETING GOD

In the house of God, however, we have the opportunity not only of meeting friends and of rejoicing in the strength and encouragement that comes from that meeting, but also of meeting God our Father through his Holy Spirit. We rejoice in his presence. He is here today, and he has inspired President Grant. You felt President Grant's spirit in his opening remarks, you felt his faith, his confidence in his brethren and in this work of God; and if we had nothing else but these blessings to which I have referred we could go away with our souls well fed.

IN THE BROTHERHOOD OF CHRIST

I wonder if the Lord did not have some such thought as this in mind when he said, "It is expedient that the Church meet together often." We meet in the house of God not as mere acquaintances suspicious of one another, but as brethren in the brotherhood of Christ. We meet in the presence of him who has said, "Love one another." I look forward to the time when the membership of our quorums will approach their quorum meetings in anticipation of that brotherhood and experience that fraternal feeling which strengthens the soul and which inspires all to render greater service to their fellowmen.

SACRAMENT MEETINGS

I believe in meetings. I desire to say this morning that I feel impressed to emphasize what the Lord has designated as the most important meeting in the Church, and that is the sacrament meeting. In this very text which I have read, given to Joseph Smith by revelation, the Lord refers to that special meeting. "It is expedient that the church meet together often." Not for these general purposes to which I have made brief reference, but for the specific purpose of partaking of the sacrament. He has designated a particular prayer to be offered on that occasion. He has prescribed for us only a few set prayers, one of which is the blessing on the bread and water.

THE LORD'S SUPPER

Let us first consider the importance of this sacrament. It is not the only sacrament in the Church. It is particularly designated "The Lord's Supper." But if you will recall the occasion on which that was given or instituted you will agree with me that the Lord himself, the Savior, attached great importance to it. He had met with his twelve disciples in the upper room in Jerusalem on that memorable night of the betrayal. He had pointed out the traitor. He had partaken of the passover with them in accordance with the Jewish practice, and then he took bread and brake it and said, "Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you." He took the cup and blessed it, and said, "Drink ye all of it in remembrance of the blood which is shed for you, and this do in remembrance of me till I come; till we eat and drink in the kingdom of the Father." That was given just a few hours before his crucifixion. That alone establishes its importance, but if we put the proper interpretation upon the phrase in Corinthians, 11th chapter, which Paul used when he was teaching this principle to the Corinthians, we learn further that the Lord himself revealed the significance of the sacrament to Paul, and Paul gave specific instructions to the Church at Corinth, in regard to the partaking of these important and sacred emblems. Again in this dispensation the Lord revealed specifically how this part of the worship should be conducted. All God's ordinances and ceremonies are sacred but it seems to me that there is more importance attached to this than perhaps to any other sacrament or ceremony in the Church of Christ. So much for its importance.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE SACRAMENT

Now, what does it signify? You will find first that the sacrament is a memorial of Christ's life and death. When we think of his life we think of sacrifice. Not a moment of his existence on earth did Christ think more of himself than he did of his brethren and the people whom he came to save, always losing himself for the good of others, and finally giving his life for the redemption of mankind. When we partake of the sacrament in his presence we remember him, his life of sacrifice, and service; and we are inspired by that thought and memory. There is nothing won in this life without sacrifice. I am thrilled when I study carefully any principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and find that it is part of the whole, or rather that it comprehends the whole. Truly, truth is the sum of existence. So we can associate this sacrament, with all truth, all life. It is all-comprehensive. No thing worth while is obtained in this life without sacrificing, without putting forth effort. The evil one thrusts things upon us but God asks us to reach out and get that which he offers. "Teach self-denial," says Walter Scott, "and make it pleasurable, and you create for the world a destiny more sublime than ever issued from the brain of the wildest dreamer."

THE BOND OF BROTHERHOOD

A second significance or a second principle associated with the administering of the sacrament is the bond of brotherhood to which I have made mention. In the early establishment of the Church of Christ the brethren met, we are told, often at day-break, to partake of this sacrament as in the bond of brotherhood, of oneness. They met, as it were, under oath, comparatively as the Roman soldiers were bound in unit. In the Church at Corinth, when Paul wrote to them regarding their abuse of this holy sacrament, they held, previous to the administering of the sacrament, a love feast in which the rich and the poor met. They brought their food with them,—the rich plenty, of which the poor partook. That was at the beginning, carrying out the passover and the sacrament which followed. But when Paul wrote to them he found that those who had plenty were eating by themselves and those who were poor had nothing. This practice he condemned, saying that it was not part of the sacrament. He told them to satisfy their appetites and partake of the sacrament in remembrance of the body and blood of the Christ.

However, the element of brotherhood has been associated with it always. I remember when I was a boy that there was emphasized even more than we hear emphasized now the necessity of no one's partaking of the sacrament who had ill feelings toward another, and I have heard more than one man say: "I am sorry that I hurt brother so-and-so's feelings, and I ask his forgiveness." He felt it necessary to do that before he was worthy to partake of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

We meet in the brotherhood of Christ, all on the same level, each expressing confidence in the other and all in one another. Oh, the strength of brotherhood! Sin divides us. Righteousness unites.

COMMUNION WITH CHRIST

The partaking of the sacrament indicates also how communion with Christ may be secured. It cannot be obtained by Sunday righteousness and week-day indulgence. It implies that we will remember Christ always. "If we show the Lord's death at communion we must show the Lord's life in the world."

DIVINE GUIDANCE

And the fourth great significance is the promise that it is a means of receiving divine guidance. "If a friend is one who summons us to our best, then is not Jesus Christ our best friend? and should we not think of the communion as one of the chief appeals to us to be our best? The Lord's Supper looks not back to our past with a critical eye, but to our future with a helpful one."

THE SACRAMENT PRAYER

May I call attention to the great obligation which every member of the Church assumes when he first partakes of the sacrament on the Lord's day. Think of the prayer revealed in this dispensation: "Oh, God the Eternal Father." What an invocation! An acknowledgment of God as our Creator; the giver of all good; the bestower of all blessings; in whom is all power and all glory; and yet, our Father, and we his children. The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man! "We ask thee in the name of thy beloved son Jesus Christ," who is interceding for us, through whom all blessings are obtained,— "to bless and sanctify this bread to the souls of all those who partake of it."

Bless the bread! It is only bread. There may be a mystery about the sacrament, but that mystery does not consist in the changing of that bread to the actual body of the Christ. As President Brigham Young has said, the thought is a repulsive one. But it is a symbol, and we ask God to bless it to the souls of all those who partake of it, who witness — oh, there is the point. Recall in this regard President Grant's appeal this morning to be honest with the Lord in all your dealings. What a fundamental virtue is honesty! the roundation of all character. It is said to be the mother of a whole family of true virtues. Well, that principle is associated with this great sacrament. We witness, that is, solemnly covenant in the presence of one another, in that great assembly, and "unto thee, O God the Eternal Father"—What?

A GENTLEMAN'S WORD OF HONOR

Before we specify, think of what it means to make a promise. Your word is more sacred than your bond. I like to think of that English gentleman who, finding himself distressed financially, borrowed from a friend, to whom he gave his written note; but before the gentleman received his competence, he was again in financial distress and borrowed from another friend, to whom he gave only his promise. Both these lenders knew when the gentleman received his money and both called for the return of their money. The first, who held the gentleman's note, was surprised to hear the gentleman say, "I will pay the second first." The first one protested saying, "I loaned you that money first, your lordship."

"Yes, that is true, replied the English gentleman, but you hold my note. This friend has only my word of honor. I will redeem my promise first."

The first gentleman taking the note from his pocket, tore it into pieces, threw it into the waste-basket, and said, "There, your lordship, I have only your promise."

"Since you place it upon that basis you shall have your money first."

A mere incident emphasizing the importance that a gentleman places upon his word of honor.

OUR OBLIGATION

My brethren and sisters, do we always stop to think, on that sacred Sabbath day when we meet together to partake of the sacrament, that we witness, promise, obligate ourselves, in the presence of one another, and in the presence of God, that we will do certain things? Note them. I have time merely to mention them.

The first: That we are willing to take upon ourselves the name of the Son. In so doing we choose him as our leader and our ideal; and he is the one perfect character in all the world. It is a glorious thing to be a member of the Church of Christ and to be called a Christian in the true sense of the term; and we promise that we should like to be that, that we are willing to do it.

Secondly, that we will always remember 'him. Not just on Sunday, but on Monday, in our daily acts, in our self-control. When our brother hurts us we are going to try to master our feelings and not retaliate in the same spirit of anger. When a brother treats us with contempt we are going to try to return kindness. That's the spirit of the Christ and that's what we have promised,—that we will do our best to achieve these high standards of Christianity, true Christian principles.

The third: We promise to "keep the commandments which he has given." Tithing, fast offerings, the Word of Wisdom, kindness, forgiveness, love. The obligation of a member of the Church of Christ is great, but it is as glorious as it is great, because obedience to these principles gives life, eternal life. On the other hand, the man who seeks to live by violating the principles is deceived by the adversary and goes the way to death.

ADDING SIN TO SIN

To partake of the sacrament unworthily is to take a step toward spiritual death. No man can be dishonest within himself without deadening the susceptibility of his spirit. Sin can stun the conscience as a blow on the head can stun the physical senses. He who promises one thing and deliberately fails to keep his word, adds sin to sin. On natural principles such a man "eats and drinks condemnation to his soul."

We die in this world before our hearts stop beating, as we live and partake of eternal life before we pass into the other world; for this is part of life eternal, and true life consists in obedience to the principles of the gospel. We promise every Sabbath day to keep those principles.

THE BLESSING

And what is the blessing? "That they may always have his Spirit to be with them." What a divine guidance! And I testify to you that divine inspiration is a reality. Men and women who obey the principles of life and salvation, sincerely repent of their sins, and as sincerely strive to live in accordance with the principles of the gospel, are guided and inspired by the Holy Ghost, and are shown things to come. I testify that that guidance is with this Church and has been since the Prophet Joseph Smith established it. I bear you witness too, that this Church is the power of God unto salvation, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

SUMMING UP

To sum up then, the operation of the law of cause and effect is as constant in the spiritual realm as it is in the material world. You obey the principle and you receive the blessing, and the keeping of each promise made in relation to the sacrament brings the results and the blessings as sure as the sun brings light. Order, reverence, attention to divine promises,—the promise to enter into the fold of Christ, to cherish virtues mentioned in the gospel of Christ, to keep them ever in mind, to love the Lord whole-heartedly, and to labor, even at the sacrifice of self, for the brotherhood of man—these and all kindred virtues are associated with the partaking of the Lord's supper. It is good to meet together and especially to renew our covenants with God in that holy eucharist. "Help us O, God, to realize the great atoning sacrifice, the gift of thy beloved Son, the Prince of peace, the Holy One."

GRATITUDE FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THE CHURCH

My heart is full of rejoicing this morning for my membership in the Church, for the privilege I have of meeting you my fellow workers in the Church of Christ. I prize the privilege of associating with the First Presidency of this Church and the Twelve Apostles, the First Council of Seventy and the Presiding Bishopric and the Stake Presidencies. Oh, it is a glorious thing to be one in the brotherhood of Christ! God strengthen us that we may go out and make the sacrament each Sunday that we partake of it what God intends it to be,—the means of strengthening the saints, of eradicating ill will, hard feelings and back-biting, of establishing unity, love and strength, and keeping the commandments of God, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH W. McMURRIN

of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the California Mission

I esteem this a very great privilege, my brethren and sisters, and at the same time, at this moment, it is a very great surprise. I am thankful, however, that I feel in my soul that I am in harmony with the counsels that have already been imparted in this conference and that I believe most sincerely in the doctrines that have been presented for our consideration.

I come up, my brethren and sisters, from the mission field in California, where I have had the privilege of laboring for some time in seeking to spread the truth as it has been revealed in the dispensation in which we live. I am happy to be associated with the young men and women who have been assigned to that field of labor. Generally speaking, the missionaries are all young men, or young women. Occasionally, through the system that has been introduced during recent years, a few men of experience and one or two women of experience have come into the California Mission, as short term missionaries. We have rejoiced very greatly in the companionship of these men and women who have had development and experience for a goodly period of time in the work of the Lord.

You have just learned from the remarks made by President Heber J. Grant that California has been blessed with his presence and with his ministry, both in the stakes that have been established in that great state, and in the branches that belong to the California Mission. The people are always glad in their hearts when they have the privilege of meeting with the President of the Church, and of listening to his testimony which has always been so strong and sure that the work which is under his direction as the President of the Church has been revealed and established by the Lord our God.

We have been blessed just recently, for about five months, with the presence of Doctor James E. Talmage, who has been giving some very remarkable and inspiring discourses over the radio in Los Angeles; and many people, we have discovered, who are not of our faith, have been giving attention to those discourses. We have not only rejoiced in his ministry, as he has delivered the word of the Lord and the doctrines of the gospel over the radio, but we have rejoiced also in his companionship in the wards, and in the branches, that he has visited quite thoroughly throughout the state of California. We feel that we have been very greatly blessed by his presence, by his counsel, and by the doctrines that he has presented for the consideration of the people, both members and non-members of the Church.

We have been blessed also with the ministry of Brother George Albert Smith, of the Council of the Apostles, who was appointed in the early part of the year to visit the California Mission. He gave counsel that was very greatly to the advantage of the people who make up the membership of the Church in the mission.

I am glad, my brethren and sisters, that our faith in the work of God remains unshaken, and we feel from our experiences that we receive constantly renewed evidences confirming the truth as it has been revealed. I was impressed with the wonderful character of the work established in this dispensation, in reading in the editorial column of the Los Angeles Examiner of Sunday, September 29th,

"The great majority of preachers no longer teach that the earth as we know it, was created merely by the expression of Divine Will in a period of six days. Practically all religious teachers now interpret the six days to mean six PERIODS OF TIME, six 'geological ages' reaching over periods inconceivable to our mind."

When I read this, my brethren and sisters, I could not but feel how wonderful are the inspired teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, who in no way professed to have scientific information, but who always taught that he delivered the word of the Lord as that word was given to him. It surely is wonderful that he should have declared almost at the very opening of this dispensation, that which is now beginning to dawn upon the minds of men in relation to the creation of the world. The Prophet taught this doctrine very clearly, as you can read in the Pearl of Great Price. I do not know just how long ago the Book of Abraham was translated. I have in my possession a copy of that work that I believe was published in Liverpool in 1851. so it has been in print for a long period of time. Surely the lad Joseph Smith, the farmer's youth, the man without scholastic attainment, could not have conceived of the great truth to which I have referred, and taught it so correctly, had it not been impressed upon him by the inspiration and revelation of the Lord our God.

I am happy to say, my brethren and sisters, that we are endeavoring to the best of our ability to declare the glad tidings of great joy that have been revealed for the salvation of the human family. We believe most devoutly in the mission of the Redeemer of the world; that he is the very Son of God; that he in his time, chose mortal men and conferred upon them the authority of priesthood, the power to minister in his own great name and in the name of the Eternal Father. He sent those men forth to preach the gospel, gave them commandment to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and made the promise that every soul who would hearken, who would accept of the message, should find salvation in the presence of God; and of course, those who would not accept would take the consequences of condemnation. We believe, and we teach to our fellow men, that in this last dispensation, in fulfillment of the promises that have been made by the mouths of holy prophets, that same Eternal Father, that same Redeemer of the world, have sent holy messengers to confer upon mortal men the authority of priesthood; and by that authority, it having been given to us by new revelation in the dispensation of the fulness of times, we go out among the people, not because of the commission given to the apostles in the meridian of time, but because the Lord God of heaven has said to men in this dispensation, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." I am very happy to say the missionaries so teach, although it may be at times in halting words, and in fear and trembling. Men and women are delivering this message and are bearing witness that through the power of God, through the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord, they know whereof they speak. I thank the Lord that I have the confidence in my own soul that I am not preaching the doctrine of men. I am not laboring for the glory of man nor for the plaudits of men. I am laboring in the fear of God, because upon me that divine authority has been conferred, and I am under obligation to cry repentance, to the best of my power, among the children of men and to help lead men, if possible, from the darkness that is in the world, to the truth that has been revealed. In doing that, with my companions, I have partaken of that joy with them that passeth understanding, and we do know that we are trying to bring to mankind a glorious message that is for their benefit and salvation.

May God help us all to love the truth, believe in it and maintain it in our conduct here and in our speech before the people for ever and ever, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER REY L. PRATT

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Mexican Mission

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I may have the benefit of your faith and prayers and that the Spirit of the Lord may actuate me while I shall speak to you for a few moments this morning. Sometimes we are so taken by surprise that our breath nearly leaves us; but I have an implicit and abiding faith in the Lord that if we put our trust in him and labor to the best of our ability he will prepare the way for us whereby we may accomplish the things that he commands us to do.

I take it, my brethren and sisters, that, as people having the gospel of Jesus Christ and a testimony of it, the Lord calls upon us to bear that testimony and make known his word to the world, and to bear testimony one to another of the inspiration of the Lord and the knowledge that has come to us concerning this great gospel plan that is instituted in the world for the salvation of men.

During the past six months my mind has been centered very much upon the Book of Mormon. It has fallen to my lot to publish an edition of that book in the Spanish language. Our work is now completed, so far as the printing of the book is concerned. I think the last form was printed yesterday, and we have now only the binding to attend to. We shall soon have in circulation the third edition of the Book of Mormon in the Spanish language. My hope and desire is that this edition may soon be exhausted and that the circulation of that book among the Spanish-speaking people may increase, for in the Spanish language are to be reached the descendants, many millions of them, of those people who wrote the book. It seems to me that in the work that I have been engaged in—getting out this particular edition of the book—there has come a vision of a very wide distribution of that book among the seed of Father Lehi, who dwell in the land south of us. Many thousands of copies have been distributed in the past, and a very great many people have been made to know of the truthfulness of that record.

In this connection my mind reverts to the promise of the great Prophet Moroni concerning the obtaining of a testimony of the divinity of that book, and I should like to read that to you this morning. You will find it recorded in the tenth chapter of the book called Moroni:

“And now I, Moroni, write somewhat as seemeth me good; and I write unto my brethren, the Lamanites, and I would that they should know that more than four hundred and twenty years have passed away since the sign was given of the coming of Christ.

“And I seal up these records, after I have spoken a few words by way of exhortation unto you.

“Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam even down until the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your heart.

“And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

“And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things.”

I have always believed in the Book of Mormon, my brethren and sisters. Before I ever read the Book of Mormon, I believed that it was a divine record. It was taught to me by my parents, and it was taught to me in the Sunday School and in the Primary classes that I attended as a little boy. I have read this book many, many times. It seems to me that I have considered it from most every angle; and,—I say it with a great deal of thankfulness,—I have been placed in a position in my missionary labors to challenge the book from an archaeological standpoint, and have been able to see firsthand the remains of former civilizations that have dwelt upon this continent. I have stood in the shadows of the mighty ruins of the past, that are stupendous in their magnitude and in their grandeur. I have visualized the people that built those great buildings, and it has seemed to me, beyond any question of a doubt, that they could justly be associated with the Book of Mormon people. From that angle has come to me a great bolstering faith and knowledge that the Book of Mormon is true. I have thought that I had read it with a prayerful heart in years that have passed, and felt sure that I had received the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord that this book is a divine record. But I wish to bear you my testimony that during the last few months, since May, especially, when I have been so particularly engaged in bringing out this work, I have prayed to the Lord anew that he would evidence to me, even more strongly than ever before, if such were possible, the divinity of this work; and I stand before you, my brethren and sisters, and testify, after having read the book five consecutive times since May, that I know beyond all doubt that the Book of Mormon is what it purports to be. It is the divine record of a forgotten people, brought forth through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith. The Holy Ghost has witnessed this unto me and I wish that I could make you sense the spirit in which I feel it. It is consuming in its nature. It makes me tremble to contemplate what this knowledge means to me.

My brethren and sisters, the Book of Mormon is one of the greatest works in all the world. With the witness that I speak of there has come to me other knowledge, without which the testimony of the divinity of the Book of Mormon would not be of much value; but, the Book of Mormon being true, the truthfulness of it having been borne in upon my soul, I know through that as one medium—and I know, it through other mediums—that God lives as an entity, a tangible being, in whose form I am fashioned and in whose likeness I am made. I know, beyond all peradventure of a doubt, that he is in very deed my Father, that I can call upon him as such, and that when I come before him in prayer, in sympathy, he will hear; and if my prayers are for righteous things he will grant unto me those things for which I ask. Through this book, knowing that it is true, I also have this witness, and to me it is valid, that Jesus is the Son of God; that he is the Redeemer of the world; that he was born of woman and lived in the world among men and ministered unto them and established the gospel; that he was nailed upon a cross and suffered for the sins of all men, redeemed them from the grave, broke the bonds of death, and instituted the resurrection, becoming the first fruits of it; and he lives, for this book testifies that he lives.

I know, by this same process of reasoning, that if the book is true, he, through whose instrumentality it was brought forth, is and was a prophet of God. So I have no hesitancy in testifying that Joseph Smith, the man whom the Lord chose to bring forth this book, and to open up this greatest of all gospel dispensations, was his prophet and that he spoke as a chosen instrument in the hands of God. If he was a prophet of God, the revelations that through him have come and which are recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, are likewise the word of God. If he were instrumental in the hands of God in translating this great work, which is true, he was likewise instrumental in the hands of God in bringing forth the Pearl of Great Price and the precious gems of religious thought, knowledge and history, that we have in that wonderful book which constitutes, with the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, the standard Church works to which we refer in points of doctrine and in points of history pertaining to the Lord's great work in the world.

I know that these things are true, my brethren and sisters. I rejoice in them, and I have an abiding faith and a strong testimony, that is as strong as my knowledge that I live and speak to you today, that not only was Joseph Smith a prophet of the Lord, but that each one who has succeeded him in the presidency of this Church is likewise and has been, a prophet of the Lord.

I bear you my witness, my brethren and sisters, that I know that the gospel is upon the earth and that God's Church exists, fully organized and fully authorized. There has been a restoration of the holy priesthood. There has been a restoration of the keys of the kingdom of God upon the earth, and those keys are here in our midst. I want to leave you my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that I know that the Church today is guided by the spirit of inspiration and by the spirit of revelation and by the spirit of prophecy just as much as it ever has been guided in any age or at any time, including all former gospel dispensations, even in this greatest of all gospel dispensations, opened by the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith. I bear you my witness that it stands us all in hand to give heed to the teachings, admonitions, and advice of the servants of the Lord by him authorized and by him acknowledged to minister in the Church and keep it in order. I raise my voice in warning against those who presume, because of any motive, be it whatever it may, to better the conditions in this Church other than through sustaining the authority that the Lord has given, through whom will come the revelations to guide and to direct this Church.

I pray for the blessings of the Lord to be upon this people. I pray for the blessings of the Lord to be upon the missionaries who are in the world, laboring so valiantly. Those young men and those young women are fine characters. They are laboring zealously for the spread of truth. They need your assistance, and the world needs their teachings, for they are teaching the gospel that has been restored. Not only does the world need the teachings and the ministry of those who are out there, but, my brethren and sisters, if you could only see what we see, who are out on the firing line, you would know that we do not repeat it as a mere form when we say that there is a crying need for thousands more to be in the ministry of the Lord, to take care of the ministry in the world. I have cried that from my standpoint in the Mexican Mission for years, and we have had the support that I believe could be rightly given us; but recently for the past two months while in Independence, I have had occasion to visit with President Bennion in some of the nearby branches of his mission, and have held conference with him nearly every Sunday that I have been down there. It has not interfered with my week-day work, and I have been pleased to visit with him in the great mission over which he presides. In many of these trips we would start out late Saturday evening through the country by automobile, or by train. I have made inquiry of President Bennion, "What about missionaries through all of these towns, through all of these villages, through all this country-side?" And he has remarked, "Brother Pratt, we haven't them here. We haven't the men to take care of the work that there is for us to do." I have talked with a great many people who would be anxious to have missionaries come into their midst. The harvest, my brethren and sisters, truly is great. The work is great. The necessity for sincerity, calling for honest effort, is apparent everywhere in the Lord's work. May we acquit ourselves as men and as women having this great knowledge, and bear off our responsibilities; for, as I frequently say to the missionaries in our mission, "Brethren and sisters, the responsibility of teaching the gospel in this mission is upon you right now. It is no use for you to criticize what is in the past, nor will it do any good for you to be particularly worried about what shall follow after you leave; but the responsibility of preaching the gospel, right now and here, is upon the little group that is gathered together in this mission." So likewise the responsibility of this work today, my brethren and sisters, rests upon the membership of the Church today, and the Lord will hold us accountable for our stewardship, for our participation, and for our faithfulness in his work.

May he continue to add his blessings to us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I have rejoiced beyond my power to express, at what I have heard and what I have felt this morning. As the good brother who was hard of hearing remarked, upon one occasion, when somebody asked him why he went to church when he couldn't hear a word, "It isn't what you hear, it is what you feel that makes you better." I have enjoyed the influences that are present. My memory has gone back to the time when this building was first erected and as a child I helped to decorate the roof with festoons of paper flowers,—at least I helped make the flowers. I have seen the improvement in its lighting go on from then until now. I remember the old gas jets around the gallery that were used to illuminate this building. I think we have now arrived at perfection of lighting for the comfort of all who assemble, and I congratulate those who have installed the fine system that makes this room as delightful as it is possible for it to be, as far as light is concerned.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS OF THE GOSPEL

The testimonies that have been borne this morning have rejoiced my soul. I am thankful that I belong to a church that numbers among its members men and women who know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that in this latter-day he has spoken again from the heavens, that the authority of his holy priesthood has been conferred upon men, and that we who are members of this Church have taken the preparatory step toward a home in his celestial kingdom. I am thankful for this knowledge, and when I listened this morning to the report of our beloved President, telling of the progress and development of the Church in a material way, I was greatly pleased.

Some of our associates have recently been called home. The Lord has said to them, "It is enough, you have finished your work on earth." Those who have been called to succeed them are in the service of the Lord in different stations. The appeals of the mission presidents remind us of the fact that disseminating the truth is not the responsibility of someone else, but it is your responsibility and mine to see that the gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity is taught to the children of men. Doesn't it make you feel grateful? Isn't there a sense of appreciation welling up in your souls when you realize that we are numbered among the comparatively few of all God's children who believe in him and know that he is?

A PURE ATMOSPHERE

I have been sitting here this morning wishing that my relatives who are not here might be under the sound of the voices of the brethren who have spoken, that they, too, might partake of this influence that comes from our Heavenly Father. I have wished that conditions were such that all Israel might, not only at annual and semi-annual conferences and stake conferences, but at all times live in such an atmosphere that it would not be possible for them to do wrong.

I remember a number of years ago a good man who was at that time chairman of the board of control of the Universalist Church of America. He came here to visit our city and attended two of our Sunday schools. In one of the kindergarten classes he became much interested. Eventually, when the school was about to close, the superintendent said, "Wouldn't you like to say a few words to the school?" He had informed me in the other Sunday school, for he visited two, that he didn't feel to say anything; but when in the second school the superintendent asked him to speak, he said, "I would like to say a few words." He said, "If I could only live in the atmosphere that I found in that little kindergarten class in this Sabbath school this morning, I couldn't help but be a good man." I have thought of that a good many times. We choose carefully the atmosphere that we breathe, that we may live in health. But sometimes, in our carelessness, we place ourselves in subjection to immoral influences that destroy our resistance of evil, and we are led to do things that we ought not to do and would not do if under the influence of the Lord. If we would only be humble, if we would only be prayerful, if we would only live in such a way that each hour of our lives we could truthfully say, "Father in heaven, I am willing and anxious to do what thou wouldst have me do," our lives every day would be enriched as we go through this earth experience.

OUR LIVES ENRICHED BY SERVICE

Twenty-six years I have been privileged, and honored, to occupy this stand as one of the General Authorities of the Church; yet it seems but a short time to me since I was ordained an apostle and became a member of the Quorum of the Twelve. During that time, all but three of those who were among the General Authorities of the Church have passed to the other side, and I realize that only a few years more and my summons will come. It may be only a few days. That's not important. The important thing to all of us is, that when the summons comes, when the Lord calls, we can say, like one of old, "Lord here am I, and I am ready."

Our ministry is one of love. Our service is one which enriches our lives. The opportunity of those who preside in the stakes and wards of Zion or elsewhere, is one beyond all price, and if we are living as God intends that we should live, if we are ministering as he desires that we should minister, every day of our lives is enriched by the influence of his Spirit, our love of our fellowmen increases and our souls are enlarged until we feel that we could take into our arms all of God's children, with a desire to bless them and bring them to an understanding of the truth.

EACH SHOULD DO HIS PART

When I think of the burdens that are carried by the President of this Church and his counselors, and realize the responsibilities that are placed upon their shoulders, with all my heart I desire to help them, that I may not be an incumbrance, but that in the position to which I have been called, with you, my brethren and my sisters, we may each take our place and carry our portion of the load and magnify our calling to the honor and glory of God.

THANKFUL FOR LOVE OF ASSOCIATES AND FRIENDS

I have associated with a large number of men who have presided in the Church as Presidents and Counselors, as members of the Quorum of the Twelve, the First Council of Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric and Patriarchs. I have associated with many presidents of stakes and bishops of wards. I have associated with many who have presided over mission fields and auxiliary organizations. I want to say that all these men and women of prominence, without exception as far as I can recall now, have been an inspiration to me to serve God and to be a better man. I thank my family that they have made it possible for me to do the things that have been assigned to me—my good wife who has carried the burden at home; my children who have never once discouraged me from doing the work that has been assigned to me, but have encouraged me and blessed me, not only by permitting me to do my part but by striving to do their part as they have had it called to their attention by those who preside over them. I am grateful to the men with whom I associate, my brethren, for their love and kindness and gentleness to me; for of the twenty-six years I have referred to several of those years have been years of illness, of inability to do the things that were in my heart to do, but not one word of reproach or of unkindness has come from one of these, my brethren. From all Israel, from every corner where I have gone I have felt that there has been a desire that I might live, that I might magnify my calling, that I might be worthy of the high position to which I have been called. The members of my quorum have performed my work, apparently gladly and willingly, when I was unable to perform it; and now in the Mutual Improvement organization, my counselors and the board members have stood by me and have carried the burden, and in their anxiety have taken the load that ordinarily falls to the presiding officer. The result has been that wherever I go I feel love and kindness. In the homes of the Latter-day Saints, in all parts of the Church where I have been permitted to go, the spirit of prayer and thanksgiving has been present. My life has been illumined by the power of God and I have seen the beauties of the gospel of Jesus Christ as they have been made manifest in the lives of these wonderful men and women.

THE LORD'S WORK

Brethren and sisters, this is the Lord's work. Men could not have carried it forward successfully as it has been done by the simple means employed by us. Ordinary man could not have brought into your souls the knowledge that you possess. Neither can we as men inspire those in the world with the assurance that God lives and that this is his Church, but if we will do our part, our Heavenly Father will bless our effort. If we will sustain those who are called to lead us, if we will pray for and uphold those who preside in the various stakes and wards of this Church, nothing can stop our progress. The Lord will make it possible for his children to understand, if they are worthy to understand, and our blessings will be in proportion to the efforts we put forth to bring them to a knowledge of the truth.

This day, with all my heart, I thank him for life, for being, for membership in this Church. I thank him for the Word of Wisdom. I thank him for the Ten Commandments. I thank him for all the ordinances of the House of the Lord that I have received, each one of which has been intended not for me alone but I have been permitted to receive a portion of that which has been intended for all his children, wherever they may be, if they are willing to receive what he offers to them, without money and without price.

Brethren and sisters, let us go to our homes rejoicing when this wonderful conference is finished. No doubt when it is concluded we will say, "It is the best one that we have ever had." Why? Because while we are basking in the sunshine of the Spirit of God we forget our sorrows and our distresses. While our lives are illumined by his power, our souls are enriched, and we know that we are blessed of the Lord. The gospel teaches us that if we take advantage of our opportunities, all the time we may enjoy those blessings, and all the time the love that we now have in our hearts for our fellowmen will abide with us.

This is God's work. I know it, as well as I know that I live, and I bear witness of it, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Zion Stands with Hills Surrounded."

Elder Joseph F. Merrill, Commissioner of Education for the Church, pronounced the benediction, after which the Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference was continued in the Tabernacle at 2 o'clock p. m.

President Grant, who presided, announced that the congregation would sing, as the opening hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

After the singing, Elder Harry Edward Sutton, President of the Oquirrh Stake, offered the invocation.

The hymn, "Though Deepening Trials," was sung by the congregation.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Amplifying sets have been arranged to accommodate the deaf. Those not having ear phones may secure them for each session, upon application to the Bureau of Information. Those desiring further information regarding them may secure it from the Bureau of Information. Seats will be reserved in the rear of the building for the deaf.

ELDER ORSON F. WHITNEY

I am happy to be at home once more after a brief absence in the East. I have seen nothing, heard nothing, found nothing, in my travels that could wean me away from the love of my mountain home; from my dear ones who dwell here; and from my kindred and friends of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

LAND OF BEAUTY

When I was in Switzerland, the loveliest land I was ever in, I told the people there that I had come from the Switzerland of America, and I congratulated them on living in the Utah of Europe. This is a beautiful land, beautiful by nature, and beautiful in spirit. It is the home of the Saints of God, the home of the prophets of God, the home of a people who possess the powers of the Priesthood and the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel. That is what makes it so beautiful.

IN THE NORTHERN STATES

During the month of September, in company with Elder Noah

S. Pond, the able and amiable president of the Northern States Mission, I traversed six states of the Union, namely, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. We held forty meetings with the missionaries, saints and investigators, and addressed in the aggregate fully fifty percent of the Latter-day Saint population of those states. We dedicated two chapels in Ohio, one at Cincinnati, the other at Dayton, and organized a branch in that town. We also organized an Elder's quorum in Chicago, the first quorum of its kind known in any of the missions of the Church, so far as I am informed. I much enjoyed my labors, and the Lord was with us in our journeyings and in our work.

ADDRESSING THE ROTARIANS

On the 10th of September, I had the honor of addressing the Chicago Rotary Club, a distinguished body of professional and business men, at their regular luncheon in the Sherman Hotel, having been invited to deliver the invocation. I was billed upon the program as "Bishop Orson F. Whitney of the Mormon Temple, Salt Lake City," the maker of the program evidently thinking of the temple as a church, with me as its pastor. My daughter Margaret (Mrs. Lester C. Essig), who resides in Chicago, was asked by an outside friend, "Who is this Mormon priest that's going to pray at the club luncheon?" Margaret answered: "It happens to be my father"—and there was silence in that vicinity (if not in heaven) "for the space of half an hour."

I was given a most cordial reception, a Jewish rabbi being particularly gracious in greeting me. After I had spoken, for I made a little prefatory talk before offering the prayer, a gentleman sitting near leaned over to tell me that he was well acquainted with President Heber J. Grant and prized his friendship highly. He also spoke kindly of my deceased brother, Horace G. Whitney. I do not recall the gentleman's name, but doubtless the President will. He said the President's autographed photo hung upon the wall of his office in San Francisco.

I sat upon the chairman's platform, right next to Colonel Archer, the speaker of the occasion, who gave a splendid talk on "Sanitation and Civilization." He began thus:

"While Bishop Whitney was speaking, I was reminded of the story of the two oysters at a church festival. One of them inquired, 'Where are we?' The other replied, 'We are in the soup at a church festival.' 'Must be some mistake,' said the first, 'what need had they for both of us?'"

BRISBANE'S ADMISSION

And now, to change the subject. Some months ago, I clipped from a newspaper a paragraph, part of a column furnished to the syndicate press by Mr. Arthur Brisbane, who is said to be the highest-priced editorial writer in all the world. Speaking of Supreme Court Justice Holmes and quoting the latter's motto, "Rest is not the destiny of man," Mr. Brisbane added this comment:

"A big monument would reward Justice Holmes if he could tell us what the destiny of man really is; how we got here; whence we came; whither we go from here; what happens after we go. But about such questions a learned Supreme Court Justice knows as little as an Eskimo watching for seals in an ice-hole."

"An honest confession is good for the soul." So runs an old proverb. I admire Mr. Brisbane, not only for his vast learning and his brilliant writings, but for his courage and candor in admitting that there are some things he does not know. For what he says of Justice Holmes applies inferentially to himself. I would not put either of these learned men on a level with an Eskimo watching for seals in an ice-hole, but if Mr. B. confesses to a lack of information as to man's origin, destiny and the purpose of his creation, I for one shall not dispute him, but content myself with honoring his frank and open admission.

Whether he was authorized to speak for Justice Holmes upon this momentous question, I know not, but this I know: he cannot speak for me nor for the Latter-day Saints in general. I know of a man who told the world long ago, told them in the name of the Lord concerning man's origin and destiny; and they rewarded him, not with a monument, but with a martyr's grave! I refer, of course, to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Here is one pronouncement upon the subject under discussion, taken from his translation of the Book of Abraham:

MAN'S PRE-EXISTENCE AND ETERNAL DESTINY

"Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones;

"And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born.

"And there stood one among them that was like unto God, and he said unto those who were with him: We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell;

"And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them;

"And they who keep their first estate shall be added upon; and they who keep not their first estate shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; and they who keep their second estate shall have glory added upon their heads for ever and ever." (Abr. 3:22-26.)

Those who wish to pursue the subject further should read the Prophet's marvelous description of the vision seen by him and Sidney Rigdon, February 16, 1832, and recorded in Section 76 of the book of Doctrine and Covenants. Time will not permit me to treat of it here.

How did Joseph Smith get hold of these things? Not by watching for seals in an ice-hole; not by reading newspapers, nor by going to college. He received them by divine revelation, through the gift of the Holy Ghost, manifesting the things of God in the fulness of the everlasting gospel.

THE "MORMON" ATTITUDE

About a year ago I was traveling through the Eastern States Mission with President Henry H. Rolapp. One of our meetings was in Huntington Hall, Boston. At the close of the service many came forward to shake hands with the speakers and ply us with questions. One young man, approaching me, asked respectfully: "What is your attitude toward the other churches?" I replied, "They are all doing good, but they are without the fulness of the Gospel;" and he walked away thoughtfully.

This I believe to be our true position. There is some truth in all religions, in heathendom as well as in Christendom. And it is the truth in those systems that perpetuates them, not the errors with which the truth is mixed. There are millions of good, honest people all over the world, in all the churches, but they have not the fulness of the Gospel. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is its one depository. This is the claim we make. This is the "Mormon" attitude.

REGARDING INDUCEMENTS

Many years ago, when I was bishop of the Eighteenth Ward in this city, I was invited to meet, at the home of one of the ward members, a learned medical gentleman from Philadelphia. Elder B. H. Roberts was also there, and we spent a very pleasant evening. Brother Roberts told the visitor all about the Book of Mormon, and he listened intently. So did I. The gentleman then turned to me and said: "Bishop Whitney, will you please tell me why I ought to be a Latter-day Saint, in preference to being a Methodist, a Baptist, a Presbyterian, a Catholic, or anything else in religion?"

I answered him in much the same language as I used with that young man in Boston, though with greater elaboration. "It is," said I, "because we have the fulness of the Gospel, and the other churches have only parts of it. If you were seeking the wealth of this world; its gold and silver, houses and lands, flocks and herds, and so on, I would not advise you to become a Latter-day Saint. You might acquire riches as an indirect result of joining this Church, and you might not. I have known of men emigrating hither from foreign lands in early days, who, if they had remained in their own country, would never have owned an inch of ground, would have continued to live in rented homes, with no prospect before them in old age but the poorhouse. They joined the Church and came to Utah because the spirit of the gathering was upon them, the gathering of scattered Israel, preparatory to the coming of the God of Israel to reign over the earth. And as an indirect result of their immigration, they became well to do. They took up land of their own, had flocks and herds of their own, and prospered in temporal as in spiritual things, some of them rising to wealth and affluence. But the Church had not promised those things to induce their conversion. We have never bribed people to come into the Church. If the Lord chooses to bless the Saints with riches, we are glad of it—glad to see our brethren and sisters prosper, but we don't guarantee such things.

"Again, if you were seeking office and authority, I would advise you to pass us by. You might, by joining the Church, become a bishop, a stake president, an apostle, or even one of the First Presidency—if the Lord so willed; but we don't promise it. We don't hold that out as an inducement. Such things, if they come at all, come as a gift from God and not because they are sought after."

Digressing for a moment, I remember hearing a young man say concerning our beloved brother, Senator Reed Smoot, that he had achieved every object for which he had set out in his youth, and among these was included the Apostleship. "Young man," said I, "please omit from that list of achievements the holy Apostleship. Men don't get that by aiming for it, and Reed Smoot never made such a claim, neither would he make it."

There are some things that ought not to be aimed at. They are not to be achieved by man's effort, and ought not to be boasted of as trophies of human skill. The Apostleship is one of them.

Resuming as to that gentleman from Philadelphia, said I to him in conclusion:

"If you were seeking honors of that kind you would very likely be disappointed. Or, if you desired the love of the world, its applause and good will, you would be doomed to disappointment by joining this Church; for you would simply inherit your share of the Savior's promise to his disciples: 'You shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.'"

"But if you want the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel, the powers of the eternal priesthood, and the illumination of your soul, so that you can know beyond all doubt why you are here, whence you came, what God expects of you, and what awaits you in the great Hereafter,—if this knowledge is of any value to you, then embrace what the world calls 'Mormonism' and these blessings shall be yours."

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT

God's greatest gift is eternal life, but that pertains to Eternity. The greatest blessing that our Heavenly Father can bestow upon us in time, or while we are here, is the power to lay hold upon eternal life. The Everlasting Gospel, through obedience to its every requirement, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, gives this power. It not only saves—it exalts men to where God and Christ dwell in the fulness of Celestial Glory. Such, in substance, was my testimony to that gentleman to whom I refer, and this is my testimony to you, my dear brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord Jesus. Amen.

ELDER RULON S. WELLS

Of the First Council of Seventy

There is a saying among the German people that runs like this: "All good things are three." We have in a material way the three dimensions: length, breadth and thickness. We have the three component parts of this mundane sphere: land, water and air; also solids, liquids and gases, the three forms of matter. We have the three classes of heavenly bodies that fill the sidereal universe: suns, planets and satellites. And in a spiritual way it may also be pointed out that we have the three degrees of glory—celestial, terrestrial and telestial, symbolized by the sun, the moon and stars, on account of their comparative brightness. I mention these things, and might mention many more, not because they have, particularly, any bearing upon what I may say, but more because I have another three in mind, to a consideration of which I would like to devote the few moments that I stand before you.

There are three things which are indispensably important to our wellbeing and are naturally inherent to all mankind. We inherit them from our divine parents. They are divine attributes transmitted to us as the offspring of Deity. They are, in this, like the inalienable rights of man, another three: life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, of which we read in the Declaration of Independence. These three things are emotional qualities of the mind and heart of man and of our natures, that may and should be carefully cultivated; but they may and often do exist in a very perverted and distorted form—and we are under necessity of choosing between these divine and noble attributes as they are naturally inherent to us, and their ignoble and perverted counterfeits which can only be acquired by ignoble and unnatural effort. It is a question of choice between good and evil.

These three to which I refer are faith, hope and charity. Whether they be virtues or vices depends upon the form they take. If they assume their natural and hence divine form they are virtues, but if they are perverted or counterfeited then they become vices. Some people regard faith as a weakness, a positive vice. To believe everything you hear, how foolish! They have simply mistaken credulity, the devil's counterfeit, for faith; they are not alike. Credulity is no more like faith than lust, another devilish counterfeit, is like love.

All good things are counterfeited. Our government issues currency in various denominations. It is known as the legal tender wherever we may use it, but it is capable of being counterfeited and palmed off on an unwary public sometimes as the genuine thing, but it is counterfeit. They make coins in various denominations, but some devil will obtain a baser metal and gild it over with gold and palm it off for genuine. Religion is sometimes falsely understood. It, too, has its counterfeit. But let us not despise the pure gold of religion because the devil makes a counterfeit of it in hypocrisy.

What must we believe or in whom must we have faith? are vital questions if we are to choose the true, the genuine faith, and reject the false, the counterfeit. It must be obvious to everyone who thinks that if there is a plan of salvation, a plan whereby mankind can be redeemed from its fallen state and from death and the grave; whereby it can be exalted into a state of never ending joy where sin shall be no more, a state wherein there shall be a continuation of happy associations of loved ones, husbands and wives, parents and children, such plan must, of necessity, emanate from heaven, for only God can give us such salvation. Surely this is something for which we earnestly hope, or as the poet tells us, "A consummation devoutly to be wished." Do we hope for salvation or do we only hope for the sordid things of worldly pleasures and the gratification of sensual desires? Therein lies the difference between good and evil hopes.

How then may we learn of such a plan, if plan there be? In answer let me say, only as God shall make it known. There is no other way. And how? By revelation, the very foundation upon which he builds his church. He reveals his secrets unto his servants the prophets. Then hearken unto these messengers of life and salvation, these bearers of the glad tidings of great joy. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," for as we read still further in holy writ, "God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life." Herein are these three attributes combined, faith, hope and charity. Paul says, "Now faith is the substance (or assurance) of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen;" but again we read, "Faith is not unto every man, it is the gift of God." Then we may well say it is the assurance which God gives us that our exalted hopes shall be realized. All our hopes of a glorious resurrection, of a future life in celestial glory, are based upon our faith in him, whom God sent into this world, even our Savior, and in his servants and messengers, the prophets and apostles through whom he makes known the glorious plan of life and salvation which dispels the gloom of death and the grave, and fills our hearts with hope. But says one: I have no faith in God and no hope in a future life. How unnatural! How such a one must have resisted every natural impulse of the heart to have fallen into such an abnormal state of mind! No faith, no hope. Spiritual deformities. To look upon a man who is deformed or maimed for life, —a dislocated jaw, a broken nose or an eye knocked out—is naturally revolting. How unsightly and ugly! But not half so hideous or so repulsive is he who is thus physically deformed as he who is spiritually deformed, wanting in these Christian qualities so inherent and natural to all mankind. No faith: he does not ask and hence does not receive; he does not seek and hence he does not find; he does not knock and therefore the door is not opened unto him.

No hope. How unnatural! Pope says:

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast, Man never is but always to be blessed."

And another poet, after telling us of the pleasures of hope, exclaims:

"Cease every joy to glimmer on my mind,
But leave, O leave the light of hope behind."

Young women, you daughters of Zion, who delight in making yourselves look fair, I shall not censure you or find fault, you were created so; but if you would be beautiful indeed then garnish your minds, your inner selves, with these virtues, with faith, hope and charity; and lift up your souls in grateful adoration to God, the giver of every good. Then shall these virtues permeate your whole being and shine forth in a matchless beauty that may not be acquired in any other way. Young men, cultivate these virtues; then shall godlike nobility be indelibly engraved upon your countenances, and that intelligence which is the glory of God shall fill your souls with joy and gladness even to overflowing.

"Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Thus writes the Apostle Paul to the Corinthian saints. Then what is charity? Is it pity? Compassion? Alms giving? Mercy? Yes, all these, but still more besides. The dictionary defines it as "universal love." The Prophet Joseph Smith says it is "the pure love of Christ." The Savior tells us that all the law and the prophets hang on these two commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy mind," and "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This then is charity, which is the fulfilment of the law. This is the greatest thing of all. This achieved will sanctify us from all unrighteousness and prepare us for celestial glory. All else is merely the means to this desired end. This then is "that which is perfect," the rest is "that which is in part." Or as Paul further writes to the Corinthians:

"Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

"For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

"But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away."

For the accomplishment of this end the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ has been revealed, through obedience to which we manifest our faith in him as the Savior of the world and receive the assurance that our hope for a glorious future life will be realized. No other name is given under heaven whereby eternal life, God's greatest gift to man, may be attained, other than the name of the Lord Jesus Christ the very Son of God, whom he sent into the world to be our Savior.

Let us then believe in him and cultivate his divine attributes as they are naturally inherent within us, even the true, the genuine, and reject the false, the counterfeit; then shall we grow in the knowledge of God and good works day by day and eventually receive the crown of eternal life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. Amen.

ELDER DAVID A. SMITH*of the Presiding Bishopric*

My brethren and sisters, I assure you I appreciate the privilege of standing before you today. I fully realize that this is a difficult position to occupy. Not that it is difficult to bear testimony of the things of God, but one standing in this position and realizing the great responsibility, fears that he may not do justice to his subject. In the spirit of humility I approach this task and humbly pray our Heavenly Father that he will bless me in my attempt to address you.

I was greatly impressed this morning with the remarks of President Grant. I had a feeling of joy come over me when he promised that if we would obey the law of tithing God would bless us. I am wondering how many of us are going to take this promise seriously. The Lord has made a similar promise before and has also reminded us that we have many things to do and repent of, for we are not pardoned because we seek to counsel in our own way. (D. and C. 56:13, 14.) Is it not worthwhile to receive these promises sincerely and with faith in their fulfillment through obedience to the laws of God? Surely none of us doubts that President Grant has a right to make this promise, and we should have no doubt that it will be fulfilled. May we take the spirit of this promise to our homes that we may be encouraged and encourage others in attempting to keep the commandments of the Lord.

I was happy to hear President Grant read Section 11 of the Doctrine and Covenants and comment upon it. This section has always been interesting to me. I was attracted to it at first because it is a revelation given through the prophet Joseph Smith to my grandfather. To me this revelation contains a wonderful sermon which in my opinion was not intended for him alone but for all those who receive the priesthood. May I explain why I reached this conclusion? Since the beginning of the Church, men have been chosen and sent into the mission field to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. They have not been chosen because of their educational attainments, but because of their humility and willingness to serve the Lord to the best of their ability. One of the many evidences that this is the work of the Lord is seen in the results of their labors. Very few have failed in their effort and we have no record of an elder, while serving as a missionary, leaving the Church to join another. We have looked upon this condition as being normal and in keeping with the gospel plan. Many times have I heard Church members say, in some cases as an excuse for not supporting the priesthood quorums, the Sabbath school or the Seminary work, that the Lord does not require men of great learning to preach the gospel, for he has promised to establish the gospel through the weak things of the world; and they point to the success of our missionaries to justify themselves in their failure to take advantage of the many opportunities afforded them to gain a better knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which, with the spirit of humility and faith, qualify them for this service. For faith, humility and knowledge are the weapons to be used in defense of truth and righteousness. Have we been guilty of "counseling in our own way?" In this interpretation is it not an attempt to justify ourselves? Did the Lord intend to convey to his children the thought that they should wholly depend upon him? Are they not required to prepare themselves by storing up useful knowledge? To my mind these questions are of vital importance to us and I believe a careful examination of the scriptures will convince those in doubt that the Lord expects much of his servants by way of preparation on their part to qualify them to render efficient service, which preparation must come through a sincere desire to gain a knowledge of the gospel through diligent research carried on in the spirit of faith and humility.

Referring to Section 1:19 and Section 35:13 of the Doctrine and Covenants, who are the weak things referred to? The answer given is he who does not "counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh." How are they to thrash the nations? and the answer "by the power of my Spirit." How are they to receive that power? The words of the Lord to Hyrum Smith in Section 11 give us the answer: "Therefore if you will ask of me you shall receive; if you will knock it shall be opened unto you." "Seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich." (D. and C. 11:5, 7.)

About eight years after this revelation was given the Lord said to Joseph Smith, "Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, I am well pleased with your offering and acknowledgments, which you have made; for unto this end have I raised you up, that I might show forth my wisdom through the weak things of the earth. (D. and C. 124:1.)

We will recall that when the Prophet Joseph Smith was first called to this work he was a boy, unlearned but intelligent and capable of understanding the words of God. He was not a man of letters and had not learned to "counsel his fellowmen nor put his trust in the arm of flesh." Realizing that there was something lacking in the teachings of men and believing in the promises made by God to his children, as recorded in the scriptures, he went to the Lord to ask. His prayers were answered. That weakness, "speaking in the language of men," became strength, showing forth the wisdom of the Lord through the weak things of the earth. And it took years of patient study, intelligent research, and unquestioned faith, to prepare him for this great service. And through him the Lord has given us his word to direct us in our effort to prepare for his service. The following quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 84:106-110 is a notable example:

"And if any man among you be strong in the Spirit, let him take with him him that is weak, that he may be edified in all meekness, that he may become strong also.

"Therefore, take with you those who are ordained unto the lesser priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments, and to prepare the way, and to fill appointments that you yourselves are not able to fill.

"Behold, this is the way that mine apostles, in ancient days, built up my church unto me.

"Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet; for without feet how shall the body be able to stand?

"Also the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect."

It would appear that many of us have neglected to follow this instruction.

"And I give unto you a commandment that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom.

"Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand."

"And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith." (D. and C. 88:77-79; 118.)

This quotation also gives us a better understanding of the need of preparation for service in his great Church.

The time is limited; it would therefore be unwise to comment longer upon these passages. May I therefore read a few passages from the Bible having a bearing upon this subject? Let us consider Paul's advice to Timothy.

"Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy;

"That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate;

"Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

"O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

"Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen." (I Tim. 6:17-21.)

"It is a faithful saying: For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us:

"If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.

"Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

"But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness." (II Tim. 2:11-16.)

Also Paul's instructions to the Corinthians found in I Cor. 1:17-31.

"For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

"For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God.

"For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

"Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

"For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

"But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness;

"But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

"Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

"For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called:

"But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

"And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are:

"That no flesh should glory in his presence.

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption:

"That, according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

Solomon calls our attention to the need of such training for we read in Proverbs 1:2-7:

"To know wisdom and instruction; to perceive the words of understanding;

"To receive the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity;

"To give subtilty to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion.

"A wise man will hear, and will increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels:

"To understand a proverb, and the interpretation; the words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction."

Now, my brethren and sisters, it seems to me the Lord has given us his plan in clearness, and our duty is clearly defined and definite. Ample provision has been made available for such training for all who should be prepared to engage in the work of the Lord. For years we have urged that young men serve as Ward Teachers that they might have an opportunity to discuss gospel principles in the homes of the saints, thus applying in actual service the information gained through study in their quorum and auxiliary meetings. We have also urged that we carry out the commandment of the Lord in requiring the priest to "preach, teach, expound, exhort and baptize." It is such experiences that give to those who go into the mission field a burning testimony of the gospel, and which sometimes, I am sorry to say, some lose after their return, because of lack of proper Church activity and spiritual food. How much more successful would the work be if all missionaries were sent out with the training and testimony found in those who return. In certain sections this is being done. Why not in all? Surely we are left without excuse when we fail, and how much easier would be the task for the mission presidents who are constantly pleading for missionaries, as well as for the missionary himself, if such interest were taken in him before his departure.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." (II Tim. 1:7.)

May the Lord bless you. I rejoice in his great work. I am thankful to him that I bear his holy priesthood and that I am permitted to labor with you in this great cause. May God bless us and help us to carry on this great work and responsibility which he has placed upon us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER GEORGE F. RICHARDS

It shall be my purpose, brethren and sisters, in the brief period allotted to me this afternoon, to introduce to you two great characters with whom you are more or less acquainted and whose power and influence has actuated the minds, the hearts and lives of the people of this world from the beginning. I desire also to bring to your attention the work and purpose of each of these great characters which, I may say, are diametrically opposed to each other. I read to you from the first chapter of the Book of Moses:

THE WORKS OF GOD

"The words of God, which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was caught up into an exceedingly high mountain,

"And he saw God face to face, and he talked with him, and the glory of God was upon Moses; therefore Moses could endure his presence.

"And God spake unto Moses, saying: "Behold, I am the Lord God Almighty, and Endless is my name; for I am without beginning of days or end of years; and is not this endless?

"And, behold, thou art my son; wherefore, look, and I will show thee the workmanship of mine hands; but not all, for my works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease.

"Wherefore, no man can behold all my works, except he behold all my glory; and no man can behold all my glory and afterwards remain in the flesh on the earth.

"And I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me, and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

"And now, behold, this one thing I show unto thee, Moses, my son; for thou art in the world, and now I show it unto thee.

"And it came to pass that Moses looked, and beheld the world upon which he was created; and Moses beheld the world and the ends thereof, and all the children of men which are and which were created; of the same he greatly marveled and wondered.

"And the presence of God withdrew from Moses, that His glory was not upon Moses; and Moses was left unto himself. And as he was left unto himself, he fell unto the earth;

"And it came to pass that it was for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength like unto man; and he said unto himself: Now, for this cause I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed.

"But now mine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld; for I should have withered and died in his presence; but his glory was upon me; and I beheld his face, for I was transfigured before him.

TEMPTED OF SATAN

"And it came to pass that when Moses had said these words, behold, Satan came tempting him, saying: Moses, son of man, worship me.

"And it came to pass that Moses looked upon Satan and said: Who art thou? For behold, I am a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten; and where is thy glory, that I should worship thee?

"For behold, I could not look upon God, except his glory should come upon me, and I were strengthened before him. But I can look upon thee in the natural man. Is it not so, surely?

"Blessed be the name of my God, for his Spirit hath not altogether withdrawn from me, or else where is thy glory, for it is darkness unto me? And I can judge between thee and God; for God said unto me: Worship God, for him only shalt thou serve.

"Get thee hence, Satan; deceive me not; for God said unto me: Thou art after the similitude of mine Only Begotten.

"And he also gave me commandments when he called unto me out of the burning bush, saying: Call upon God in the name of mine Only Begotten, and worship me.

"And again Moses said: I will not cease to call upon God, I have other things to inquire of him: for his glory has been upon me, wherefore I can judge between him and thee. Depart hence, Satan.

"And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and rent upon the earth, and commanded, saying: I am the Only Begotten, worship me.

"And it came to pass that Moses began to fear exceedingly; and as he began to fear, he saw the bitterness of hell. Nevertheless, calling upon God, he received strength, and he commanded, saying: Depart from me, Satan, for this one God only will I worship, which is the God of Glory.

"And now Satan began to tremble, and the earth shook; and Moses received strength, and called upon God, saying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan.

"And it came to pass that Satan cried with a loud voice, with weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth; and he departed hence, even from the presence of Moses, that he beheld him not."

Continuing further until we come to the thirty-ninth verse, we find that the Lord appeared again to Moses, after this great temptation, and made known to him his work and purpose, the end he had in view. Said he, "For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

If we have not already learned what the work and purpose of Satan is, we will perhaps learn it as we proceed.

MAN TO HAVE FREE AGENCY

I will now introduce to you, brethren and sisters, another great character in connection with these two of which I have been reading and speaking. This is from the fourth chapter of Moses:

"And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses saying: That Satan, whom thou hast commanded, in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning, and he came before me saying—Behold, here am I, send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor.

"But, behold, my Beloved Son, which was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning, said unto me—Father, thy will be done and the glory be thine forever.

"Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him, and also, that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten, I caused that he should be cast down.

"And he became Satan, yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice."

These two great influences being wrought upon us, and having our agency, we are to be judged by the exercise of this agency, whether we exercise it in righteousness unto salvation and exaltation or in unrighteousness unto our condemnation.

SATAN'S DESIGNS AND PURPOSES

In the fifth chapter of the Book of Moses; we read as follows:

"And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God, and they made all things known unto their sons and their daughters;"—preached the gospel to them, of course.

"And Satan came among them, saying: I am also a son of God; and he commanded them saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish."

"And Satan said unto Cain:" (A few verses farther in the chapter.) "swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it, they shall surely die; and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands.

"And Satan swore unto Cain that he would do according to his commands. And all these things were done in secret."

This shows also, the machinations of Satan, his designs, and purposes upon the lives of men and women as pertaining to this life and the life to come.

We also have an account in the first few chapters of Genesis of the creation and how that Adam and Eve, when they were placed in the garden of Eden, were tempted of this same individual, Satan.

When the Savior came here upon the earth, and after his fasting forty days and nights, he also was tempted of Satan. Again Satan failed in his purpose.

In this the dispensation of the fulness of times when the boy Joseph Smith went into the woods to pray, Satan was there. Evidently knowing what our Father in heaven designed to accomplish in the last days, through the instrumentality of this boy, Satan tried to destroy him.

The Prophet Joseph is of record as having said that, "All beings who have bodies have power over those who have not—the devil has no power over us only as we permit him. The moment we revolt at anything which comes from God, the devil takes power. * * * All men have power to resist the devil." (Compendium, p. 288.)

A WARNING TO THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Brethren and sisters, these two powers are operating upon the minds and the hearts of the children of men today in the Church and out of the Church. Many of us are tainted, more or less, having been influenced by Satan, having yielded to his temptations, here a little and there a little; and brethren and sisters, we are to be warned, and I desire in my brief talk here to lift a warning voice to the Latter-day Saints, for the time is to come in the last days that the very elect, if possible, will be deceived. Choose ye therefore this day whom ye will serve.

There are some who seem to be willing to be the emissaries of this great being, Satan, to assist him in his work. It is a notable fact that those who have arraigned themselves against God's work and purposes, fire their darts at the head of the Church; and we have a great many people now, some in the Church and some outside, who are trying their utmost to destroy the influence of the President of this Church; and I believe at the bottom of it they would destroy this work if possible. They are enemies to God, but they will surely find sooner or later that it is hard to kick against the pricks. We have known of men circulating literature among the saints, calculated to destroy confidence in the authorities of the Church, particularly in the head of the Church. Fault is found with the way they handle the means that are entrusted to their care, the tithes of the Church. Others are circulating literature calculated to encourage people to perpetuate practices which are by the Church forbidden. It is the purpose of the authorities of this Church to live, and teach this people to obey, the constitutional laws of these United States; and there are people here who take the opposite course, criticizing and doing all they can in opposition to the attitude taken upon these questions by the authorities of the Church. These people, I think, are becoming the emissaries of Satan, and if they should succeed, no doubt Satan would rejoice exceedingly. I want to say to the Latter-day Saints, we do not fear any power or influence that can be brought upon this work or the authorities of this Church from the outside. The most powerful influence with its most dire effects is that which comes from members within the Church; and when it is known that men arraign themselves against this work, or the authorities of this Church, if they will not repent, they should be dealt with, and that speedily. "It is better that one man shall perish than that a whole nation should dwindle in unbelief," notwithstanding we should be full of charity toward all men as well as toward the household of faith. I want to say to you, brethren and sisters, you should not follow such a lead.

A SURE AND SAFE LEAD

I want to give you a guide that is sure and safe. If you will be one with the Presidency of this Church, and with the twelve apostles, you will never go astray. You will be on firm footing. There has never been a moment since the organization of this Church when the President of the Church and the Twelve Apostles or a majority of the Twelve Apostles have gone astray. You are safe to follow their lead.

And now, another thing to make you safe and secure: live your religion, brethren and sisters. I do not know what better advice and counsel I can give than to repeat what President Grant has already given us in this conference: Keep the commandments of the Lord. Obey all his laws. The law of tithing? Yes. Consecration? Yes. Shall we obey the command that we love the Lord our God with all our heart, soul and mind? Yes. And our neighbors as ourselves? Yes. And if we do this, surely we can do all the other things that are required of us. The Lord knows best and if we will listen to the promptings of his Holy Spirit and live our religion, we shall not be deceived, but shall know the truth, whether written or spoken, for we will be on firm footing.

TRIUMPH OF GOD'S WORK ASSURED

I know that this work is true. It is God's work and not man's. No man can succeed in this work without the help of the Lord, and no man can succeed on the outside against this work, or the authorities of this Church, for in their efforts so to do they are opposing the Lord. I know that Heber J. Grant, the present President of this Church, is a prophet of God, the mouthpiece of God to this people and to the whole world, at this time. He is a man of inspiration, a mortal man indeed, but a man who seeks the mind and will of God our Father on all important matters, a man who seeks the advice and counsel of those whom the Lord has given him as counselors, a man who is leading this people in righteousness; and I know that this work will succeed and triumph. It has been established for the purpose of preparing for the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who is to take this Church and kingdom and reign a millennial reign of peace here upon the earth; and the time of his coming is not far distant. I bear this testimony to you, knowing whereof I speak by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SYLVESTER Q. CANNON

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I have been greatly impressed, my brethren and sisters, by the wonderful spirit and power of the instructions and testimonies borne during the sessions of this conference thus far. I rejoice with you in the progress that is being made by this people. I listened with great interest to the remarks made by President Grant—the statement of the various advances being made in the Church and the building up of the work of the Lord. I was impressed with his statement with regard to the observance of the principle of tithing.

SUSTAINING THE AUTHORITIES

I rejoice in the faith which I possess of the divinity of this work. I sustain with all my heart the Presidency of the Church. I know, as has been stated here by President Richards, that President Grant is inspired of the Lord—that he is the Lord's mouthpiece—and that his counselors are inspired. I sustain the brethren who compose the Council of the Twelve and all of the General Authorities. I have confidence in these presidencies of the stakes. They are men who are called to direct the various divisions of the Church that are organized and established. I have confidence in these mission presidents who are putting forth such great efforts in that important work of the Church—the spread of the gospel—and the building up of the Church throughout the world. I sustain the bishoprics. I realize the wonderful work that is being done by these men who preside over the various wards throughout the Church. I am impressed continually with the tremendous power that is here for good and for righteousness. I am sure that we, every one of us, ought to take as our motto that statement made in the revelation which was read by the President this morning, that we walk humbly, deal justly and judge righteously. Those things are important to every one of us.

CHAPEL BUILDING COSTS

Sometimes I have felt that in the building of our chapels and meeting houses, beautiful as they are, there has been a little too much competition or rivalry among some of the wards, by the bishoprics and the building committees, to make their new meeting houses a little finer than others in the same locality. It seems to me important that great care and economy should be exercised; so that, while we accomplish what we require in the way of providing sufficient accommodations, at the same time every effort be made to spend as little as is possible of the means raised locally by the people and that appropriated by the First Presidency.

INCREASE IN TITHING

With regard to the principle of tithing, I believe that the tithes paid by the saints throughout the Church thus far this year amount in total to more than has ever been paid before during a similar period. Yet, as has been stated, the demands upon the Church for the vital things that concern the welfare and growth of this great work require more means to be used for its advancement. There are some wards throughout the Church that have as tithepayers practically the average quota of those that should pay tithing. It has been calculated that on the average about forty percent of the membership of the Church, including children, are potential tithepayers. That is, they are people who are earning means. This varies, of course, in certain localities and under different conditions. There are some wards, I say, where there are practically forty percent of the membership that are observing this principle.

A FULL TITHING

Tithing means the payment of one-tenth of our interest annually. It is not the amount, primarily, that is important, but the observance of the principle in its fulness. If we cultivate the spirit of obedience to this principle we shall, even though our tithing be small in amount to begin with, grow in spirit and power and ability to pay, and the Lord will bless us and enable us to increase our tithes as we go forward. I know that this principle is true. It is a means of progress, growth and development.

TRAIN YOUNG PEOPLE TO BECOME TITHEPAYERS

I would like to suggest to these brethren who preside over the various stakes, wards and missions throughout the Church, that they endeavor to teach, as far as possible, all the members of the Church directly, and particularly the young people, to pay their tithes. In our own families, as soon as our children reach the age of eight years and are baptized, we should encourage them to observe this principle, even though the amount which they pay annually may be very small; and even though we may have to start them by paying for them. As children get far enough along so that they can earn a little means they should be taught obedience to the law of tithing, the purpose of it and the way in which the funds derived therefrom are employed. If this is done, children of the Latter-day Saints will grow up with faith, I am sure, in this principle. It will become a source of strength to them. It will develop in them stability and power for the observance of every other principle of the gospel.

DIVINE PRINCIPLES PROMOTE DEVELOPMENT

I was impressed with the statement made also with regard to our obedience to the commandments of the Lord generally. I believe that the observance of divine instructions is the most effective means for the best development of men and women. Recently a man declared to me that he believed that in this community there is the making of the finest civilization the world has ever seen. He referred to the wonderful principles which are being taught the Latter-day Saints, and called attention to the fact that though these principles are not being as fully observed as they should be, yet the extent of their observance is such that the people are brought to higher standards than otherwise.

YOUNG PEOPLE THE GREATEST RESOURCE

Some time ago a prominent banker in this state made a declaration with reference to the resources of the state. In effect he said that the finest and most important resource of this state is not the agricultural crop, not the mining industries, not the banking or other organizations, not the commercial progress of the state—but the boys and girls. It seems to me, if we realize the fact that the faith and devotion of the individual members is the source of the greatest possible strength and progress in the Church, then we shall devote our efforts to the training and development of these young people in the living of the gospel.

FACTORS OF CIVILIZATION

What is it that constitutes the finest civilization? Is it physical development? That is important in every instance. The Greeks were famed for their splendid physical prowess. They developed a high civilization, based in part upon their physical training and upon their architectural progress. Other nations have developed civilizations based upon military power. Others again, upon the glorification of the ruling power through oppression of the masses; and still others upon material achievements through inventions and discoveries. It would appear that the finest civilization must be founded upon the development of high ideals in a number of fundamentals, such as physical development, education, progress in the arts, moral standards, industrial progress, fair dealing and faith in God.

PHYSICAL WELFARE

Let us consider for a moment that, living in this nation, possessed of a high civilization, we are greatly favored, in addition, in having an understanding of divine principles which will promote still higher standards in all of those who observe them. For instance, we have in the Word of Wisdom the finest guide possible for the physical welfare of man. Again, we are taught that in spirit we are the sons and daughters of God; and that our physical bodies are created in his image, so our faith will tend to cause us to keep these bodies clean and sound and strong.

MORAL STANDARDS

Again, in the matter of moral progress, I think there is no people anywhere who receive such excellent instruction and such practical training in high moral standards as the Latter-day Saints. Among us there is no double standard of virtue. Every man and every boy is expected to be just as virtuous and clean in his life as every girl and every woman is expected to be. Marriage is a sacred obligation and privilege. But the Lord has declared that licentiousness is most degrading and that it will limit our progress here and hereafter. If we fail in this vital principle of morality it will not be for lack of instruction and guidance.

EDUCATION

Also, in education the Latter-day Saints have proven by their works that intellectual advancement is of most vital concern to all the membership of this Church. The standards of education prevailing in those states which are populated largely by the Latter-day Saints, are among the highest in comparison with the other states throughout the Union. The Latter-day Saint students in universities and elsewhere have demonstrated their comparative ability and capacity. Along with intellectual development we realize that religious training is just as vital.

ARTS AND INDUSTRIES

With respect to progress in the arts and material achievements the history of this people is evidence of the important part these phases of civilization have played in our progress. Yet, I believe that we are not generally giving as earnest attention as we should to the vocational training of our young people and to the industrial development in our communities. This is an age of industry. We are concerned with our material as well as our spiritual growth. I recommend to these men who are leaders in the various communities that they endeavor to encourage our young people to qualify in all of the vocations which shall be most helpful in the various communities. Through this training and the development of suitable industries, our communities can be made desirable and attractive for these young people, so that they may be able to remain at home and help to make all sections of the Church prosperous and successful.

UNSELFISHNESS AND FAIR DEALING

Wholehearted obedience to the principle of tithing inculcates in man the spirit of unselfishness. It promotes the spirit of church and community welfare. It encourages fair dealing, for if a man is true in his obligations toward God, he cannot be otherwise than straightforward in his dealings with his fellowman. It helps to cultivate economy and living within our means. Thus we may gain material happiness. I think it was Benjamin Franklin who declared that there are two ways to be happy. One is to increase your income and the other is to diminish your expenses. Either one will promote happiness. It has been said that the first lesson in the art of being happy is to learn to do without and like it. I want to testify to you that that is true with regard to this, as well as with regard to every other principle of the gospel. Training in moderate self-denial is important to every human being, so that we may learn to control our appetites and our improper desires. Therein is strength and power. In like manner the principle of fasting and fast donations promotes the spirit of humility, charity and equality in the hearts of those who observe it. Surely if there is a principle upon which the stability of any civilization rests, it is that of mutual consideration among the members thereof. Pride and high-mindedness have been a fruitful source of destruction in nations of the past.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH

Finally, faith in God and a lively sense of his providences is a great source of strength in the maintenance of any civilization. The Latter-day Saints are privileged to enjoy a fulness of the gospel through obedience to the commandments of the Lord. If we keep these commandments we shall enjoy the influence of that Spirit which leads us into all truth, and helps us to grow in all respects that will make us stronger and better men and women. It promotes integrity and purpose. It develops stability and sound judgment.

I am reminded of that interesting experience of the Prophet Elijah. You remember when King Ahab had decreed his death and Jezebel had also declared that the dogs should eat the flesh of his body, that Elijah was discouraged. He went into the desert where the angel of the Lord appeared and instructed him to proceed further. So he went on to Mount Horeb and there the evidences of the powers of the elements were made visible to him; in the wind storm; in the lightning and thunder; in the earthquake; and after all of these things, the still small voice! That testimony comes to everyone who observes to keep these commandments. Thereby we shall be able to understand what is expected of us and walk forward clearly and definitely in the path of righteousness that leads to eternal life.

I do not fear for the observance of the principle of tithing or any other principle of the gospel if the Latter-day Saints are converted to the truth of the whole, and become possessed of a testimony of the divinity of this work through the influence and power of the Holy Spirit.

THE WORK IS GROWING

I testify to you, my brethren and sisters, that this work is progressing. I have occasion to know of many things that are being done under the direction of the General Authorities to advance this work. I do not doubt that in time there will be stakes organized in other parts of this great nation which will help to stabilize the work of the Lord in those parts. I have faith that divine instructions will be given to us from time to time as we are prepared to accept and obey them. I know that the gospel is true. I rejoice in the privilege that has come to me to work in this position. I pray the Lord to help every one of us to live in conformity with these principles that we may gain the benefits and blessings resulting therefrom, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

The following telegram has been received:

"We are highly appreciating the conference. Every word is distinct.
Students of American Fork Seminary,
E. Ray Gardner, Principal."

The congregation sang the hymn, "O say, What is Truth?"

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Wilford A. Beesley, President of the Salt Lake Stake.

Conference adjourned until the following morning at ten o'clock.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference commenced promptly at ten o'clock Saturday morning, October 5, 1929, with President Heber J. Grant presiding.

The congregation joined in singing the hymn, "How Firm a Foundation," after which the opening prayer was offered by Elder Leo J. Muir, President of the Los Angeles Stake.

The hymn, "Do What is Right," was sung by the congregation.

ELDER MELVIN J. BALLARD

I am sure, my brethren and sisters, we were all cheered yesterday morning as we listened to the report of our President concerning the growth of the Church. I was particularly impressed with it because it stands out in such contrast to the reports that are coming from government statistics with reference to other churches in this country. Judging from the records of twenty-three churches and their status between the years 1916 and 1926, six of these twenty-three leading denominations in the United States suffered an actual loss in membership; and while the balance showed an increase, there is none of them whose percentage of increase is greater than that of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

STRENGTH AND GROWTH OF THE CHURCH

The record shows that so far as our Church is concerned the amount expended for meeting houses during the past nine months exceeds that for any similar period. This stands in contrast to the record of churches in the United States. On good authority we are informed there are twenty-five thousand vacant churches in the United States without a pastor or a congregation; while here there is growth such as the Church has never had before, with increase and prosperity attending the membership of the Church.

It is delightful to know that in an age when churches are being tested and tried and shaken, and doubt and uncertainty are developing, here there is strength, here there is power, here there is solidity; and in the most enlightened age that the world has ever known for this Church to be making its most rapid progress, surely is hopeful.

But I am not so much concerned with the material growth of the Church or its increase in membership as I am with its growth in good works, in righteousness. I am sure if the Latter-day Saints can be induced to live up to that high standard which God has established for us, we need not worry about the Church's growth in membership nor its material strength.

"WE BELIEVE IN BEING HONEST"

I want to read the thirteenth Article of Faith, because there is in it something I would like to speak about, as I feel that the attention of the Latter-day Saints needs to be called to it because of conditions that obtain in the world that will naturally affect us.

"We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things."

It is that first declaration of the Prophet in announcing items in the faith of the Latter-day Saints that I wish to speak of:

"We believe in being honest."

Why I speak of this is because we are in an age of self-indulgence so far as the world is concerned, and men are endeavoring to accomplish their ends not always with honest methods. Short cuts are being taken to secure those desirable ends. The records of the United States for the last year show, for instance, that there was stolen from the citizens of this country by hold-ups, at the point of a gun, two billion six hundred and fifty millions of dollars, all of course unlawfully taken. No spirit of honesty here. In stock swindling sales, wherein dishonesty is practiced, and sometimes within the law, there was taken from the people of the United States over six billions of dollars last year. There was lost through trusted employees committing forgeries and thefts one hundred million dollars. The total of these three items for one year is something like nine billions of dollars. How long could this order of things continue to increase as it has been doing until this would no longer be a land of safety and security, but of unsafety and insecurity? If the spirit of dishonesty is in the world naturally we will be influenced by its effects, because we live in a very small world today. What affects any portion of this country or the world, naturally affects us. Recently surety companies guaranteeing the honesty and integrity of men in positions of trust have doubled their rates because of the increasing number who are untrue to their trust.

It all impresses me, my brethren and sisters, with the need of our harking back to that high standard of old rugged honesty established by the men who laid the foundations of this work. It is here yet, yes; but if we preserve it we must be vigilant, or we shall succumb to the influences that are in the world to corrupt men.

MR. STUDEBAKER'S TRIBUTE.

I remember being impressed years ago with the standard of Mormon honesty and integrity, when at the close of a street meeting in the city of South Bend, Indiana, an elderly gentleman wearing a high silk hat, who had driven up in a carriage, asked permission to speak,

He was given the privilege and said to the people of that city: "I want you to be kind to these Mormon elders. Their people are my friends. I have known them for many years. They have a motto that appeals to me, and I have discovered that they are living up to their motto, which is that "a Mormon's word is as good as his bond." He remarked that he had sold President Young his first cutter and carriage after arriving in the valley, and that he had sold millions of dollars worth of vehicles to the Mormon people. He declared that he had not lost a single dollar on a Mormon. He further remarked, "I cannot say that of any other community where my company is doing business."

The old gentleman was Mr. Studebaker, the founder of Studebaker Brothers. I was thrilled to hear his testimony after years of association with our people, that he had discovered that their word was as good as their bond. I believe it will be a word in good season to ask the membership of the Church to preserve sacredly this high standard. I believe that the great majority of the Latter-day Saints are doing so.

A RULE OF CONDUCT

I have been thinking about what in this connection I might give as a rule of conduct to follow to preserve this spirit of honesty; and the thing that has impressed me is that God, in the establishment of the law of tithing, of which President Grant spoke yesterday morning, was laying down a course for the Latter-day Saints to follow that would lead them to be honest with Him first. And I believe that it is essential that we shall be honest with God in order to be fully honest with our fellow men. I believe that the man who understands the law of tithing and accepts it as the word of the Lord and is not true to it will find it easy not only to rob the Lord but to be untrue to his fellow men. I believe that the first step that men take toward disregarding the laws of man is to disregard the laws of God.

When France sought to maintain her government, her civilization, by appealing to the rule of Reason, and God was out of the question, she soon came to difficulty. No nation can fully preserve its institutions and wholly disregard God. This government, mighty as it is, and greater as it may become, shall still have to observe and to honor the laws of God, the God of this land, who is Jesus Christ, according to the Book of Mormon prophets, or it cannot stand. So I believe that one of the finest practices to inculcate into the very hearts of men true, genuine honesty is to teach them to be honest before God. "Will a man rob God"? He asked of the children of Israel of old, and yet He charged them with having robbed Him in tithes and in offerings.

Here is a chance for men to develop honesty without fear of oppression, without fear of being sued; for the Lord will not sue a man. He gives him the privilege of practicing the principle of honesty out of the high motives of his own heart, impelled towards justice to God, with only the highest principles moving him, and without fear of the collector. I believe therefore that the Latter-day Saints will do well to consider this law as the foundation upon which genuine honesty may be built, not only between God and man, but between man and his fellow man.

GOD'S RENTAL

Surely this is a righteous law. It is merely God's rental. A man who gives you right to possess property and the privilege of receiving returns from that property, naturally expects a rental for the use of the land. But what does he guarantee? That the sun will shine; that the moisture will come; that the frost will be stayed; that the soil will germinate? No, he guarantees none of these things, — only right and title to the land. And still we expect to pay rental for that right and title. Who supplies these more essential things — the moisture, the fertility of the soil, the sunshine, the harvest? God Almighty, who provided the earth itself, the proprietor. He wants men to recognize that He is the proprietor, through observing the law of tithing. Any man who fails to pay his just tribute to the provider of these more important and essential things for the sustenance of life, is robbing the Lord and is not just in his dealings.

A HIGHER LAW

When the Lord gave this Church the correct principles that shall ultimately be established, known as the Order of Enoch, or the United Order, it was a high ideal for them to aim towards, something to work for, but they lacked preparation for it. When he introduced the law of tithing, he called it a schoolmaster to bring us to that higher law. Men and women who can live up to this law of tithing will be better prepared for that day to come, for come it will, when there will be some prepared and ready to maintain that higher law which shall be established in the just economy of God, when Christ reigns with men upon earth.

THE LAW OF INHERITANCE

And further than that, do we not hope and expect to have an inheritance in the celestial kingdom, even upon this earth in its redeemed and sanctified state? What are the terms under which we may obtain that inheritance? The law of tithing is the law of inheritance. It leads to it. No man may hope or expect to have an inheritance on this celestial globe who has failed to pay his tithing. By the payment of his honest tithing he is establishing a right and a title to this inheritance, and he cannot secure it upon any other terms but by complying with this and other just requirements; and this is one of the very essential things.

THEY WHO ENTER THE CELESTIAL KINGDOM.

I was asked by one of my brethren recently, as he closed the vaults of one of the great banks, to lock up the treasures, whether I thought the day would ever come when treasures could be and would be preserved without fear of being stolen and it would not be necessary to lock them up. I remarked that surely that day will come, for all those who will enter into the celestial kingdom will be so honest that they could live and walk within hand's reach of that which is not theirs with nothing to prevent them from possessing it, following that high standard established in the gospel of Christ, and the rectitude of their own intentions being worked out in actual living. For they who enter that state will be so honest that God can pave the streets with gold and set the walls with jasper and diamonds, without any fear of their being stolen. Yes, there will come such a day. Now, however, we are being proven to see whether we are worthy to enter into these high and holy privileges.

When Pope said that "an honest man is the noblest work of God," he uttered a truth. I care not how many privileges and blessings come to men, what their ordinations and baptisms may have been, there is no possibility of their entering into the presence of God by dishonest means.

Peter said unto the baptized saints in his day, that unto their baptism, they must add faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness. What is godliness? It is honesty, integrity, purity and virtue. These qualities must be added if men shall seek to gain admittance into that high presence. We cannot for a moment consent to the conceptions of many in the world, that mere ceremonies and ordinances, important as they are, are the all-fundamental and important things. They are fundamental, they are important, but the more important thing is the living of the gospel, preparing to enter into that presence by receiving the training necessary and essential; and one of those essential things is to develop within us the spirit of honesty, so that we will be honest with God and honest with our fellow men.

THE BANKRUPTCY LAW

There is a law called into existence for the relief of men who are oppressed because of their creditors, and through taking bankruptcy men may be released from their obligations. I have many times been asked the question, who is justified in taking bankruptcy to avoid an obligation? My answer has been—and I would like to make it here, and if I am wrong I stand to be corrected—that no Latter-day Saint, so long as his creditors give him the chance, the faintest chance, to work out and meet his obligations, ought to resort to accepting the law of bankruptcy. It is only for those who are oppressed, those who have no chance, no hope, and nothing but oppression following them. They may be justified, but surely no one who can possibly work out his problems with his creditors, ought to resort to this means of relieving himself of his obligations.

A PRECIOUS HERITAGE

When my father died he was a poor man with a large family, but he left us a credit that I have counted as worth more than millions. I never knew him to do a dishonest thing in all his life, nor would I be ashamed for the whole world to see his acts revealed. I confess to you that has been a greater joy and strength to me than money would have been. I plead with you to leave that kind of an inheritance to your sons and your daughters, that they may be stimulated and inspired by your honesty, by your integrity, by your dependability, to be honest with God and with their fellow men; that that heritage may be left with them that may inspire them to go on and perpetuate these high standards in preparation for the more glorious things that are to come to those who can maintain such high ideals.

God bless the Latter-day Saints that we may not forget, in this season of harvesting our bountiful crops, to settle with the Lord and to settle honestly and justly and fully; that we may see growing in ourselves that spirit of honesty that shall support and sustain us during these perilous times that are upon us and that shall come. I pray for it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

of the Presiding Bishopric

I desire to express appreciation for my membership in this Church and how thankful I am that the gospel found me in my youth; how glad I am to be in the service of the Lord, and my desire is to be loyal to my brethren.

The Lord has blessed me with a testimony of the truth. I am so thankful that I am not tossed about with every wind of doctrine that blows. I firmly believe in my God, the Father; and in my Redeemer, Jesus Christ; and in the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I want to call attention to an incident in the life of our Master. This was the last day of his public ministry. He was in Jerusalem on that fateful Tuesday before his crucifixion. There, near the Temple treasury, he was questioned by Pharisees, Sadducees and scribes. First, the Pharisees asked him this question: "Is it lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar?" Then a group of Sadducees questioned him concerning a woman who had seven husbands and whose wife 'would shall be in the resurrection? Then there came to him out of the crowd a lawyer or scribe who propounded a very important question. May I quote from the 12th chapter of the gospel of St Mark:

"And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

"And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is' one Lord:

"And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

"And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

"And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he;

"And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

"And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

If our deep sense of responsibility to our God and to our fellow-men were understood as our Master intended it to be, there would be few other laws needed. There would be no occasion for the states of the Union to enact thirteen thousand laws a year if we were living the two great laws given by Jesus.

To love one's neighbor is to be a brother to him in the largest, deepest and most serious sense of the term. Neighborliness is helpfulness, sympathy, kindness and good will, without any expectation of reward. To expect a reward would defeat the very ideals of neighborliness.

Men and women throughout the United States and in this great Latter-day Saint Church of ours are trying to apply this law. Rich men are disposing of their wealth so that it will be helpful to their neighbors. There are some wonderful examples in this country, of the distribution of great wealth to help those less fortunate.

Among the Latter-day Saints the principle of neighborliness has prevailed. Years ago I listened to a discourse by President Anthon H. Lund. He emphasized the fact that all mankind are our neighbors, but particularly those of the household of faith.

Every person should be given an opportunity to live a normal life, and bishops are anxious that the members of their respective wards should have this opportunity. Organizations and societies, particularly the great Relief Society, are always helping men and women to live a normal life. To live such a life it is necessary that the individual have health, an occupation, recreation, an education, and a love of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The man without employment is not living a normal life. Every man should be earning a livelihood for the maintenance of his family. If he does not do this, then someone else must do it, and this frequently leads to the loss of self-respect and pauperism.

The early pioneers came here almost destitute, but with courage and determination they wrung from the soil the necessities for their sustenance. They took the wool from the sheep; hides were tanned into leather; cotton was cultivated; and clothing was made, mostly at home. Later factories developed. These were small community industries, but they answered the purpose and provided clothing and other necessities for the people. Later came an effort to establish the United Order, but the Latter-day Saints were not prepared for this system of living. Then that great statesman and prophet, Brigham Young, established in many of the communities of the Latter-day Saints a cooperative system of buying and selling. Some of these stores are still doing business. Now we are in a competitive era or epoch where great aggregations of capital controlling highly specialized industries, practically dominate the avenues of production. This has compelled men and women to sell their handicraft and ability—what we call labor—for wages upon which they live. Now we have the chain system of buying and selling. What the future holds for the working man is difficult to foresee.

One of the greatest problems, however, is that of employment, especially for our brethren and sisters who have passed middle age. The other day I read of one great establishment employing fifty thousand men and women. The average age of these employees is thirty-two years. Today is the young man's day. Our older brethren are having quite a struggle. Some of them have reared families, sent boys and girls into the mission field, and haven't been able to accumulate means to sustain themselves in their old age. Tragedy comes into the lives of these men when notice is given them that their services are no longer needed.

There are quite a number of our people who have failed in their little communities. They become despondent, and, seeing rosy advertisements in the newspapers, think that if they could only get to Salt Lake City they could obtain employment. Many of them suffer disappointment.

Then there is the problem of the young missionary, nearly a thousand of whom return from the missions each year and find it very hard to establish themselves in the communities where they formerly lived. There is also the problem of the widow left with a family to rear, whose only possession may be a little home and lot. She feels that if she could get to Salt Lake she would be able to do housework, cleaning, etc. Most of this class are disappointed. There are many other angles to this situation which time will not permit me to mention.

Winter is coming and many who are now employed will soon be discharged. They will come to the bishops and others for help. As much as possible is being done by the employment department of the Presiding Bishop's Office and by the General Board of Relief Society, but this is largely local. It furnishes help to those only who live within a small radius. There are thousands of others who need assistance. In order to reduce this unemployment, may I make a few suggestions. First, that the presidents of the stakes and high councils, in their monthly meetings, discuss the local situation and try to furnish employment for people who are out of work in their own stakes. Second, the bishoprics of wards at their monthly meetings with the ward teachers should inquire of those in need of employment in the various districts. Then every member of that ward should try to furnish it. Third, at the regular bishopric meeting, which should be held every week, the bishopric of the ward should discuss and if possible provide ways and means of helping those who are seeking employment. Fourth, the quorums of the Melchizedek Priesthood should also help. Their meetings should be something more than calling rolls and discussing doctrine, important as such work may be. If the one hundred and three quorums of high priests, the one hundred quorums of seventy, and nearly five hundred quorums of elders, would make it their business to look after the temporal welfare of their members, marvelous things could be done. There are approximately two thousand classes of high priests, seventies and elders in the various wards, some of these units being quite small, others large, and if they made it a part of their business to find out who is seeking employment, no doubt many could be found employment. All it needs is a little more sympathy, a little more kindness, a little more helpfulness, so that we may show our Master that we are trying to love our neighbor.

There is another story of the Master on that fateful Tuesday that I desire to mention. After he had left the temple he went with his disciples upon the Mount of Olives and made this statement concerning the future:

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:

"And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

"And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

"For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

"Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

"Then shall the righteous answer him saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

"When saw we thee a stranger and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee?

"Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

"And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The Lord has not blessed all with the same power and ability to acquire wealth. Let us have sympathy for our unfortunate brethren. The unemployment problem would not be a serious one if the members of this great Church of ours would all lend a helping hand and make every effort to retain in the wards not only elderly persons and widows, but the young men and women who frequently leave the community to seek employment and who are so badly needed in the communities where they were reared.

May the Lord add his blessings to these thoughts. May we think seriously of the suggestions I have made, and may the power and strength of this great congregation be applied as the Master desires—in service to our fellowmen. Amen.

ELDER J. GOLDEN KIMBALL

Of the First Council of Seventy

I am very glad and happy that we as a people have passed safely over another six months period.

I desire to say to you that my life is being crystallized into a very few things that are important to me. The great hope that I have is to be saved in the kingdom of God. I have a great desire to be true and faithful and devoted in my work; to be honest, frank and straightforward with the people. I know of no other way. I can see no other outlook, and I have no other desire than to sustain the priesthood of God, to uphold those whom we sustain as prophets, seers and revelators in the Church of Christ. If there is not safety in this there is no safety for the Latter-day Saint people.

I have never in all my travelings and teachings among the people been told what to say. I realize the importance of this occasion. I understand what time means. At the conference six months ago I was fortunate in being called upon, and I occupied three minutes. To my surprise I was complimented everywhere I went. People say it was the best sermon I ever preached. Of course, did I believe what they said to me I would close now; but I have what I think is a message, at least I desire to call your attention to a certain matter that transpired with me this year.

About the fourteenth or fifteenth of August Dr. George W. Middleton, together with Elder Levi Edgar Young and the doctor's son, (I was an invited guest), went by auto to Casper, Wyoming, 515 miles distant from Salt Lake City. The purpose of the meeting which we there attended, was to honor the pioneers. It was held under the auspices of the Oregon Trail Memorial Association. The officers of this Memorial Association are as follows: President, Howard R. Driggs; Vice-President, David G. Wylie; Secretary, Ellen Eaton; Treasurer, Guthrie Y. Barber. There are also fifteen directors. Dr. Middleton is appointed to look after the markers in Utah.

I now read the parting words of Mr. Meeker:

"'I am not quite ready to go; my work is unfinished,' were at once a benediction and a request to the Memorial Association. They reflect the inner spirit of the foundation of the Oregon Trail Memorial Association. At the same time they lay sacredly upon us the great cause for which he gave his last full measure of devotion."

It is not my purpose to enlarge upon this Oregon Trail subject. Never before, strange to say, (and I was born soon after the people arrived in this valley) did I get the spirit of what it all meant. I have never understood, I have never comprehended, what it all meant to our fathers and mothers, the pioneers. But I confess to you that I have had that feeling burning within my bosom, that desire, to do honor to those great men and great women who made it possible in this day for us to enjoy all the comforts of life.

I quote from Professor Driggs:

"We are brought a little closer to the tragic cause of it all when we realize that fully twenty thousand lost their lives in an effort to reach the Golden West. They had no means of marking the graves of the dead in those prairie stretches. Only one grave out of all of the twenty thousand, so far as we know, is surely marked. I refer here to the grave of the pioneer mother near Scott's Bluff, Nebraska. When Rebecca Winters passed away one of the company had the forethought to pick up an old wagon tire that lay along the trail. Bending it into an oval he set the tire within the grave. On the top of the tire was chiseled the mother's name and age. A party of surveyors laying out the railroad along the North Platte happened by mere chance to run their line right over the mother's grave. Then the surveyors, with a touch sympathy that is beautiful to think of, went back for twenty miles and changed the line of survey, that it might miss the mother's grave."

That is the purpose of this organization, and they contemplate in the year 1930 a great gathering at Independence Rock. They desire to make that a national marker in the United States. It is a great barren rock. I have read of it many times but never saw it before. These markers will call the attention of the people to what has been accomplished by these pioneers, a thing that many people know very little about. I desire to be one among the number to honor such men and women.

At Casper we held a meeting Friday evening. I think there were something like two hundred people assembled, who were among the best and choicest of the people of that community. Professor Driggs, Elder Levi Edgar Young and Dr. Middleton talked. The people were friendly, they were courteous, they were in sympathy with the Mormon pioneer people as well as the Memorial Association of the Oregon trail.

There is a story—it is beautiful—I love to make an effort to tell it. The history of the West sounds like tales of the Arabian Nights; but as far as I know only parts of it have ever been told.

Dr. Driggs asks: "Will the warp hold? It will hold providing we can keep alive the sacred stories of the pioneer builders of this nation in the hearts of American boys and girls."

Coincident with the Mormon Pioneer movement their prophet prophesied they would go to the Rocky Mountains, and, in a way, they were forced to go west. They started out not for conquest, not intent upon spoil, but to worship God, build up cities, do mighty deeds and to build for greater happiness.

Had it not been for great spiritual leaders this barren wilderness could never have been peopled in so short a time, and it would not have gained much momentum had it not been for immigration. It would appear that this people threw themselves almost blindly into what would seem to the natural man, impossible, but under the leadership of inspired men they accomplished the unbelievable.

We must not forget to remind the next generations of the glorious strength of faith, hope, courage and the love of God they possessed.

Try to remember that the pioneer, no matter of what race, is fast disappearing. Often he is a tragic figure. History is leaving him behind. Few of us are so gifted as to be able to attract and to converse intelligently with our own children. A parent must be a genius to tell of the days of their strength, the days of their suffering, sorrows and defeats, and yet make clear how they won glorious victories.

The next generation cannot feel, neither can they understand, sense or appreciate what it all means, surrounded as they are with ease, comforts and luxuries. They are unmindful, and it should be burned into their souls and memories, to respect the doting pioneer, tottering with old age, to remember their minds are stored with the richest experience and historic lore.

We have no way of testing and proving the next generation, through trials, sacrifices and suffering; neither can we force these historical truths upon them, and to reason would seem fruitless. It is said: "People shape their lives largely the way we are today living."

I have thought a great deal about our fathers and mothers and their great object, and I have wondered what it was that the Latter-day Saint people had—the desire, the ambition, the faith and the hope—that enabled them to sacrifice, suffer and die for the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am made to understand what their great objective was. Something new had transpired. God the Father and Jesus Christ the Son had appeared to that young man Joseph; and also the everlasting gospel, a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ and the power of God unto salvation, had been revealed. The restoration of the gospel, the restoring of the priesthood with all its keys and its powers and authorities were conferred upon these men; also the eternity of the marriage covenant, including a plurality of wives.

The bringing forth of the Book of Mormon, the redemption of Zion, and the building up the City of Jerusalem, and the gathering of the Ten Tribes—these were the great objectives that were placed before our fathers and mothers.

I often think of mother, and while she was a very practical woman, a woman who lived by faith, a woman who had suffered and sacrificed, a woman who had left her whole race of people and was the only one we know of who has ever been converted from her immediate family, yet mother had that great vision of the celestial glory, of becoming a queen. And surely she is a queen, because when I visited her people I brought to her over one hundred names of her ancestors, and we went into the temple at Logan and did the work for that good mother of ours.

That was the dream, that was the great vision, that they had of the future; and that was why they were sustained in their suffering and in their sacrifices and in their troubles and in their tragedies.

My dear brethren and sisters, what is your objective? That question has been put to me more than once. Our objective is to carry out the will of God and through the direction of his servants the prophets to fulfil every prophecy and every revelation that we find written in the Doctrine and Covenants; for surely God will not forsake his people if they will repent of their sins. It is needless for me to say more.

For the past week or so I have read the Book of Mormon through, and I was surprised how deeply interested I became in the people who inhabited this continent. I discovered that whenever they served God and kept his commandments they prospered in the land; and whenever they failed (and I hope we will never fail) then came their destruction, until that people became extinct.

I pray God to bless you. I pray God to be with each and all of us, for I do not believe that a man can remain faithful in this Church and devoted and true to his covenants, who fails to keep the commandments and who has not a testimony that Jesus is the Christ. To this end I pray that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

I realize that I am standing in the presence of the strength of Israel; in the presence of men who have been tried and proved; who have been called to responsible positions in the Church, in stakes, in wards, and in missions. These calls have come because of integrity and obedience to the principles of the gospel and the kingdom of God.

DUTIES OF WATCHMEN ON THE TOWERS

I desire to address myself more particularly to you, my brethren. We are watchmen on the towers of Zion. The Lord has placed in our hands great and wonderful responsibilities. No men anywhere in all the earth, no matter what their calling, hold responsibility equal to that which we have received, for we have had conferred upon us the priesthood of God. We are possessed of divine authority and have been set apart as his servants and watchmen upon the towers of Zion. Our duty is to teach, to guide and direct the members of the Church in the path of righteousness. Our duty is to set examples before the world, that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven, and have faith and confidence in us. It is our duty to warn all men and endeavor to teach them the truth, so that those who will not hearken may be left without excuse.

I endorse all that has been said at this conference and I hope that the things we have been taught will find place in our hearts and that they may never be removed. Something has been said, very timely, very necessarily, in regard to the sacrament, in regard to the Word of Wisdom, the payment of tithing and offerings, in regard to fasting and other principles of the gospel. There are one or two thoughts that I desire to present in relation to the question of the sacrament, more particularly in regard to the meetings that have been set apart in the Church by revelation, by commandment of the Lord, for the partaking of these emblems representing the body and the blood of Jesus Christ.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE SACRAMENT

In my judgment the sacrament meeting is the most sacred, the most holy, of all the meetings of the Church. When I reflect upon the gathering of the Savior and his apostles on that memorable night when he introduced the sacrament; when I think of that solemn occasion my heart is filled with wonderment and my feelings are touched. I consider that gathering one of the most solemn and wonderful since the beginning of time. There the Savior taught them of his coming sacrifice, which in their bewilderment they could not understand. He plainly told them of his death and that his blood should be shed, and this was said in the very hour of his agony for the sins of the world. It was a very solemn occasion; there the sacrament was instituted, and the disciples were commanded to meet together often and commemorate the death and sufferings of Jesus Christ, for his sacrifice was for the redemption of the world. He was about to take upon him the responsibility of paying the debt brought upon the world through the fall, that men might be redeemed from death and from hell. He had taught the people that he was to be lifted up that he might draw all men unto him, and that all who would repent and believe in him, keeping his commandments, should not suffer for he would take upon himself their sins.

THE PURPOSE OF SACRAMENT MEETINGS

We have been called upon to commemorate this great event and to keep it in mind constantly. For this purpose we are called together once each week to partake of these emblems, witnessing that we do remember our Lord, that we are willing to take upon us his name and that we will keep his commandments. This covenant we are called upon to renew each week and we cannot retain the Spirit of the Lord if we do not consistently comply with this commandment. If we love the Lord we will be present at these meetings in the spirit of worship and prayer, remembering the Lord and the covenant we are to renew each week through this sacrament as he has required it of us.

APPROPRIATE SERVICES

I do not believe that the Lord is pleased with us when we turn this sacred meeting into a concert. I do not believe that he is pleased with us if we assemble in this meeting in a spirit of levity and not solemnity. I am sure he is not pleased when men are called to speak in these services whose hearts are not touched by the principles of the gospel, and when they have no faith in the mission of Jesus Christ, and when they cast doubts upon the efficacy of his atonement and the sacrifice he made for the sins of the world. I am sure he is not pleased when we meet on such occasions to be amused, to be entertained, rather than to be instructed and to obtain spiritual education and thought and reflection.

I do not believe it is necessary, very frequently at least, for presiding officers to go outside of their wards and stakes to find speakers; not that this is something they should never do, but I think we many times ignore worthy men living in our wards who are filled with the spirit of the gospel. I know it is not pleasing to me when

I attend a service and someone is called upon to speak who stands before the people and presents, though it be in a pleasing way, some platitudes, some philosophy of men,—the ideas of those who today mould the thought of the world, but who in their own hearts have no faith in or love for Jesus Christ—or who discuss questions at variance with the fundamental principles of the gospel. I think this is an occasion when the gospel should be presented, when we should be called upon to exercise faith and to reflect on the mission of our Redeemer and to spend time in the consideration of the saving principles of the gospel, and not for other purposes. Amusement, laughter, light-mindedness, are all out of place in the sacrament meetings of the Latter-day Saints. We should assemble in the spirit of prayer, of meekness, with devotion in our hearts. I know of no other place where we can gather where we should be more reflective and solemn and where more of the spirit of worship should be maintained.

SOLEMN ASSEMBLIES

The Lord called upon the people in an early day of the Church to meet in solemn assembly, and speaking of these assemblies, he said:

"Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God;

"That your incomings may be in the name of the Lord, that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord, that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High."

"Therefore, cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings."

We should not get the idea from this scripture that the Lord is displeased with us when we laugh, when we have merriment, if it is on the right occasions. He has said, however, that in our solemn assemblies such things as light-mindedness, laughter and merriment are out of order. We should cease from all light speeches, laughter and wrongful thoughts and desires, from all things which will detract from the teachings and the influence of the Spirit of the Lord.

I felt that I would like to say this much after listening to the excellent remarks on the sacrament and the purpose for which it was instituted.

COVENANTS AND OBLIGATIONS

In conclusion I want to ask you a few questions, and I speak, of course, to all the members of the Church. Do you think a man who comes into the sacrament service in the spirit of prayer, humility, and worship, and who partakes of these emblems representing the body and blood of Jesus Christ, will knowingly break the commandments of the Lord? If a man fully realizes what it means when he partakes of the sacrament, that he covenants to take upon him the name of Jesus Christ and to always remember him and keep his commandments, and this vow is renewed week by week—do you think such a man will fail to pay his tithing? Do you think such a man will break the Sabbath day or disregard the Word of Wisdom? Do you think he will fail to be prayerful, and that he will not attend his quorum duties and other duties in the Church? It seems to me that such a thing as a violation of these sacred principles and duties is impossible when a man knows what it means to make such vows week by week unto the Lord and before the saints.

If we have the right understanding we will live in full accord with the principles of truth and walk in righteousness before the Lord. How can we receive his Spirit otherwise? I can see the significance in the commandment the Lord has given us to assemble frequently and partake of these emblems in commemoration of his death. It is our duty to assemble and renew our covenants and take upon us fresh obligations to serve the Lord and keep his sayings of which we have heard so much during this conference. How can a man go forth after making such covenants and cheat his neighbor? or rob the Lord? or violate any other commandment and refuse to walk in the light of truth? I am sure if we could picture before us—as I have tried many times to do—the solemn occasion when the Savior met with his apostles; if we could see them there assembled, the Lord in his sadness, sorrowing for the sins of the world, sorrowing for one of his apostles who was to betray him, yet teaching these eleven men who loved him and making covenant with them, I am sure we would feel in our hearts that we would never forsake him. If we could see them there assembled and could realize the weight of the burden which was upon our Lord; and after their supper and the singing of an hymn, their going forth, the Lord to be betrayed, mocked and scorned, the disciples to forsake him in the deepest hour of his trial—if we could understand all this, feebly though it be, and feebly it must be, I am sure, my brethren and sisters, we would forever more want to walk in the light of truth. If we could see the Savior of men suffering in the garden and upon the cross and could fully realize all that it meant to us, we would desire to keep his commandments and we would love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our might, mind and strength, and in the name of Jesus Christ would serve him.

That we may have the desire to do this I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We would appreciate it if each of the brethren whose names I will read, would leave word at the Bureau of Information, if they are here; because I do not like to call on them if they are not here.

We have been in the habit of hearing from our United States mission presidents, nearly always at these conferences, but we have neglected Brothers Andrew Johnson, J. A. Cahoon, Samuel Martin, Charles H. Hyde, J. Howard Jenkins, Lorenzo W. Anderson, Joseph L. Peterson, and Alma G. Burton. Some of these brethren have been home nearly a year.

If Brother Hyde is here now we would like to hear from him. If the other brethren whose names I have mentioned, who have been here for six months or more, will send in their names we would like to hear from some of them—briefly, of course.

As I said six months ago, I say today: I really feel in my heart that we ought to have at least three days of conference and one meeting in addition. We cannot seem to get through and hear from as many people as we would like to hear from.

ELDER CHARLES H. HYDE

Former President of the Australian Mission

I am delighted to have the opportunity of being able to represent the Australian Mission. I have labored among the people of that island-continent for something over seven years in all, having performed two missions among them.

I was delighted with the remarks of Elder Rey L. Pratt yesterday concerning the Book of Mormon. We have endeavored in Australia to present that book to the people, and I believe that we were highly successful in the effort. A great many books were placed in the homes of the people of that land, especially during 1927. We endeavored to make it a memorial year. The elders caught the spirit of it and did a splendid work in presenting that book to the people. We gained an additional testimony of the divinity of the book through our efforts. I would like to say, too, that we gained a wonderful physical testimony of the divinity of the Book of Mormon in journeying from San Francisco to Sydney, Australia, in coming in contact with the people of the Hawaiian islands and the Samoan islands, and learning something of them and their present conditions; and then coming in contact with the more western peoples of the Fiji islands and the Solomon islands, and especially with the aborigines of Australia. We realize the marked differences between the Polynesian races and those more western peoples, and we recognize in the Polynesians, Israelites, the children of God. They are responsive to the teachings of the gospel and to all civilizing and educational influences, while those of the more western tribes are not nearly so susceptible and have been long removed from any contact with gospel influences.

Among the people of Australia, those who have settled there in the last one hundred years, we find a splendid type of people, many of them responsive to the teachings of the gospel; and they long to hear the testimonies of the servants of the Lord. However, we are handicapped, as many of the other missions are, through the lack of elders. There are but thirty-two elders now laboring in Australia, endeavoring to reach something over seven millions of people scattered over an area of country nearly as large as the United States. Of course these people are congregated in a great measure in the larger cities of Australia, which makes them to some degree more easily reached. But we find that the people living in the country districts are more susceptible to gospel influences and more ready to listen to the elders, and they are harder to reach because of the long distances the elders have to travel.

However, there is a growth among that people numerically as well as spiritually. With the new members and the natural growth of the Church we are able to just keep ahead of the number who die and those who drop out of the faith. Our numbers increase a little each year.

The people there are very faithful in the payment of their tithing. The per capita tithing reaches a very high figure, and we are glad to see the manifestations of the faith of those who have identified themselves with the work of the Lord.

It is a very good mission to work in. It has many advantages of an educational nature that our young men would be pleased to enjoy if they really understood the conditions in that land. The people of Australia are an educated people. Many of the children ten or twelve years old among that people read the Book of Mormon in our classes just as readily as do our elders. They have a splendid school system and all things that tend towards the growth and development of that good people.

I rejoice in the testimonies that the Lord has blessed me with, for his sustaining power and influence while engaged in that missionary work. I testify that the Lord is with the elders, the power of the priesthood is manifested among them, they enjoy the spirit of their calling in rich measure, and they return home blessed and favored of the Lord because of their faithful efforts.

May the Lord add his blessings to us and to the good people in that far-off land, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

"How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word!
What more can He say than to you He hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?"

The grand old hymn loses none of its inspiration with time. It is well to consider what the Lord hath said and to act in accordance therewith. The tenor of the instruction thus far given in the present conference has been this: Keep the commandments of the Lord! A grand summation indeed; and if that admonition were followed in spirit and by effort there would be little need, as has been suggested, of dealing with particular and specific commandments.

AGENCY AND COMMANDMENTS

We boast much of our freedom and agency, and I find some who seem to have difficulty in reconciling the thoughts of freedom and individual agency on the one hand with the fact that we are living under commandment on the other hand.

In the scripture already quoted to you the purpose of placing man upon the earth has been declared: "And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them." A plainer or more comprehensive statement than that of the Lord's purpose could scarcely be conceived—to see whether we shall do whatsoever the Lord shall command us—because our agency enables us to do or to refrain from so doing, for the Lord will not compel.

This life is oft-times, and very properly, referred to as a probation. "And we will prove them" the Lord says, putting us upon test, to see whether we will exercise our agency in choosing to do whatsoever the Lord our God requires of us. The Lord wants to know about that. Perhaps His foreknowledge shows the result to Him, but it is necessary that we demonstrate it. There is much work ahead of us, and the Lord desires to know whom He can trust with authority and power beyond the grave, so this probationary period has been provided that we may prove and demonstrate beyond all question as to whether we can be trusted, as to whether we shall be entitled to the welcome: Well done; you have been faithful over what may have seemed to be a few things, and perhaps relatively small things, but you have been proved and you have shown that you can be trusted with many and greater things.

REVELATION ON FUNDAMENTALS

In the early days of the Church, indeed before the Church was organized as a body corporate among men, the Lord gave revelation after revelation, specific and of profound importance. That revelation was the foundation, and how firm a foundation it is! I should be very much surprised if the Lord were revealing today the same fundamental principles, for they have already been revealed, and under His command they have been recorded; they form the constitution of the Church. Revelation is coming from Him day by day through inspiration to His servants, and we should note the trend of that inspiration and the particular principles that are emphasized from time to time. Are we today hearers of that word alone, or doers of it? You Bishops of Wards, Presidents of Stakes, members of the Church, will you simply remember that something was said at this conference, or will you go hence to carry into effect in your several fields what has been presented and what shall yet be presented unto you as requiring especial attention? We are not looking for something new in the sense of that that has never before been given to this people, but we are looking to see the way the Spirit is pointing as to those particular duties that are most especially important to us at this period.

OBEDIENCE A FORM OF ENERGY

There is a profound principle embodied in that admonition to keep the commandments of the Lord. Have you ever thought of the fact that there is a power, an actual force, a definite form of energy, in obedience? That energy is just as real as the force that is giving light to these lamps serving in the hours of darkness to illuminate this great auditorium for us. I think we shall yet come to recognize the force, the power, the energy, that lies in obedience. We have many demonstrations of it.

I have been impressed with the fact that the scientific spirit, as man calls it, is manifest in the organization of this Church and in its operation. It is only through obedience to what we call the forces of nature, the laws of energy, that we are able to make them serve our purposes. We would have none of these lights unless we obeyed strictly, with full purpose of heart, the laws of electricity.

Yesterday morning between nine and ten o'clock Mountain Time, we heard in this city the very voice of the Premier of Great Britain who had just landed at the port of New York. How was that miracle made possible? Through strict obedience to the laws by which the energy was employed and then applied through the radio, and in none other way would the marvel have been wrought. We have to obey the laws of light, the laws of mechanical construction, and the laws of chemistry if we would operate the camera successfully and get good pictures. That time-piece yonder would be worth nothing had not the laws of mechanics been very strictly obeyed in its construction. It is only through obedience to law that we enjoy blessings.

A MASTERLY GENERALIZATION

The Prophet Joseph Smith, as is common with the prophets of God, went beyond the inventors and discoverers and gave to us in a generalization—one that challenged the attention of thinkers who paid attention to it—one that embodied the solemn truth that by law irrevocably decreed, not for this earth alone, but before the foundations of the earth, it is ordained that when we obtain any blessing it is by and through obedience to the law upon which that blessing is predicated. Those who considered this said: Well of course; we knew that before, but we had not thought of it. So always with generalizations of great import. All of them are wonderfully simple, but it has been said, and with propriety, that none but a genius or a prophet can safely generalize.

What of the leper in Syria who through obedience was healed of his leprosy? What of the widow who went to Elisha, that man of God, when she was in great distress, and by compliance with and unquestioning obedience to the commands he gave her, she and her children were provided for? We may live under the blessings associated with law, if we will obey.

MAN'S NATURE TO OBEY

There appear to be many contradictions in human nature. Have you ever thought of the fact that it is really natural to man not only to obey, but to desire to obey? Think of the wealth that is being applied to investigation and research in science, and what is the great purpose of it all? Let us confine ourselves to what we call, artificially, perhaps, physical science. Our great men are at work in laboratories, and we think it nothing now to expend millions upon the equipment and maintenance of such institutions. Summed up, what are they trying to do? To discover new laws. Not to create them; you cannot create laws of nature, but to discover new laws. For what purposes? So that they can put themselves in subjection to those laws, to obey them. What? To be subject to new laws? Yes, because there are blessings predicated upon each of those laws, and men want those blessings. Men of science know very well that blessings cannot be obtained except through obedience to the corresponding laws. And then in strange inconsistency we find some who say that though we have to comply with physical law, natural law as we call it, in order to enjoy the blessings connected therewith, it is not necessary to comply with laws relating to the spiritual activities of man.

LAW OF THE TITHE—AN ILLUSTRATION

The law of tithing has been referred to as an illustration. But, brethren, take this to heart: the inspired servants of the Lord tell you at this conference no new principle connected with tithing, but they tell you it is necessary that you give your attention to the living of that law! Take that home with you, put it into effect in your stakes and wards, and let every member of the Church take it home with him and put it into effect. The Lord knows why he has inspired His servants to say that unto you at this time; that it is necessary that this people shall live up to that law. If there were time I would like to consider with you that sublime principle and law. Do you know that the soil can be sanctified by the tithing of its products? The land can be sanctified. There is a relationship between the elements and forces of nature, and the actions of men. Did not the Lord sanctify the land to Israel of old as long as His covenant people lived up to their covenants? He warned them of what would come if they forfeited that sanctification. He told them of the destruction that would come upon them, and it came because they chose the evil alternative, in large measure.

We should be sanctified, our homes should be sanctified, and we can attain that condition in part by living up to that portion of the law, and in its entirety by living up to the law in its fulness. Are you feeding your children tithed food? Are they wearing tithed clothing? We are to be tithed people. That was characteristic of the covenant people of old. It will be so ever. The law of tithing will abide, though it may be superseded by a yet higher law to which we shall learn to subscribe.

REWARD AND PUNISHMENT—NATURAL EFFECTS

Again, the Lord has said that according to the laws we obey here shall we receive from Him. We speak of rewards just as we speak of punishments. But rewards and punishments will come through the operation of law. The Lord has spoken illustrating that great truth by reference to what He had already revealed respecting the kingdoms or orders of glory, to this effect—If a man cannot or will not obey celestial laws, that is, live in accordance with the celestial requirements, he must not think that he is discriminated against when he is excluded from the celestial kingdom, because he could not abide it, he could not live there. If a man cannot or will not obey the terrestrial law he cannot rationally hope for a place in the terrestrial kingdom. If he cannot live the yet lower law—the telestial law—he cannot abide the glory of a telestial kingdom, and he will have to be assigned therefore to a kingdom without glory. I rejoice in the consistency and order of the Lord's plan and in His revelations to us.

Let us go forth carrying the spirit of this conference into effect, that the word of the Lord may be something more to us than mere sound; and so I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We rejoice in knowing that our patriarch, whose health is such that he cannot be with us, is resting quietly and hearing by means of the radio the proceedings of this conference. It is a source of a great deal of regret to us that he is not with us.

Brother Smoot, as you all know, is actively engaged in work at Washington, and cannot be with us. He is laboring with all his might and main, and I regret to say that his health is not as vigorous as it has been in the past. The great burdens resting upon him are telling very strongly upon him physically.

Brother Widtsoe is thoroughly enjoying his labors, and is accomplishing a fine work in Great Britain.

I have received a very grateful expression of thanks for the amplifying sets that have been arranged to accommodate those who are hard of hearing. They appreciate them very much.

My attention has been called to the fact that I did not mention Brother John P. Lillywhite as one of the returned mission presidents from whom we have not yet heard. Brother Lillywhite and his good wife are here with us. The reason I did not mention him is that we have not yet had time to neglect him, as he has been home but a few days.

The congregation sang "Redeemer of Israel," and the benediction was pronounced by Elder A. Richard Peterson, President of the Emery Stake.

Conference was adjourned until 2.00 p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

At 2 o'clock p. m. the Conference reconvened, with President Heber J. Grant presiding.

The congregation sang the hymn, "High on the Mountain Top."

Elder Alfred L. Hanks, President of the Tooele Stake, offered the invocation.

The hymn, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah," was sung by the congregation.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

I feel very humble and very weak in approaching this duty, not because I have not thought and studied and prepared for it. I presume that we are all apprehensive on occasions such as this, lest we might not profitably occupy the time of the saints and speak those things which are in consonance with the wisdom of our brethren and the Spirit of God. I can think of no other reasons which give rise to the fears and the trepidation which hold one as he stands in this great presence. I have prayed that my words and my thoughts might be in harmony and ring true with the great messages which have been delivered during this conference.

IN THE LANGUAGE OF YOUTH

I have been hoping that the Church may interpret the gospel in the language of youth. I am certain that if boys and girls can understand its glorious message they will respond. Religion has always seemed more or less formidable to youth. I think that is in part because its inhibitions and its "don'ts" have been emphasized rather than its persuasions and its happiness. The representative of religion has usually been characterized as a somber joy-killing person without much of human understanding and human sympathy. I would, if I could, change this erroneous conception, indulged by youth, and substitute the glorious conceptions of abundant life and living given to us by the Lord Jesus Christ.

Youth should understand that the spirit is the life of man, and the body is its tabernacle; that the tabernacle cannot be polluted or defiled without injuring the spirit, and that the spirit will grow and develop only as the house in which it dwells provides an atmosphere of purity and beauty. Youth admires strength and power. They must learn that the real strength is the strength of being clean.

LIBERTY AND SAFETY THROUGH OBEDIENCE

Youth should know that obedience is not bondage, but liberty—liberty under law: that the only real freedom is the freedom from our weaknesses: from the vices, the remorse of conscience, and the infraction of law. When youth understands that the bending of the will in obedience tends to liberty and joy, then lawlessness, disrespect and irreverence will wane. I wish that youth could realize that the only death to be feared is the death that is the wages of sin, and that the gospel program of living is insurance against that dreadful calamity; that the commandments of God, both the "shalts" and the "shalt nots," and the warnings, reproofs and admonitions of God's servants, are all kindly calculated to hedge round the precious age of youth with safe-guards which shall protect its course until the age of wisdom and judgment shall be reached.

I know that it is difficult, but I wish that everyone who reproves youth could "show forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom he hath reprovèd, lest he esteem him to be his enemy." I know of nothing in scripture that evinces a nicer understanding of human nature than does this splendid admonition given of God, so delicately put.

MANIFESTATIONS OF GOD'S TRUTH

While I recognize the necessity of the prohibitions and injunctions of the gospel, all to be interpreted for the blessing of man, it seems to me that I would lay my major stress for youth on the positive, constructive, inviting concepts of truth which enlarge the vision and hold forth those exalted hopes, stations and glory which attract the soul of man as the marvelous magnet of the sun attracts the planets of the universe.

Youth should understand that all the beauties of nature, the majestic mountains, the hills and vales, the streams crystal clear, the changing seasons, the gorgeous garb of earth, the peace of the summer night, the thunderous awful beauty of the storm, are all but manifestations of God; that the unfoldment of science is but a revelation of fragments of God's truth, and that the searcher for facts, when he discovers truth, however startling it may seem to the human mind, will never find anything, if it is real truth, which is not compatible with the revelations of God as they have been made known and will be made known to his prophets.

TEACHERS OF UNDERSTANDING AND SYMPATHY

I am sorry that youth seems to be so much disturbed in this respect. I am sure it is attributable to inadequate instruction in the fields of both science and religion. Youth sorely needs today teachers of great understanding and sympathy, who can reconcile apparent conflicts and enable youth to hold fast to God's word and time-tested principles, while science, through experimentation and research, unfolds and develops the secrets and the processes of nature. I have long been persuaded that no teacher will ever be able to perform this high service for youth unless he be at once a man of God and a real scientist, a man who understands and believes the revelations and who fully appreciates the possibilities and the limitations of scientific method. It may seem boastful to say it, but I believe that such teachers are more apt to be found in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints than in any other place in all this wide world.

A PROPER UNDERSTANDING OF RELIGIOUS PRINCIPLES

May youth recognize that all true morality is founded on religious principles; principles that have been tried and not found wanting; that old things are not to be despised merely because they are old, and that the Ten Commandments are still the basis of Christian virtue. I want them to know that the scriptures are the word of God and that they will discover within them the deepest and truest philosophy, the most interesting history, the most vital principles to human life and welfare and the finest literature that the world has ever known. They should understand that pure recreation is not sinful and not inhibited by the Lord; that play is necessary as work is necessary; that both play and work are to be enjoyed; that service is the pursuit of most lasting satisfaction; that worship is the recreation of the soul.

COMPANIONSHIPS THROUGH GOSPEL ASSOCIATION

Would that youth could appreciate in full measure the companionships of gospel association. Would that they could realize that there is no such life-mating as that under the influence of the Holy Spirit and the power of the priesthood; that the quorums are fraternities where men clasp hands in bonds that are stronger than the bonds of death; that the organizations and service in the Church bring friendships dearer and more lasting than even life itself; "that God is a Father; that man is a brother; that life is a mission and not a career."

THE ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH LEADERS TOWARD YOUTH

I have earnestly desired that youth might more fully understand the leaders of the Church and their attitude toward them, because I think they feel that we are exacting, that we do not understand and are therefore not sympathetic with their environment and their thinking. Perhaps we do not fully understand them. I want them to know, however, that it is not because we do not love them and desire their welfare. I would like to assure every young man and every young woman in the Church of God that they have no warmer and truer friend than President Heber J. Grant. I know that never a day passes that he and his associates in the leadership of the Church do not pray for, the youth of Zion, and that there are no lengths to which they would not go to bless them. I entreat the youth to give to their leaders and their parents their confidence and their trust. These are their best friends.

THE SIGNIFICANCE AND BLESSING OF TEMPLES

I wish that youth could grasp more clearly the vital significance and transcendent blessings of our temples. I am fearful that by many the temples are regarded as institutions of rather formidable mystery. I wish they could come to know that these sacred establishments of the Church are places of education and incomparable blessing, where the real meaning of life is made clear and glorious.

After all, to understand the gospel is to love it. I am so enamoured of its glorious conceptions that I feel sure that if we can win the affection of youth for its joyous principles, their salvation will be assured.

THE GLORIOUS AGE OF YOUTH

What a glorious age of promise youth is, when life is in the bud and early blossom, when each experience is fresh with curiosity and adventure. I think that if we may envy anything it is the life and vitality of youth. I would not rob it of its joy and its sparkle. I would only add to its richness by securing its enjoyment through the passing years. I know that a real appreciation of the gospel will do that. Gospel truth will always quicken the impulses of the spirit, and the spirit is the life of man. It unfolds new visions as knowledge increases, and these new visions keep life ever new; so, in the gospel life, there is youth even in old age.

God bless youth that they may understand truth and us, and God bless us that we may understand youth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

CHARLES H. HART

Of the First Council of Seventy, and President of the Canadian Mission

We have been fed and refreshed, my brethren and sisters, by the teachings and by the spirit of this conference. I am very anxious, during the few minutes I stand before you, that this feast may be continued, and I am sure that it will only be by the blessings of the Lord that this shall be so.

I felt quite at home at the first session of this conference. I was reminded of our Canadian Mission when the opening prayer was given by a former missionary of that mission, Elder Thomas W. Richards, and when Elder David O. McKay spoke, who recently toured the Canadian Mission. I can assure you, my brethren and sisters, that he gave the same sort of powerful sermons all through our mission, as the one that he delivered here yesterday forenoon. From Portland, Maine, to Windsor, Ontario, in that tour of two thousand five hundred miles that we made in about fifteen days, holding thirty-one meetings, we had the same kind of spiritual feast as we received yesterday from him and also from others of the brethren.

Our tour took us through Maine, to the ancient city of St. John, New Brunswick; from thence, across the Bay of Fundy, through the land of Evangeline, made famous by Longfellow, to the historic city of Halifax, Nova Scotia; from thence to Amherst, Nova Scotia, Montreal, Quebec; to Burlington, Vermont; to Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, London, Windsor and Chatham. At the last named city we had the opportunity of giving our service over the radio, and one of the striking features of that service was the invitation to Brother McKay to give the benediction. Rather short notice was given, but we had the unusual joy of just such a prayer as we hear from the priesthood here at home, given over the radio in that land. We received very good reactions from that meeting. We have heard a number of favorable comments from those who were "listening in."

Since that time we have again toured the mission, giving an interpretation of the gospel as expressed through the auxiliaries, through the great Relief Society organization, the great Sunday School organization, the great M. I. A., and last, but not least, the great Primary Association. The Primary Association is capable of doing real missionary work, as it reaches the parents through the children.

On this last tour, in passing through the state capitol of Vermont, we were handed a pamphlet with a picture of a stone erected in memory of Brigham Young, at Whitingham, Vermont, the birthplace of Brigham Young. The legend on the stone is: "Brigham Young born on this spot 1801. A man of much courage and superb equipment." A little later we passed through Concord, the capital of New Hampshire and saw the statue to Daniel Webster. These two great men were born in close proximity of time and of territory, and we had the opportunity that evening of making some contrasts between them, particularly in reference to the inspiration to the Prophet Brigham Young, pertaining to the redemption and settlement of this western country, and the purported attitude of the great American orator upon that same subject; and that exposition was favorably received by the audience of people from New Hampshire, who think very highly of the great Daniel Webster who is voted, at least by Harvard, as being entitled to the seventh place in the galaxy of the great orators of the world.

We had some unusual experiences along the line, one of which was the holding of our religious services immediately following a wedding ceremony and feast. It was a little difficult, for the moment, to make the contact and transform the marriage feast into a service of the Lord, but with our "wedded companionship without end," known to us but not known to the priest who performed the ceremony that night, nor to many of the people who listened to the services, we were able to secure a hearing. While they were cool to start with, they soon warmed up to the exposition of the gospel as interpreted by these auxiliary organizations.

We have recently had the privilege of being refreshed anew by the inspiration which comes from a visit to Cumorah and the Sacred Grove, and to the Joseph Smith Memorial in the State of Vermont. There is a spirit about those places as there is about the revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith. I was reminded of the lines describing Joseph at the age of the restitution, given by Bishop Whitney in that great epic of his, known as "Elias, An Epic of the Ages," and which I am persuaded is read too little by the Latter-day Saints. He describes Joseph at that time as:

Standing but fourteen steps upon life's stair,
An unlearned boy, thinker of thoughts profound,

Boy and yet man, dreamer of lofty dreams.
 Not solemn, save betimes, when hovered near
 Some winged inspiration from far worlds,
 Some great idea's all-subduing spell—
 His heart grew humbler then, his look more grave;
 Not melancholy—mirthful, loving life,
 And brimming o'er with health and wholesome glee.
 A stalwart spirit in a sturdy frame,
 Maturing unto future mightiness."

After making some reference in the poem to the sort of deity which Joseph Smith worshiped, the attributes of deity, the poem continues, in reference to Joseph:

"And pondering the apostolic line,
 'Let any lacking wisdom ask,
 And God will freely give, upbraiding none,'
 He puts the promise to the utter test."

Then the poet adds:

"What pen can paint the marvel that befell?
 What tongue the wondrous miracle portray?"

When those "two heavenly personages, whose beauty and glory defy all description," stood before Joseph in the air, and one of them, addressing the boy, pointing to the other said, "This is My beloved Son, hear him." It is a noteworthy fact that as the years go by the significance of the information that was received by Joseph at that time from the Son, the Lord and Savior of the world, is being more confirmed year by year. An examination of the magazine literature of the world, in the last few years, pointing out the limitations upon Protestant denominations and in fact all religious sects, will indicate the truth of what Bishop Whitney told us yesterday in reference to a fragmentary portion of the gospel, only, residing in these denominations, these cults and these isms.

I have been very much impressed with the direct testimony in support of the restoration of this gospel, but I have been more impressed with the circumstantial evidence which supports the restoration and the coming forth of the gospel, the re-statement of the gospel and the restoration of the holy priesthood.

The first section of the Doctrine and Covenants was referred to here yesterday—a perfect piece of literature as a preface to that book. There is harmony in all that came through Joseph. Our Judge Rolapp, a few years ago, in his "Gospel Quotations," made a compilation of scriptures, brought together the scriptures given to Joseph, coming from different ages, different languages; and lo and behold, when they are brought together they dovetail and are in perfect harmony, a beautiful exposition of the gospel as restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

I rejoice, my brethren and sisters, in these great truths which have come to us, the spirit of these great revelations, the spirit of the Book of Mormon. I have been melted many times, and thrilled, in reading some of those simple chapters of the Book of Mormon. I was pleased to hear Brother Pratt speak of his experiences in recently reading anew many times the Book of Mormon.

It is my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I am grateful for the knowledge I have that God lives; that he answers prayers; that the gospel, by his power, has been restored, and likewise the priesthood; and that we are enjoying that priesthood, in the leadership that we have in the Church at this time, as we also enjoyed it in former administrations of the Church, since its restoration through the Prophet Joseph Smith. May the Lord bless us and help us to appreciate and realize all the blessings which have come unto us, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER SAMUEL MARTIN

Former President of the South African Mission

I trust that I may be sustained this afternoon in this ordeal, for I assure you that it is an ordeal to realize that there are ten thousand eyes gazing at me and perhaps double that number who are listening to my utterances; but I have enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord so often in the mission field under trying conditions that I feel confident I shall enjoy his Spirit while I endeavor to speak to you this afternoon.

One of the last requests made of me, as I was leaving Cape-Town and the South African Mission as a whole, was that I would bring the love of the people of South Africa to you who live in Zion. There are many still living who remember the elders who first went to that land to preach the gospel of the restoration in 1853. And again, there are many, among whom I had the privilege of laboring, who feel to extend to you their love and gratitude for the elders who returned again in 1903, after forty years absence, to bring the gospel to that far-off land. In 1853 the South African Mission was limited—the elders bore their testimony to those only who lived in the British possessions, Cape Colony and Natal. When they returned in 1903, the mission had increased more than double. Instead of including only about three or four hundred thousand square miles of territory, it had been increased to over a million square miles, owing to the fact that in 1890 Great Britain decided to take over that large native territory known today as Southern and Northern Rhodesia, which embraces over four hundred thousand square miles, all native territory, and then since the war that of German Southwest Africa. This added territory has made it imperative that the elders who go to that far-off land be sent out two by two to only the large cities within the union.

The great cry of South Africa today is: "Send us missionaries." Since Southern and Northern Rhodesia have been under the control of the British government, thousands of white settlers are going to that country and are establishing beautiful cities, very much after the plan of the cities we have in the west. They need at this time the missionary pioneer, that as the population increases the gospel knowledge might grow with them; therefore, the cry in South Africa is from the people themselves: "Send us missionaries."

You may perhaps know that the missionaries do not go to the colored or native races. The native races have besought the elders that they would go and teach them the gospel and that they would allow them to translate our tracts into the native language. They have offered to have congregations amounting to the thousands if the elders would only go and speak to them, but that time has not yet arrived. The number of missionaries that the General Authorities have been able to send has precluded us from sending the missionaries even into many of the cities where the white people dwell. There are towns of ten, fifteen and twenty thousand people who have had no elders stationed with them.

It was very pleasing to me, when I returned to South Africa after nearly eleven years, to find people who were pleased to see me again. Nearly twenty-five years ago I had the privilege of hearing the gospel message for the first time in that land, and I believe was the first convert to the Church through the efforts of the elders who came out in 1903. Some of those who knew me in business, political, and social life, asked the question: "Has Martin gone mad? Is he attending to his business? How and why on earth could he allow himself to be overcome by those Mormon elders?" But when I returned this time and I met some of the same people who are holding high government positions, men of social position, and of the press. They said: "Have you really come back to South Africa? Surely you will never leave us again?" And the press requested me to write and tell them of my experiences here among this wonderful people. They gave me freedom to write all that I desired, and from that time on I can assure you with truthfulness I never again saw in the press during my presidency of the South African Mission an article in adverse criticism of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Prejudice is breaking down. The people as a whole are ready and willing to listen. The elders who come out are men of splendid character as a whole, many of them earnest in their endeavor to preach the gospel. They are able to take rebuke and slander without retaliation. The only difficulty we have found does not exist with the common people generally but with those who are supposed to be teachers of truth and light. It often seemed very strange to me that men who professed to be teachers of the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ were not able to discern the difference between his teachings and their treatment to the elders; the love, tolerance, patience, and gentleness which he taught, compared with that which they were pleased to give in exchange for his teachings to the elders of this Church. It seemed to me that the pastors were unable to discern the difference between a lamb and a wolf, for charity is often absolutely lacking. Therefore, my brethren and sisters, I come to you with an appeal—Do not withhold your sons if you can possibly arrange for them to fill missions. The Lord will open the way. He will bless those who go into the mission field.

Let me tell you the experience I had prior to gathering to Zion many years ago. There was a young elder who came out from Idaho, I believe it was Paris or Bloomington. He landed in South Africa in a state of collapse through typhoid fever. He was taken to the hospital, and when he became convalescent the government was about to send him back, owing to the fact that he had only two pounds ten shillings ($12.50) with which to sustain himself in the South African Mission. I had the privilege, as a business man at that time, to go before the government and stand security, giving a guarantee that he should never be a charge to the country; and the Lord blessed me and gave me confidence in his work, and with the kind cooperation of my little wife, from the day he came out of the hospital until the day he left South Africa, we fed him. I don't say that to receive your praise, but I do say this that I am only a humble man and if God would induce me to sustain a humble elder who came into the world to preach the gospel, he will do it for your son if occasion requires it.

I want to make one other expression before I sit down. I want to appeal to you parents to stress particularly the importance of your sons and daughters reading, studying and marking the wondrous blessings which are given to them by the servants of the Lord, particularly their patriarchal blessings. I can say to you with great humbleness and sincerity that many times when I have seen things requiring great care and good judgment in the mission field, I have gone alone and read over the blessing given to me by our beloved president, Anthony W. Ivins, and at times I saw the wondrous guidance of the Spirit of the Lord in harmony with the blessings he pronounced upon my head, as a humble servant of the Lord called to preside over a branch of His kingdom. I often felt very weak, but at times I could feel the presence and hear the very voice of the Lord directing me. And frequently, after I had given instructions to the elders, when the mail reached me from headquarters the very instruction which they were advising me to give had already been given, showing that the Spirit of the Lord permeates his servants and guides and directs them in all their undertakings.

I pray humbly that the Lord will help us to appreciate and value the words which his servants pronounce upon our heads, for I can assure you from very strong testimony that I have felt their power, their influence, and their guidance, in my life. I pray that God will bless you and open your hearts and guide you that you may not think too much of wealth for self, but of the thousands who are out in the world not enjoying what you have today—a knowledge of the glorious truths of the restoration of the gospel, for which I am grateful. I am humbly grateful that I with four others of my family should be counted worthy to go out into the world to preach this wonderful message. I pray that the Lord will bless us each to feel dissatisfied until we all have done our duty in that respect.

May God bless you, Amen.

ELDER RICHARD R. LYMAN

AMERICA'S CHIEF NEED—RELIGION

Is this nation, though it is the strongest, richest country in the world, headed for destruction? It is, say good authorities, unless the growing disrespect for law is stopped.

"Growing disrespect for law," says James W. Good, Secretary of War for the United States, "unless it is stopped, will end in our destruction."

WHAT IS WRONG WITH AMERICA?

A volume that was on the reading course of the M. I. A. last year bears the title, "What Ails Our Youth?" In the light of what the Secretary of War has said, it may be appropriate to ask also, "What ails our country?"

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and, when he is old he will not depart from it." So says Solomon in Proverbs 22:6. It may be that the citizens of the United States were not, in the days of their youth, trained up in the way they should go; or that the young folks in our country today are not being well trained; for it is a leading educator, George A. Coe, a professor at Columbia University, who has written a book with the title, "What Ails Our Youth?"

The Washington Post of March 9 devotes a whole page in large type to the following:

"TO THE YOUTH OF WASHINGTON"

"Where will you be five years from now?"

"What will be your mental outlook on life at that time? What your associates? What will be your physical and financial status? What your religious and mental standards?"

"It is sure that what you are doing now will point almost exactly to the answer of these questions."

"Few men or women are able to make sweeping revisions in their modes of living overnight."

"Most changes come in a gradual way. What man can stop a hundred bad habits in one day and begin a hundred good ones the next?"

"It isn't done that way. Life is a constant change, with everything being done by easy stages. The paths you are treading today will become broader and easier to follow, no matter in which direction they are leading."

WHERE WILL YOU BE?

"Where you will be five years from today depends upon whether you are a little better or a little worse tomorrow or a month from today."

"Try to elevate yourself a little each day. Save a little money each week, deposit it carefully or invest it wisely, and you will be surprised at the growth in five years."

"Spend your money and time foolishly, associate with wrong companions, and in five years you probably will be a liability to your community and a disgrace to your family."

"Apply this test to the things you want to do—'If I continue this indefinitely, where shall I be in five years?'"

This stirring appeal to the youth of the capital of the nation is signed by one hundred and ninety-two business men of that city. It thus appears that these business men also are asking: "What Ails Our Youth?" And may I ask: "What Ails Our Country?" Growing disrespect for law, our Secretary of War has said, is leading us to destruction.

PRISON RECORDS OF CRIME

The records of a reformatory at Pendleton, Indiana, may throw light on what ails our young people. During twenty years they have received in that institution 20,000 young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five. This means an average of 1,000 a year. Of these 20,000 young men in that reformatory only four per cent claimed membership in any church. These statistics may be the answer to the questions, What ails our youth? and What ails our country?

May not conditions today be similar to those prevailing on the 30th day of April, 1863? Then Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, issued a proclamation setting apart that day as a day of fasting and prayer.

THE WISDOM OF LINCOLN

These were his words:

"We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of Heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God.

"We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our own hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us.

OUR GREATEST NEED

"It behooves us, then, to humble ourselves before the offended power, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness."

What is it that the youth of our country needs, that the people of our nation must have, if our land is to be preserved from destruction? It is religion. The people of the nation must follow more closely the teachings and the example of him who came to bring "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Let us look to the words of the Master himself for an answer.

MEN MUST HAVE THE NEW BIRTH

"There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

"The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.

"Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

"Nicodemus saith unto him, how can a man be born when he is old? * * *

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. * * *

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." (John 3:1-7).

THE POWER OF PRAYER

So I say, this is the advice, this the counsel, this the instruction, and these are the commands for the citizens of our country. We "must be born again"—born "of the water and of the spirit." The one thing needful is religion.

Our country is filled with men who are rich, with men who, as one well-known author, Roger W. Babson, says, ridicule religion; but he holds that these men are indebted for all the riches they possess to the family prayers once held daily in the homes of their fathers.

This is a religious country. The citizens of this land ought to be devout. Our forefathers came to this continent primarily in order to secure religious liberty. The motto of our nation is: "In God We Trust."

Is there any one that dares to point with ridicule at Washington upon his knees at Valley Forge? Who is there, enjoying the liberties of this free country, that dares to ridicule Benjamin Franklin? He said: "I have lived, sir, a long time; and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men?" Who dares point with ridicule at these men, the idols of this land of liberty?

THE EXAMPLE OF OUR LEADERS

Washington, Franklin, Lincoln, Joseph Smith—each of these, in times of dire need and real distress, went upon his knees and made appeal to Divine Providence. It was Franklin who said: "In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain, when we were sensible to danger, we had daily prayer—for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard; and they were graciously answered."

It is religion, it is the guidance which comes from divine providence, that is most needed. Our Lord and Savior said to his nearest friends, "Why sleep ye? Rise and pray lest ye enter into temptation" (Luke 22:46).

"Pray without ceasing," the Bible tells us (Thes. 5:17). "Watch and Pray," the Master said again, "that ye enter not into temptation. The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak" (Matt. 26:41).

"SEEK YE THE LORD"

To pray without ceasing is the practice needed by the youth of this country; for they are, in these days, surrounded on every hand with pitfalls and unusual temptations. The words of the Master ought to be kept ringing in their ears: "Why sleep ye? Rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

"Seek ye the Lord," is another admonition that applies also to the people of these days. Those whose lives are well-nigh completed, those who have had long years of experience and know with certainty what is worth while—these are the ones who ought to call out to the youth of today, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found." Today is the accepted time; tomorrow may be too late. O youth of our country, "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found. Call ye upon him while he is near" (Isa. 55:6). This is the doctrine and the practice that the people of our country are most in need of at this very hour.

NOT FAITH ALONE, BUT WORKS

I hope I shall not give anyone the impression that we favor bringing up a generation of young people who rely on faith only. We like to emphasize the words of the Master: "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21). That we believe in doing as well as in saying, in works as well as in faith, is proved even by the chapels we have built in the Church. Most of the chapels have recreation halls connected with them.

As real Americans, the training we aim to give our young people is accurately described by the following words of Theodore Roosevelt: "Of course what we have a right to expect from the American boy is that he shall turn out to be a good American man. Now, the chances are strong that he won't be much of a man unless he is a good deal of a boy. He must not be a coward or a weakling, a bully or a prig. He must work hard and play hard. He must be clean-minded and clean-lived, able to hold his own under all circumstances and against all comers. It is only on these conditions that he will grow into the kind of man of whom America can really be proud. In life, as in a football game, the principle to follow is: 'Hit the line: don't foul; don't shirk. Hit the line and hit it hard.'"

CHIEF AIM OF REAL RELIGION

While praising and commending this strenuous and vigorous life, we impress upon our young folks ever to bear in mind these words of the Master: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." What does this mean? That we must be touched with religion; that we must have in our hearts and souls the satisfying conviction that comes as a testimony from a life of righteous living.

Our chief aim in religion is to bring up a generation of young people who have character and honor. Before our young people we are constantly holding up the words and character of such men as King Albert of Belgium, whose deeds have made him immortal. His reply to the repeated German appeals for permission to march the German army through his country was: "I cannot do so in honor." Standing to their guns, he and his people maintained their honor "intact and immortal."

WE SEEK TO UNDERSTAND YOUTH

It is works like these, not faith alone, which we are struggling to make a vital part in the lives of our people. To them we often repeat: "Take ye heed, watch and pray" (Matt. 13:33). Ye must be born again of the spirit. To him who relies upon daily prayer, "Every day is a fresh beginning, every day is the world made new" (Susan Coolidge).

Believing purity to be better than repentance, we teach our children to pray, to place their trust in divine providence. We do our utmost to keep them from sowing wild oats. We are struggling to understand youth, we are hoping to make youth understand us. The stirring appeal of Stephen L. Richards this morning for a better understanding of youth indicates how earnestly we are struggling to understand the young folks and to keep them in the ways of truth.

THE WELL-BALANCED LIFE

We believe in the well-rounded out, the well-balanced education, of both mind and heart. During the past year the President of the Church and his associates appropriated nearly one million and a half dollars for educational purposes. If you knew how generously money has been expended to train our youth, to teach them to "pray without ceasing;" if you knew that the Church is pressed today for funds because of the great expenditures made for the religious training of your sons and daughters; that the President and his associates, in order to give our young folks the religious training which the nation and the youth of our country so much need, have established eighty-two seminaries and maintained many church schools—then, I feel sure, you faithful members would come forward more liberally with your tithing. There is no price in time, in effort, or in money that you cannot afford to pay, if by so doing you can have your young folks so taught and trained that they will bring to you and to your family honor and not dishonor, credit and not discredit.

AIMS OF PRESIDENT GRANT

As to the President of the Church, his heart is noble, generous. He not only prays daily for the youth of the Church, but he has made appropriations for their welfare more liberally than is justified by the amount of tithing that you faithful Church members have paid. May we take to heart the words spoken by him at the opening session of Conference, when he said: "Pay your tithes."

I have every faith in him. He is the inspired servant of the Most High. I believe in the promise he made: "Pay your tithes, pay your offerings, and you will be richly blessed."

By so doing, we make it possible to place our religious training, our seminary instruction, within the reach of students in the public schools. Only thus shall we be able to bring up a generation of people the like of whom the world has not known.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We have listened to a great many testimonies from our brethren during this conference.

We shall now call on some of our sisters to address us briefly.

SISTER LOUISE Y. ROBISON

President of the Relief Society

My brethren and sisters, I am sure you will know that I need your faith and prayers, but I do love to bear my testimony. I know that our Heavenly Father has been good to me, and to all women, especially since this glorious gospel has been restored. It seems to me that the women of this Church cannot fail to show our Heavenly Father their gratitude by upholding the standards of the Church and by obeying entirely, as far as it is humanly possible, the instructions of our leaders. I am happy to say that the Latter-day Saint women are loyal, and do pray earnestly for our Authorities. The Relief Society women are striving to give to the Church boys and girls who are clean and who will be capable of carrying on the Lord's work. When I hear the mission presidents' reports, my heart is just thrilled to think of the work that the missionaries have done; that they have carried the gospel to foreign countries. My parents were partakers of it, and I can only pray that I shall live and that I shall encourage other mothers of Zion to so live, that we may give to the world men and women who are clean and pure and capable of carrying this inspiring message to our brethren and sisters abroad.

I thank President Grant for this privilege, and I pray that we shall ever be true to the leaders of this Church, and then I am sure we shall be safe. I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

SISTER RUTH MAY FOX

President of the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association

My brethren and sisters, this is surely a surprise to me, and I stand before you entirely dependent upon the Spirit of our Heavenly Father as to what I shall say. I may say, however, that I am very, very proud of being a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Since I am asked to bear my testimony, you will not consider it egotistical if I say that from my childhood, I have looked upon the presiding brethren—the President of this Church, and those associated with him—as the very servants of God. I was taught in my early years that President Brigham Young was the mouthpiece of God to all mankind, and that thought has never wavered in my heart concerning him and also the succeeding presidents up to this time. I want to say here before the fathers and the mothers, teach your children reverence for the Authorities of the Church. Teach them that they are men of God. Teach them to obey their counsels. I was trained to believe that in obeying counsel there is safety. I realize that nowadays many of us are not so particular about this matter as our people used to be.

Naturally, as you know, I am interested in the youth. I have been interested in my own children, and as I look back through a long life and take note of what I have gained, I find it is my children that mean the most to me. My children are my jewels; they are my heritage, and I thank the Lord that they are fairly good. None of us can throw stones, you know. We all live in glass houses. But I do thank the Lord that I have been able to rear my children in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I do pray that he will give me influence with the daughters of Zion, especially; that because I have lived they may have more faith in God and in their fathers and mothers and in the Authorities of the Church. I ask this blessing in the name of Jesus. Amen.

SISTER MAY ANDERSON

President of the Primary Association

I am happy today to be able to bear my testimony. I was not born in the Church. My parents were converted many years ago. When I was a young girl a prediction was made on my head and blessings were given to me. When the statement was made in this conference that it is a good thing to have and read your patriarchal blessings, I could say, Amen to that, because blessings which have been pronounced upon my head have been literally fulfilled. The prediction given in my youth said I should come to be known in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and that my name would be respected. I realize that if my name is respected I must live in such a way as to earn that respect. I have tried to do my duty as it has been presented to me by the General Authorities of the Church and by my knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

It is a very great responsibility, in my estimation, to raise your voice and give service in behalf of little children. Had I known, in the early days of my life what would be the greatest pleasure to me I could not have chosen a vocation more suited to the happiness and contentment of my life than the privilege of trying to help boys and girls to understand the gospel of Jesus Christ.

My testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, is that God loves us and that he is willing to bless us. I know this in and of myself, and I ascribe my greatest happiness to my membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

That we may all enjoy this supreme blessing, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The congregation then arose and sang the first two verses of the hymn, "The Spirit of God Like a Fire is Burning."

ELDER BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS

Of the First Council of Seventy

Frankly, I am a bit frightened. I might have used another word but I think that will express my feelings. I do not believe that anyone can face a presence such as this and not feel a little abnormal. One other thing troubles me, and that is I do not know just what I ought to say. I have but one idea in mind with which to begin. After that we will have to take our chances.

I recall that in our State Constitutional Convention, when the committee on personal rights made its report to that body (I think it was my friend, Franklin S. Richards who read the report) there was a clause in it which at the time did not strike me very favorably; and I remember I called up some question in regard to it. I had not previous to that time given it due consideration. It was this: "A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is essential to the maintenance of liberty and the rights of the people." I thought such a clause unnecessary, and made some objection, as I say; but after consideration I concluded that I was mistaken, and that the paragraph announced a very profound principle, and a very necessary thing. I have thought much of it through the years since then, and am persuaded that it is a profitable thing, from time to time, to go to the consideration of fundamental principles. In the case of civil government, of course, reference to the consideration of fundamentals is needful to preserve liberties of the people. So, also, in Church affairs, in religion, I have discovered that when things get a bit confused, and in your feeling and thought you are about at the zero point, a good way to work out of the confusion is to consider first principles, fundamental things.

Now this morning the thought occurred to me that it might be well for me, on this occasion, to consider what to me personally are the fundamental things. Then if in an incidental way, the audience can get benefit from this consideration, there will be that much of gain.

Very well, then, let me say first of all: I believe in God; and in the Lord Jesus Christ, as the very Son of God; and the Holy Ghost, as that Spirit of intelligence that imparts the knowledge of the truth, and is the witness of the Father and Son unto the world. I believe that. I believe in the gospel of Jesus Christ as the means that divine wisdom has devised for the salvation of the world. I believe in all the ordinances of that gospel as the means through which the grace of God is imparted to the human soul, and salvation results through faith in and obedience to that gospel.

I believe in the Church of God, with God's holy priesthood as the inside framework of it; that gives it form and stability and power and authority.

I believe that there have been many dispensations of the gospel given to men. The dispensation between Adam and Noah, counted as the patriarchal dispensation; and the gospel, or part of it, not wholly, but rather imperfectly expressed through the law that was given unto Israel in symbols, and signs of things yet to come and not the very things themselves, but stood as representatives of those things—the “school master” to bring men to Christ.

I believe in the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ—and in his atonement that he offered for the salvation of men; and I believe that atonement is essential to the salvation of men. I believe it was God’s means of expressing his love for the world, for as God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, to become the Savior of the world, so the Lord Jesus Christ himself so loved his brethren that he was willing to make the sacrifice for their salvation, and thus gave evidence to men indeed of the love of God.

I was speaking a moment since of the successive dispensations. I believe that the great dispensation, introduced by the ministry of John the Baptist, and followed by the ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ, is the dispensation of the meridian of times, for the development of those great things concerning the salvation of men and the expression of the love of God. I also believe that, in fulfillment of the inspired words of the servants of God in those days, men subsequently transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broke that glorious covenant, and left the world again in darkness. True, throughout that period from the Christ to our day, there were left fragments of the splendid truths and sublime teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ, that have become the common heritage of the world. But the formal authority of the Church and the ordinances of salvation—these were departed from, and a period of dark apostasy hung over the world until, in the providences of God, the time came for the introduction of what is known to us as the dispensation of the fulness of times. God raised up a prophet in these latter days to introduce that bringing together of all the dispensations that have ever been, and welding them into one great final triumphant dispensation. That restoration was brought to pass through the work that God introduced by the Prophet Joseph Smith; by revealing himself and his Son Jesus Christ to this witness, who was to be God’s witness in the world in these last days, the witness par excellence; and hence the vision given to him was clearer and fuller than had ever been given in the world before. I believe that with all my soul.

In the course of time this new witness sealed his testimony with his blood. I doubt not but what the wisdom of heaven concluded it was essential, because where a testament is, as Paul argues, there must needs be the death of the testator, in order that the final evidence that man can put upon his life and his work might be given to his fellowmen. He gives his life in attestation of it. Hence the broad seal of Joseph Smith’s martyrdom is affixed to the Book of Mormon and to the volume of revelations that he gave to the world.

Necessarily there had to be successors to him. There have been six: Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, and our present President, Heber J. Grant.

There must be, after the introduction of this dispensation, no recession from the position that had been taken by the introduction of this work. Hence, believing in God's holy priesthood, I must needs believe in the perpetuation of that priesthood in its fullness; in its glory, in its power, and in the success of it. The first prophet must arrange for a perpetuity of that which had been given to him. I believe that he did.

It would not matter to me if all the forms and ceremonies might not have been followed. Substance is more than shadow; and I believe that Brigham Young inherited, by the fact of his succession to Joseph Smith, all that Joseph Smith had received from God through the ministration of holy angels with their several keys of authority and power. And that, succeeding Brigham Young, the next man in position came to the same heritage, power and authority. The one following him in like manner received the same heritage of power and authority; and so all down the line until the present time. I now proclaim my faith absolutely that Heber J. Grant possesses all that these other men possessed; that he is God's servant; that he is the mouthpiece of God to this people and likewise to this generation of men so long as he shall live. I believe that, and that there has been no diminution of authority and power between him and his predecessors. I may say in the way of my testimony concerning him, that I have known him for a good many years. We have had some experiences together, not always, I was going to say, of a pleasant kind, but I think I ought not to say that, for when the outcome of things has been reached the fulfillment has been good, but the way has not always been smooth.

There is no man that I know of anywhere who by the texture of his nature and character, who by the purity and the uprightness of his life, can be more loved of God than President Heber J. Grant. I have absolute faith in his honesty, and if God has a word to impart to the Church or to the world, I could not select in my mind, or from my experience among my friends fix upon a man whom I would believe could hold the confidence and favor of God more than he. So that not only by the ordinations that he has received, and calls to authority and place, I believe absolutely in his fitness for his position. And when God has a word to give His Church or to the world, this man, as long as he lives, will be the man through whom it will come. That is my faith in regard to Heber J. Grant.

I have been fortunate enough to know all the Presidents of the Church since the Prophet Joseph Smith. Of course I only knew Brigham Young as a boy may know a great man from a distance. But I sat under the sound of his voice, and heard his teaching, felt the influence of his spirit, and noted the evidence of inspiration in his face when he taught the people, and in his bearing as he stood before them—he was God's mouthpiece unto the people. John Taylor I knew more intimately. When I went on my first mission there was no mission organized in that particular state where I was laboring. I was the only elder in it, and my reports were made directly to President John Taylor, and my instructions were received directly from his office. Later, when presiding in the Southern States Mission, I found it necessary to submit problems and questions to him directly, and to sit with him in council in relation to the affairs of that mission. Later, of course, as some of you know, I became his biographer; so that all his letters in existence, personal and official—his official communications, his journals, and everything that had been written to or by him, passed through my hands; and I wrote the story of his life. That made me intimately acquainted with him.

With Wilford Woodruff I had the good fortune to have most personal and confidential relations, and to me, of the dearest kind. I may say the same thing, though not to the same extent, with reference to Lorenzo Snow. Joseph F. Smith I knew more intimately. I came in contact with his mind, and sometimes it was flash against flash. But I must say for Joseph F. Smith that I saw him on numerous occasions respond to the spirit of inspiration from God, and rise above himself and give decisions and draw conclusions; though some times contrary to his natural inclinations, yet he followed the light as God gave him to see it—I am sure of that.

I have already said concerning Heber J. Grant that I have known him a long time. He has been my friend on various occasions. I appreciate those manifestations of his good will for me.

I believe then that this line of six succeeding presidents of the Church have been men inspired of God; that God has been with them; and as I stated recently from this stand, the occasions of observing inspiration in these men have been too positive and frequent for me to doubt for a moment that the Church of the Latter-day Saints has been organized on God's plan; that he has ordained that there is but one man at a time on earth who receives revelations for the whole Church, and that man is of his appointing, approval and upholding.

That, as to my faith, is what I call fundamental principles. What I have said marks off my faith in this present dispensation of the gospel; and if there has been any wavering anywhere or at any time from this conviction that I now express, I have not been conscious of it. Such my faith—briefly expressed—in fundamental principles that I hold in connection with you, I presume, in relation to this great latter-day work. And my faith is that it is going on to its triumph. I know not through what trying circumstances as a Church we shall pass in the second century of existence, even as we have had to pass through experiences in this first century now drawing to a close. I know not that; but I have supreme confidence that the second century as well as the first century will close gloriously, and that the purposes of God will be achieved even as his wisdom shall unfold them.

I happened to be reminded today that next April it will be fifty years since I commenced my public ministry in the Church. Fifty years since I was called in a conference of the Church such as this to become a traveling elder; and between then and now what wonderful experiences are stretched out! Will you pardon me just a moment if I refer to some of these things? During that time my labors have been almost incessant in the interest of this work, in preaching from the pulpit, in lecturing from platforms, in writing books—expository books, defensive books, historical books—until I think I may say, without disparagement of others, at least the volume of my work in this kind—in the contributions I have made to the Church—is not exceeded by any other man in that fifty years. I mean as to the volume of the contribution. As to the value of that contribution of course others may have written more valuable books. I will not go into that. I want to bear testimony to you that I have at least been busy in the period mentioned. I have preached the gospel in many lands; not in as many as some, but I have traveled almost as much as any man within the last fifty years—not perhaps to such great distances as others, but within the English-speaking races I have covered as much territory.

I am mentioning some of these things in order that my profession of faith that I have made here today may be supported by the evidence of steady, persistent effort on my part to develop and to advocate and to establish this great work of God. I have preached under many circumstances; within prison walls where I myself was a prisoner for the sake of this work; and in the halls of congress too, where if I did not fill the term of my office I had the opportunity at least of bearing witness to the truth of this work. I saw the wrath of a nation rise to break upon my head; and when I took my station in the hall of Representatives before the speaker's desk, to take the oath of office, I was confronted by a petition signed by seven millions of people, rolled in upon trucks before the speaker's desk, to protest against my instalment into office. And I was thrust away from the first rung of the ladder that I had dreamed and hoped might lead to a career of usefulness in behalf of my people. This, too, for obedience to the doctrine of the New Dispensation. I was crushed and mangled in the lone fight; for it was a lone fight, so far as human aid is concerned, with the exception of a few dear hands that were thrust out to render a little assistance in a material way, all of which I returned for the most part. But the helpers were very few.

I still held on in spite of these things. I have faced both in the old world and the new, the violence of mobs. I have known men to be practically shot from my side, martyrs to the cause of God; and I did not desert them. I took my risk with them to render them service, dead though they were. I do not know how I shall ever obtain your pardon for such references as these to personal services in this, God's work. But this is my object, and my object alone; that after bearing testimony to the fundamental things of this work, and my confidence in it, I hope that if anywhere along the line I have caused any of you to doubt my faith in this work, then let this testimony and my indicated life's work be a correction of it. I make reference to these personal things in fifty years of service so that you may know that my testimony has some sanctions for it in the life of service I have given to the cause. And if to your minds, I say again, there does not occur remembrance of this service, then let the shame of it be mine. It would not be good taste for me to make further allusion to such things.

After the hymn, "O Ye Mountains High," had been sung by the congregation, the benediction was pronounced by Elder John E. Hepler, who is in charge of the Bureau of Information on the Temple Grounds.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

On Sunday morning, October 6th, the auditorium and galleries of the large Tabernacle were crowded to capacity, every seat being taken and every available space in the aisles and doorways being occupied.

The Assembly Hall directly south of the Tabernacle was crowded with people who listened to the Conference proceedings as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle. Thousands of others who were unable to get inside of either of these buildings, assembled upon the Tabernacle grounds and listened to the services by means of loud speakers that had been installed.

The fifth session of the Conference began promptly at ten o'clock, with President Heber J. Grant presiding.

The Tabernacle Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet."

Elder Joseph T. Finlinson, President of the Deseret Stake, offered the invocation.

Sister Mamie Stark, assisted by the choir, sang the hymn, "O My Father."

PRESIDENT ANTHONY W. IVINS

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying:

"Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?"

"And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some Elias; and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

"He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?"

"And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God."

If the Lord will give me help, my brethren and sisters, I desire to make this scripture which I have read the basis of the brief remarks that I am to make this morning. Never before have I more profoundly felt my own weakness and utter dependence upon the Lord. Facing this great congregation of Latter-day Saints, which appears to me possibly the greatest ever assembled in the history of the Church, I am overcome with emotion, which leaves me in a very dependent frame of mind.

I have prepared and must necessarily refer briefly to notes which I have, because I desire in a few minutes to take you over a long trail, a winding trail, which will lead us back a hundred years.

FUNDAMENTAL DOCTRINES

The scripture which I have read, uttered by the Redeemer of the world, so often quoted and expounded before congregations of Christian people, contains fundamental doctrines with which the members of the Church should be thoroughly familiar. The question propounded was a very simple one: "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" The answer is equally simple, where definite information or knowledge is lacking: "Some say that thou art John the Baptist, some Jeremias or Elias, or one of the prophets." But Peter made a definite and direct answer: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then said the Redeemer to him: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. * * * Thou art Peter, and upon this rock (the rock of revelation) I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." And continuing, he said to Peter: "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

UPON THE PRINCIPLE OF REVELATION

A thoughtful study of these words reveals these great truths: First, that it is possible that knowledge not previously possessed may come from God our Father to his children who are here upon earth. It is probably true that Peter himself did not understand the direct source from which the impulse that prompted his answer had come, but this scripture makes it plain that it came from God our Father, who spoke to him through the influence, or whisperings, of the Holy Ghost.

Another important truth which this scripture reveals is that the means of communication between our Father who is in heaven and his children who are here upon earth, is the Holy Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, communicated to us through the precious gift of revelation.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is to be built upon this principle of revelation.

Another very important thing which is definitely implied by these words spoken by the Redeemer of the world is that the keys which were bestowed upon Peter, when in the possession of any other man, as they were in the possession of Peter, confer upon him the authority to bind upon earth and it shall be bound in heaven; to loose upon earth and it shall be loosed in heaven.

Questions which are of vital importance, and in which this principle or doctrine of revelation is directly involved, have come to the Church from the time of its organization until the present. They are constantly being introduced and discussed, many of which, unless properly understood and defined, lead to confusion and misunderstanding.

A TEMPLE BUILDING CHURCH

It is to one of these questions that I desire to confine my remarks this morning. I refer to the propaganda which is being so industriously circulated among members of the Church, in favor of the immediate construction of a temple at Independence, in Jackson county, Missouri. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a temple-building church. Among the very first commandments that were given to the Church was the word of the Lord in regard to the building of temples; and we are told in the revelation that its members are always expected to do this in order that the house of the Lord may be erected, and a place properly prepared where the ordinances of his house may be administered in the manner in which he designs that they should be.

In the early history of the Church, a temple was erected at Kirtland, Ohio, the first to be dedicated to the Lord in this dispensation. Prior to that time, however, the Lord had revealed to the Church that the center stake of Zion was to be established in Jackson county, Missouri. I desire to read the revelation which refers to this, and which is contained in the eighty-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"A revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant, Joseph Smith, Jr., and six elders, as they united their hearts and lifted their voices on high.

"Yea, the word of the Lord concerning his Church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouth of his prophets, and for the gathering of his saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city of New Jerusalem.

"Which city shall be built, beginning at the temple lot, which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the state of Missouri, and dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, Jun., and others with whom the Lord was well pleased.

"Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation.

"For verily this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord, which shall fill the house."

PERIOD OF PERSECUTION

All of you, my brethren and sisters, who are familiar with the history of the Church know that after the gathering of numbers of its members to the state of Missouri, persecution developed which became so intense and unbearable that they were not permitted to remain there. During the period of these persecutions excavations were made at Far West in Missouri, and the corner stone laid there, with the intention of erecting a temple at that place, but because of persecution the work proceeded no farther.

The people were finally driven from the state. Many were put to death. Many were imprisoned, and property of inestimable value was confiscated.

Driven from Missouri, members of the Church migrated to the state of Illinois, where they found temporary asylum and peace. It was nine years after the revelation from which I have just read was given that the Lord commanded the Church to proceed immediately to erect a temple at Nauvoo, Illinois. Before this building was entirely completed, opposition to the Church again developed. Persecution became more intense, perhaps, than ever before. Men were placed under arrest, charged with sedition, murder, and other kindred offenses—not one of which was ever proved to be true—with the result, as you all know, that the members of the Church were again driven from their homes, and under the leadership of Brigham Young, turned their faces westward, in the hope that they might find peace and the opportunity to worship the Lord as their consciences dictated, here in the valleys of these mountains. Brigham Young, having become the leader of the Church, it was under his presidency that the migration across the plains was successfully carried out.

Just as definitely as the Church was commanded to make Jackson county, Missouri, the gathering place of the Saints, and to erect a temple there in this generation, upon which a cloud should rest by day, so does he, in this scripture which I have read, release them from that responsibility. And he says further:

"This I make an example unto you, for your consolation concerning all those who have been commanded to do a work and have been hindered by the hands of their enemies, and by oppression, saith the Lord your God."

After the arrival of the pioneers in this valley one of the first important acts of the President was to designate a spot for the erection of a temple, upon the block where we are now assembled, work upon which was immediately commenced and prosecuted until the structure was finished and dedicated, and has for many years been in operation.

VARIOUS FACTIONS

At the time of the exodus of the Church from Nauvoo, Illinois, many of its members remained behind, among them the family of the Prophet. Sidney Rigdon, the man who had dedicated the spot in Missouri where the city of Zion and temple were to be reared, a close friend of Joseph Smith, and at one time his counselor in the Presidency, retired to Pittsburgh, where he gathered around him a small congregation, and organized a church after the pattern of the Church at Nauvoo. The movement, however, was an entire failure, and it was but a short time until his congregation left him and scattered.

James J. Strang, another man of great influence and power in the Church, claiming that Joseph Smith had designated him to be his successor in the Presidency, led away a considerable number of people to Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan, where he organized a church and sent his missionaries to Great Britain and other parts of the world. He was finally anointed king, by his congregation, and reigned as a king until finally his administration became unbearable, and he was killed by one of the members of his own congregation.

Lyman Wight, a man of influence in the Church, gathered together a small body of these people who remained behind, and established himself in Texas, where for a time he held a small congregation together. But like all the others, it was only a short time until there was dissolution and he was left alone.

It was from the members of these different congregations, brought together under the leadership of Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet, that the church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was formed. This denomination is still in existence.

HEDRICKITES OR CHURCH OF CHRIST

The matter to which I desire to call particular attention relates to the small congregation of people known as Hedrickites. In 1851 Granville Hedrick and Daniel Judy, both of whom had been regularly ordained elders in the Church, began to preach the gospel as they understood it. They gathered around them a number of converts. They rejected the doctrine of plural marriage, the doctrine of baptism for the dead, and practically all of the revelations given to the Church through Joseph Smith after 1834, declaring that from that time forward he had been a fallen prophet. These people, in 1864, removed to Jackson county, Missouri, and soon after, by purchase, acquired a small portion of the tract of land which was originally known as the temple block. The tract of land purchased by Edward Partridge, and which was designated as the temple block, consisted of some 63 acres. This had been subdivided and sold, so that the Hedrickites acquired only about three acres of the original tract, which they now hold.

By the addition of numbers of people who have dissented from the Reorganized Church and others, the numbers of the Hedrickites have recently been considerably increased. They have now organized themselves into a church which they call the Church of Christ.

SOLICITING AID

It is a well known fact to many of you that these people have sent out their agents, who have recently visited many of the wards of the Church in the stakes of Zion that are in Utah, Arizona, California, Idaho and in other places. The message which they bring to us is this: that the Lord has revealed to them that the time has come when the temple is to be erected upon the temple lot at Jackson county, that this scripture which I have read, from section 84 of the Doctrine and Covenants, may be fulfilled, because they call attention to the fact that the generation which lived at the time that the revelation was given has about passed away. They have been to us. They have come to our office soliciting aid. They would like us to assist them in building a temple. In other words, they would like us to become a part of their organization, not to direct it, not to control it, but to act in harmony with it.

A HOUSE BUT NOT A TEMPLE

My brethren and sisters, with all good feeling toward these people, which we have always had, and always manifested, you will readily understand the impossibility of such a coalition. It is true that a house may be erected upon that tract of ground in this generation, but it will not be a temple erected to the name of the Lord and accepted by him, until the time comes when he shall speak through the proper channel, and the work be accomplished by his recognized church.

THE PURPOSE OF A TEMPLE

I asked these people what they would do with the temple if they had one. What would a temple be to people who do not believe in baptism for the dead? The first great purpose, when the Lord commanded the building of the temple at Nauvoo, was that a proper place might be provided for the administration of the ordinances of the house of the Lord in behalf of our dead; and the Lord told us plainly that except we went to and completed that work, that the keys of authority for the administration of these ordinances might be conferred, he would no longer accept the administration of the ordinance of baptism for the dead as we had been administering it.

Now, in connection with this I desire to call your attention to something which has direct application to it.

THEIR OFFERINGS ACCEPTED

At the time that the revelation was given commanding the construction of the Nauvoo temple, which was about ten years after the one from which I have read, the Lord makes this plain and definite statement:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, that when I give a commandment to any of the sons of men to do a work unto my name, and those sons of men go with all their might and with all they have to perform that work, and cease not their diligence, and their enemies come upon them and hinder them from performing that work, behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men, but to accept of their offerings.

"Therefore, for this cause have I accepted the offerings of those whom I commanded to build up a city and a house unto my name, in Jackson County, Missouri, and were hindered by their enemies, saith the Lord, your God."

It reveals to us this great truth, that God does not require at the hands of men the accomplishment of that which is impossible—not impossible to him, but impossible to them. Whether it applies to this particular subject which I am treating, whether it applies to any other law that has been given of the Lord, and which the Church has conscientiously endeavored to carry out and been prevented from doing so by the enactment of civil law which would bring us into direct conflict with the government under which we live,—the Lord holds that in abeyance.

IN THE TOPS OF THE MOUNTAINS

Now, do not understand me to say, my brethren and sisters, or to infer that Jackson county, Missouri, will not eventually be the gathering place of the saints, that it will not be the place for the erection of the city which shall be known as the New Jerusalem; but it is very definitely certain that it was not the will of the Lord that it should be made the first great gathering place of the members of his Church in this dispensation. Otherwise he would not have brought the people to these valleys of the mountains; otherwise the words of the prophets of old would not have been fulfilled. Isaiah, long ago, before the birth of the Redeemer of the world, declared, looking into the future, that it should come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house should be established,—not upon the plains of Missouri, nor the rolling hills of Illinois,—but it should be established in the top of the mountains, and should be exalted above the hills, and all nations should flow unto it. Many people should go and say: Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob. For what purpose? That we may there be taught his ways and learn to walk in his paths.

FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

If that scripture to which I refer has not been fulfilled by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, during the past hundred years, it has not been fulfilled anywhere. Father Jacob, when he laid his hands upon Joseph, his younger son, declared that his heritage had prevailed beyond that of his progenitors. They were given Palestine, but his heritage extended to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills; to a land shadowed with wings; to a land rich in gold and silver and the precious things of the earth; to a land where the gathering of a people would occur, who would make the desert to blossom as the rose; a land in which cities would be built in what had before been desolate places; a land in which the voices of children and music would be heard, where before there had been silence and desolation.

As I look at this congregation of Latter-day Saints today I see in it the fulfillment of these words of the prophet. There are gathered here people from all parts of the world. They have come to Zion. They are the sons of Joseph, the heritage to whose race and people was conferred upon his younger son, Ephraim. Oh, it is a wonderful thing, my brethren and sisters, if we could only understand it. The redemption of Zion is yet to come.

THE UNITED ORDER

I found on my desk yesterday a printed communication from a man, undoubtedly a good man, undoubtedly earnest in what he says, in which he declares himself to be a forerunner of the establishment of the United Order, the law of consecration which was given to the Church. He is a seventy in the Church and in good standing. He makes himself the self-appointed guardian of the Church, a watchman upon the towers of Zion.

The Lord gave us the law of consecration and the United Order, which is the order that God's people must sooner or later obey—I bear testimony to that; I have tried it; I know its benefits. It was not a failure on the part of the Church where I resided, but we were evidently not prepared for it. But the Lord told us, as recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants, that this law should be held in abeyance until the time of the redemption of Zion.

THE NEW JERUSALEM

I would like to read if you will excuse me for possibly overrunning the time a little—from the Book of Mormon, something that has a direct bearing upon this subject. These are the words of the Redeemer himself who came and ministered to the Nephite people upon this continent. Speaking of that which was yet far future he says:

"It shall come to pass that I will establish my people, O house of Israel.

"And behold, this people will I establish in this land, unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I have made with your father Jacob.

"This people"—he was speaking directly to the Nephite people.

"And it shall be a New Jerusalem. And the powers of heaven shall be in the midst of this people; yea, even I will be in the midst of you."

Again, in the following chapter, speaking of the people that should inhabit this land, calling them to repentance, he says:

"If they will repent and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them,"—which he has done.

"And they shall come in unto the covenant and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance.

"And they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob, and also as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem.

"And then shall they assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem.

"And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst."

THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF GOD'S PURPOSES

What a wonderful conception of the purposes of the Almighty we have, when we come to consider not only the accomplishments of the past century, but that which is still before the Church. The opening of the greatest gospel dispensation in the history of the world, for it means the consummation of God's work. It means the redemption of his covenant people, the bringing of them together, and their restoration to the promised lands of their fathers. It means that Judah shall return to Palestine, which they are doing. The World War brought about wonderful changes, all looking to the fulfillment of these words of the prophets. It brought Palestine under the protectorate of Great Britain, the heritage of their own people, for Great Britain, the Anglo-Saxon people of the world today, are largely made up of the remnants of the ten tribes of Israel who were carried away captive by Shalmanezzer.

Thus the Lord moves in a mysterious way to accomplish his purposes. We do not always understand them. We do not always understand the end in the beginning, but as we see the gradual development of the Lord's work we come to understand it.

I suppose few people see, in the coming to the United States of Ramsay Macdonald, the prime minister of Great Britain, anything that has particular relationship to the word of God, but I see in it possibilities of wonderful accomplishment. He comes from this British nation, this nation of Christian people, this nation among which Christianity was established while Rome was still a heathen nation, this people who were the first to erect a Christian church, as far as we are aware: where from that time to the present the people—speaking of the people at large—have retained their faith in Christ, and according to the light that they have had, have served him. The Lord will use them as his instruments in the bringing about of these mighty purposes, one of the greatest of which is the gathering of these dispersed tribes.

There are a hundred and thirty millions of people in Russia. Who are they? What is their ancestry? Prof. Chwolson of the National Museum at St. Petersburg, has traced more than seven hundred tombs of people that had been buried along the route traveled by the Ten Tribes from the time they left Assyria until they found their way into southern Russia, into the Balkan states, into the British Isles and northern Europe. They are the people from whom the harvest of the Church is being gathered today.

A SIGNIFICANT THING

An interesting thing that I noted here, to which I wish to call your attention, is that the Book of Mormon tells us that the Jews shall begin to believe, before the coming of Christ. At a meeting recently held at Hamburg, in Germany, attended by four hundred missionary Jews, it was announced that in Russia alone, during the past seven years since the World War—the World War gave liberty to the Russian people, the most down-trodden, priest-ridden people in the world who profess to be civilized—eight hundred thousand Jews have accepted belief in Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of Israel. Rather a significant thing, is it not, my brethren and sisters, if it is true?

THE MOUNTAIN OF THE LORD'S HOUSE

I must not continue my remarks. I thought of this hymn which we sang yesterday:

"High on the mountain top,
A banner is unfurled;
Ye nations now look up;
It waves to all the world.

* * *

"For God remembers still His promise made of old"

He hasn't forgotten it.

"That he on Zion's hill
Truth's standard would unfold!

* * *

"His house shall there be reared,
His glory to display;
And people shall be heard
In distant lands to say:
We'll now go up and serve the Lord,
Obey His truth, and learn His word."

I knew the good man who wrote these verses, inspired by the spirit of prophecy; for he declared just what we are realizing today, not only in behalf of the members of the Church, but thousands of people, who are coming here every year to this Bureau of Information, where they are asking for information regarding the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; and they are receiving it, information properly given. Its influence is felt in all parts of the world. Away down in Czecho-Slovakia, where President Widtsoe has recently opened a new mission, the influence of this Bureau of Information has made our elders welcome by the government of that country.

So the words of Isaiah are being fulfilled; the mountain of the Lord's house is established in the top of the mountains. That is what we are particularly interested in. It has been exalted above the hills, and many people have come here for the purpose of learning the way of the Lord, that they may learn to walk in his paths.

NOT TEMPLES OF THE LORD

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. Do not allow this question of the building of the temple in Jackson county to worry you. A house may be built by these people to whom I have referred, but it will not be a temple recognized by the living God. One of the first things the Nephite people did, after they landed here, was to erect a temple, and they built it after the pattern of the temple of Solomon. They forgot the Lord. They denied him, and became idolaters, even to the offering of human sacrifice. And yet when Hernan Cortes landed in Mexico he found the most magnificent temples there, dedicated to the worship of the Devil, and they acknowledged that they worshipped the Devil, not because they loved him, but because they feared him. They said that he appeared to them in bodily form and instructed them regarding their duties; and I believe there was something in it, myself. They were temples, but they were not temples that were accepted by the Lord. There was one small building at Tezcoco, on the shores of the lake, just out from the City of Mexico, in which there was no idol, in which no human sacrifice was offered, which was adorned with flowers; and when asked to whom the house was erected, the natives said it was to their Fair God who had visited them and gone away, but had promised that he would return, and they were waiting for him; that he was a man who taught them peace and love, to abstain from war, to love peace, and help one another. Just a remaining vestige of the gospel of Christ which was left among that people, and they are looking for the return of Quetzalcoatl.

I pray the blessing of the Lord upon you, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

A duet entitled "An Angel From on High" was sung by Cyril Martin and Ida Hepworth.

ELDER J. HOWARD JENKINS

Former President of the New Zealand Mission

Responsibility always makes us apprehensive, so this morning I feel entirely dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord for those things that I shall say.

This is a time of refreshing. We have all come to conference this morning to be refreshed and to return home strengthened in our purpose in life, to carry on the ideals of this splendid Church.

I feel like a watchman from the outposts of New Zealand this morning, when I say to you that the gospel is being preached in that land, and the inhabitants of that great domain of the British Empire are being given the opportunity of learning of the truths of the gospel. The elders are faithful and true, and I have been impressed with the splendid manhood of this Church.

As I said in the beginning, responsibility makes us apprehensive. As fathers and as leaders of the Church I know that we are apprehensive, but I see no cause. The young men of this Church are building splendid roads. They are building finer meetinghouses than we have ever enjoyed. They are building splendidly today, and I am satisfied that they are not going to neglect the important phase of our purpose in coming to the earth. I believe that there is a finer manhood in this Church today than has ever been before in the young manhood of this Church. I am grateful for the associations I have had with them. I have seen their splendid achievements. I have listened to their faith and their confidence in the gospel. I realize, too, that they are living the gospel each day. I am impressed with their cleanliness, their virtue, and their desires to magnify their priesthood in this great work.

I believe today that greater opportunity awaits the young men in this Church than has ever been given to them before from the fact that the world is today looking for men who can carry responsibility in the true sense that the priesthood of this Church teaches us. I am mindful of the fact that our young men are being taught, those who attend priesthood meetings, and I feel inspired to say that no greater plan has ever been given to us as a priesthood than the movement that was inaugurated some time ago, whereby greater development can come because of greater opportunity of serving the Lord by magnifying our callings.

I am impressed with a story of a young man who, when he stood in the pulpit explaining the principle of repentance, said this:

"If I steal an article, God requires that I sincerely repent, that I restore that which I have stolen. If I have spoken an untruth, God requires that I repent in sincerity and restore the evil that I have spoken. The same if I lose my virtue, God requires a sincere repentance and a restoration."

So we come to the great responsibility resting upon us as a Church in these days, not only to make restitution for that which we do wrong, but to sincerely repent; and if perchance we take those things that we are unable to restore, then a sincere repentance is impossible. And so we realize, on the verge of manhood, these great responsibilities when we are initiated into this priesthood.

There was a time in my life when I doubted certain principles of the gospel, but through faith I can say to you today that I believe the gospel to be true, every principle of it. I believe in the divine leadership of the men who stand at the head of this Church, and I believe that God will so direct its affairs that it will fulfil its purposes, and that his purposes, in the end, will be fulfilled and sustained throughout the earth.

I pray God to bless us in this great responsibility, that the young manhood of this Church will keep themselves sweet and clean, that the faith of their fathers may come unto them, and that the responsibilities of this great work shall be borne on their shoulders when the opportunity comes to serve, as it will. To this end I pray God's blessings upon this Church and this people, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LORENZO W. ANDERSON

Former President of the Norwegian Mission

My brethren and sisters, I have never realized such a sight before, and I did not think that the Lord would ever give me the privilege of standing here in this tabernacle. I therefore ask him that he will bless me with his Holy Spirit, that the few words I may speak may be under its direction.

I have certainly appreciated this morning's conference. The remarks made by Brother Ivins were remarks that I have desired to hear, and if Latter-day Saints are faithful they need have no fear about the future.

God gave me a testimony of the divinity of President Grant's mission. I know beyond all shadow of a doubt that he is inspired of God. And as far as the prophets who have lived in the past are concerned, they were prophets unto their time; but I need the direction and the counsel of a living prophet, just as much as they did in times that are past. Therefore my desire is that I may heed the instructions and counsels which the present prophet gives, for I feel that they are the ones that are most essential to me.

I enjoyed my work in the land of Norway, and while it seems as though the government authorities are not as favorable towards us as they should be, I feel that this has been a source of blessing to us, for we were unable to reach the leading men of the nation before. The elders must register when they leave and must register when they enter a place, and through this means we are enabled to present unto the officers of that country a knowledge of the gospel.

Two missionaries were sent into a different branch to begin labor there. The police would not permit them to remain. We took the matter up with the American minister, and through his efforts we had a visit from a representative of the State Department. This representative called at the office and made all kinds of inquiries as to the morality and the standing of the young men who had been appointed to labor there. He was very favorably impressed, and we had the privilege of giving him a copy of the Book of Mormon—something that I do not see how we could have gotten to the State Department had not a representative of that department called upon us.

We desired while there to have Boy Scout work, M Men work and Bee Hive work. Another elder and I called upon the secretary of the Norwegian Scout Association, and asked for the privilege of becoming members of that organization. He frankly told us that Mormons, Buddhists, Mohammedans and Communists could not become members of the Scout organization of Norway. They would, as a last resort, permit Catholics, but we were not permitted to become members. Later on we sent a written application, and a flat denial came back, which would not permit us to become members of that organization.

My brethren and sisters, I feel that the time is near when many of the leading people in the land of Norway will accept the gospel. I have never been treated with greater respect, with greater courtesy, in my life, than I was by those people. They asked me many questions relative to the faith of our people, and I believe a good impression was made upon them; but we lack missionaries in that field.

I had the joy of being up among the Laplanders, and the minister who had charge of a colony of them asked me not to do any work among them. He said that the Laplanders were so simple-minded they would believe almost anything that was told them. But we had the privilege of leaving with them a Book of Mormon and a lot of our literature, and I believe the time will come that many of these blue-eyed, fair-haired people will seek after the gospel.

Brethren and sisters, let us not do anything that will bring unto us sorrow, or bring unto us regret. Let us keep our covenants sacred. Let us uphold and sustain those of our brethren who are called to preside over us. God bless them; God bless you, that we may all be true and faithful, I ask in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

PRESIDENT RUDGER CLAWSON

Standing before this great congregation of people in this great tabernacle, and standing before a greater congregation, perhaps, the people that may be listening in over the radio, I feel the responsibility of my position. The thought that was in my mind, and the prayer that was in my heart when I was called by President Grant to appear before you, was this: O Lord, help me to glorify thy name, through faith, in my utterances this morning.

DEPENDENCE UPON SPIRIT OF GOD

As I was coming into the tabernacle yesterday forenoon a brother said to me: "President Clawson, will you be a speaker this morning?" I said to him: "My dear brother, the Council of the Twelve and other authorities of the Church have no notice whatever, at these general conferences, as to whether they will be called upon to speak or not; and furthermore in speaking, they are not told just what to say. They are expected, of course, to depend upon the Spirit of the Lord to inspire them." Now, if I shall speak to you this morning by the Spirit of the Lord, you will be edified, but if I shall speak to you by some other spirit there will be no instruction. So I invoke His Spirit, and pray that it may be upon me and upon this congregation.

THE GOD WE WORSHIP

We are here as a worshiping assembly. The God that we worship, my brethren and sisters and friends, is a God of love, a God of mercy, and a God of power. The God that we worship is the God of the Bible, as set forth in King James' translation; he is the God of Adam and Eve, who were in the Garden of Eden; the God of the three great patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; the God of Moses; the God of Elijah and of Isaiah, Ezekiel and Jeremiah; the God of Jesus Christ who came in the meridian of time; and the God of his apostles. Furthermore, the God that we worship is the God of Joseph Smith, the modern prophet.

This Holy Being that I speak of is a God of body, parts and passions, as clearly and definitely described in holy writ, because we are told that man is in the image and likeness of God, hence God is in the image and likeness of man. Joseph Smith so declared him to be, for he saw him in a great vision. This God is comprehensible. He falls under the senses. There is something substantial about him, something that you can easily realize; but a God without body, parts and passions, I take it, cannot be comprehended.

A GOD OF LOVE

God is a God of love. Listen to these words by St. John:

 "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

"He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love."

Now, isn't that a wonderful statement, that we cannot even know God without exercising this tremendous principle of love? He is love, and if we shall come to understand him and comprehend him, it must be in part through this glorious attribute.

Jesus said to his disciples:

"Love one another, and if you love me ye will keep my commandments. If you love not one another you are not my disciples."

So that love exercised a mighty influence in the life and work of the Savior and in that of his disciples.

The greatest manifestation of the love of God, I take it, relates to the atonement, for we are told, in the gospel of St. John:

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

"For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

It seems to me this was a very wonderful expression of God's love for the children of men.

THE FAMILY OF GOD

We understand, from the scriptures, that Jesus Christ is our elder brother. If that be the case then we are his younger brothers and younger sisters; we belonged to a great family before we came into the world. It was the family of God, for Jesus said: "When you pray, say our Father which art in heaven." Our Father is there, and we believe that we have a mother there. That thought was beautifully expressed in the hymn that the choir sang this morning. I think you will agree with me that it is a very wonderful thought indeed. At least it is interesting and worthy of profound consideration.

"I had learned to call thee Father,
Through thy spirit from on high,
But until the key of knowledge
Was restored, I knew not why.

"In the heavens are parents single?
No, the thought makes reason stare.
Truth is reason. Truth eternal Tells me I've a mother there."

To say the least, if we are led to believe that we have a Father in heaven, I think we are justified in believing that we have a Mother there. Who ever heard of a father where there was no mother?

All this means that in heaven from whence we came we were the children of our Father, his children in spirit. This was prior to the time we came down to the earth and took upon ourselves these mortal bodies. Think of it, my brethren and sisters and friends!

TREMENDOUS SACRIFICES

Surely it was a tremendous sacrifice the Lord in heaven made, when he gave his only begotten Son to die for the sins of the world, that you and I might be redeemed, that all the world who would receive the truth might be saved in the presence of God.

Abraham was called upon to make a similar offering, in a lesser degree, when he was told to offer up his son Isaac as a sacrifice unto God. It must have been a most terrific ordeal. How could he bear it? Well, we don't know just how he could bear it, but we know that he did bear it, and we know that he was obedient and answered the commandment and undertook to carry it out because the Lord had demanded it of him. The evident purpose of it was to test his faith, to try his very soul.

A GOD OF MERCY

God is a God of mercy. We are told in the Book of Exodus:

"And the Lord passed by before Moses, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."

Then in a psalm:

"The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy."

Then again: "

"But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children;

"To such as keep his covenants, and to those who remember his commandments to do them."

Have you remarked, as I read this scripture, that the principle of mercy that is in God, our Creator, is everlasting in its character? It is a great attribute of his character. It was so before the world was organized and projected into existence. It is a great and glorious virtue in every man and woman who exercises it, and it will ever continue to be so in worlds without end. I repeat God is merciful, slow to anger, plenteous in mercy.

How is it with us, brethren and sisters? Are we merciful? Are we slow to anger, or do we give way sometimes to our feelings, and speak words of bitterness and words of anger, that we repent of later?

It seems to me if we are to become like our Heavenly Father—and that is most desirable—then we must exercise these glorious virtues,—the power of love, the power of mercy.

A GOD OF POWER

Now remember also that the God we worship is a God of power. There are many examples of this. We have seen it in our own lives. We have become cognizant of it in our own experiences. There are many examples in holy writ. Let me give you one briefly.

The Holy Bible tells us that upon one occasion in ancient times Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, came up against Hezekiah, the king of Judah. He came up with his captains and a great army. His purpose was to take possession of the fenced cities of Judah, and to war against the children of Israel. Now, mark you, the difference between this heathen king and Hezekiah, the king of Judah, a servant of the Lord.

Sennacherib came in the pride of his heart and in an arrogant boastful manner. He notified Hezekiah that he was coming, and warned him to be ready to surrender.

KING HEZEKIAH'S FAITH

What was the attitude of Hezekiah, a man of God, a man of faith? Did he sit down and cross his hands and wait for the Lord to come and deliver him and his people? No, he didn't. He believed the Lord could do it. He believed the Lord would do it, but he at once instituted proceedings of defense. He gathered his people together. The record says he strengthened himself. He built up all the walls that were broken down and raised them up to the towers, and repaired Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields in abundance; and he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and spoke comfortably to them, saying:

"Be strong and courageous. Be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him:

"With him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles."

And the people rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah, king of Judah. Mark it. The people were composed, and their feelings were calmed and they rested upon the words of Hezekiah, after preparing for defense. Hezekiah realized that faith without works is dead, being alone.

SENNACHERIB'S BOASTFULNESS

Soon after came the great heathen king. He made light of the God of Hezekiah, held him up to ridicule, reviled him, and said, in substance, to Hezekiah:

"Thinkest thou that thy God will deliver thee from my power? Why, all the gods of the heathens in the land with whom I have warred have submitted to my rule and to my authority, and think not that the God of Israel, or your God, will deliver you."

And his servants spake yet more against the Lord God, and against his servant Hezekiah. He also wrote letters to rail on the Lord God of Israel and to speak against him, saying:

"As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the god of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand."

Then they cried with a loud voice to the people of Jerusalem that were on the walls, to affright them and to trouble them, that they might take the city.

JUDAH'S DELIVERANCE

Now, brethren and sisters, under those distressing circumstances what did Hezekiah do? After he had prepared to defend his country and his liberty he prayed to the Lord, and "for this cause Hezekiah, the king, and the prophet Isaiah, the son of Amos, prayed and cried to heaven." Don't you think, after he had taken every means to defend himself and his people, that that was the proper time and a good time to cry unto the Lord, and to cry unto him in faith? What was the answer? Well, this is what it was:

"Thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria. He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor cast a bank against it.

"By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord.

"For I will defend this city, to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

"And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand."

Think of it—one hundred and eighty-five thousand—slain by the Angel of God in one night.

"So Sennacherib, king of Assyria, departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh."

OUR PROTECTION

Now, brethren and sisters, in conclusion let me say to you, with this wonderful example before us, and other things that we are familiar with, if we will keep the commandments of God and serve him, as Hezekiah served him, he will reach forth his powerful arm and lift us up and strengthen us and deliver us from our enemies, just as he has done up to this very moment. Never, in all the history of this people, covering a hundred years, were the Latter-day Saints more powerful, more influential and more numerous than they are today. I say to you great is their faith, and there is power in faith.

God bless you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALMA G. BURTON

Former President of the Tahitian Mission

My brethren and sisters, I assure you that I feel weak in occupying this position; and I, like the others who have gone before me, ask that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers while I stand here.

While sitting in my seat, and looking into the faces of these men who are on the stand, looking over this vast audience of saints, listening to the very remarkable, inspiring, and interesting testimonies that have been borne, I experienced a most peculiar feeling of comparison, a feeling that was mingled with sympathy and with thanksgiving.

My thoughts went back to the last annual conference of the Tahitian Mission, at which I presided. The saints were there gathered from many islands of the sea, some of them coming hundreds of miles, and some even a thousand miles to attend that conference. They were there for the same purpose that we are assembled here today, to receive instruction, admonition and inspiration in their work in the gospel. They do not have the opportunity of listening first-handed to our beloved President of today, and to the presiding authorities, but they are trying in their humble way to fulfil their duties, to magnify their callings and their priesthood. As I sat here with joy in my heart for the many good things that have been told to us, my sympathy went out to those people, to that portion of the house of Israel who are not so fortunate as we who can assemble in this great building and listen to the words of God.

I bring to you today, my brethren and sisters, greetings from the people of the Tahitian Mission. I trust there is in your hearts a prayer for their success as well as the success of the saints who are scattered throughout the different missions of the world. It is with pleasure that I report to you that with the very humble and faithful efforts of our elders, we are making good headway in that mission. During the past three years we have had an increase in baptisms of over a hundred per cent each year. Our tithes have shown a great increase. We have also had an increase in attendance at sacrament meetings and in faithfulness to other duties throughout the Church.

Our principal efforts, however, have been with the young people. We have been successful in organizing Improvement Associations in many of the different branches of the Tahitian Mission. We have realized the importance of giving to these young people a knowledge of the gospel, that they, in turn, may fill the positions occupied once by their fathers and the older saints who have passed on before them.

The condition of the people in general is good. We find that they are striving to pay an honest tithing. They are striving to live the gospel. They are striving to keep the commandments of God and to live the Word of Wisdom, that they may grow nearer and nearer to God. We have not had the privilege of preaching the gospel by radio, but we do have a publication of large circulation, and through that means have been able to reach many persons and homes we could not otherwise have reached.

The most effective method of preaching the gospel throughout the islands is by personal contact. Perhaps many of you do not know that the Tahitian Mission includes the entire group of the Society Islands—a great number of islands scattered over a vast expanse of water,—and as our elders travel to and fro to the different branches they live with the native people, they come in personal contact with them, and they teach them how to live family life, how to pray, how to live near to God, how to magnify their offices and callings in the Church.

My brethren and sisters, I have found in my experience that one of the most encouraging and inspiring things for an elder is to have a letter from home that encourages him in performing his duty, in living nearer to God.

In the remarks in our priesthood meeting last evening the fathers were asked to be more chummy with their sons. I want to take this opportunity to ask the fathers and mothers not to fail to put in their letters to the boys encouragement to live near to God, and to fulfil faithfully their duties. It will go a long ways in helping the boys in our mission, and I think it will in all the missions of the world.

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, that I have had the opportunity of going into the world to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am thankful for the opportunity I have had of serving with your sons and your daughters who are in the Tahitian Mission. I love them. I honor them for the courage and faithfulness they have shown in carrying the gospel message, the message of salvation, to that people. I have traveled with the boys on the sea. We have been in storms. We have been in hard circumstances, and I want to tell you, my brethren and sisters, that I am not a doubter regarding the youth of Zion. I think that the boys of today have just as much courage as those of other days have had. I have seen the boys when they had to meet situations, when it took men of courage to meet those situations, and our boys in the islands of the sea, and no doubt throughout all the other missions of the world, are successfully handling those situations every day.

I bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I am thankful that I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I know that God lives. I know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that the gospel of Jesus Christ has been restored to the earth in the latter days. I know that the power of the priesthood has again been given to us, and is operative on the earth in this last dispensation; and I know that the same power of the priesthood is operative out in the mission field as is operative here in Zion.

I bear testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that I know that President Grant is a prophet of God, called to preside over the Church in this particular time. I am thankful for the association I have had with the President and with the presiding authorities, while laboring in the mission field, which has been mostly through letters. I have received some very fine encouragement, and I have learned to love them and honor them as men who are called of God. I trust that I may live true to the covenants which I have made in this great Church.

In closing I wish to call attention to remarks that Paul, the great apostle of old, who knew Jesus Christ, made. He said:

"Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

Do we realize the importance of the message which is left for us to carry throughout the world in this dispensation? Paul realized it in his time, and he said:

"I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

"To them that are without law, as without law, * * * that I might gain them that are without law."

That is the thing that we are trying to do in the mission field,

We are trying to win the people over, to give to them the message that the gospel has for them. The Gospel of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches us to love the Lord with all our heart, and our neighbor as ourselves. How can we love our neighbors as ourselves, except to give unto them the happiness and the joy which comes to us through the gospel of Jesus Christ, which has been given to us in these latter days? I trust that the Lord will bless us all to that end, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

The choir rendered the anthem "Inflammatu8," solo part by Sister Laurinda P. Brewerton.

Elder Ralph B. Keeler, President of the Juarez Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON MEETING

The closing session of the Conference commenced promptly at 2 o'clock p. m.

President Heber J. Grant presided.

The hymn, "Praise to the Man who Communed with Jehovah" was sung by the choir and congregation.

Elder James L. Nielsen, President of the Moroni Stake, offered the opening prayer.

A sextette, assisted by the choir, rendered the anthem, "The Heavens are Telling."

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I have a telegram from Brother James L. Dunford, announcing that he and others are enjoying the conference proceedings as they are received by radio at Paris, Idaho.

I have a telegram from the Idaho Falls stake presidency announcing the death of Patriarch Robert L. Bybee, who passed away yesterday at the age of ninety-one years. He was one of the early pioneers. The funeral will be held Monday.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of Seventy and President of the Temple Block Mission.

I have enjoyed this conference. It has given us the spirit of the Psalmist when he exclaimed: "Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul."

Reference has been made to the work of the missionaries on this block. This is an important mission, and the twenty brethren and sisters, who come to help us meet the strangers within our gates, are doing a fine work—a work that is noble and true. They meet all people with a Christian-like attitude of mind. They love people, and that is why the tourists see that our message is one of love. If we can always keep here the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord as expressed by the beloved John: "God so loved us, we ought also to love one another," then people will partake of the spirit of truth.

We receive many letters expressive of the gratitude of the strangers who come to visit us. A famous Japanese educator recently spoke of our hospitality, and among the things he said was that on these grounds he felt the spirit of Christ. I am very thankful for this; and very grateful that we have brethren and sisters working here who know the true service of the Master.

We may surely say that it is to a large extent through such men and women that the Spirit of God kindles the fire of divine love and the longing for divine knowledge in the hearts of others.

Mormonism recognizes that in this great age of new thought and progress, the power of the Divine is in the living present. The religion of Jesus Christ our Lord gives us power to distinguish between the true and the false; the eternal and the temporal; spiritual substance and human opinion. Our great mission is to advocate an understanding between religion and the civilization of to-day; and we must never fear to advocate the four great fundamentals of religion that we solemnly believe to be true. These are as follows:

First, "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." We are gods in embryo. The human mind is infinite in its power to progress. In one of the finest passages of our great world-poet Shakespeare, he gives us his conception of the grandeur of the human mind when he writes:

"What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason! How infinite in faculty! In form and moving, how express and admirable! In action how like an angel! In apprehension how like a god!"

The second point that is fundamental to Mormonism is that Jesus Christ died for you and me. He atoned for the sins of the world and gave us eternal life. In the Book of Mormon we have these words of the prophet Helaman:

"Therefore, my sons, I would that ye should do that which is good, that it may be said of you, and also written, even as it has been said and written of them.

"And now my sons, behold I have somewhat more to desire of you, which desire is, that ye may not do these things that ye may boast, but that ye may do these things to lay up for yourselves a treasure in heaven, yea, which is eternal, and which fadeth not away; yea, that ye may have that precious gift of eternal life, which we have reason to suppose hath been given to our fathers.

"O remember, remember, my sons, the words which king Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, who shall come; yea, remember that he cometh to redeem the world.

"And remember also the words which Amulek spake unto Zeezrom, in the city of Ammonihah; for he said unto him that the Lord surely should come to redeem his people, but that he should not come to redeem them in their sins, but to redeem them from their sins.

"And he hath power given unto him from the Father to redeem them from their sins because of repentance; therefore he hath sent his angels to declare the tidings of the conditions of repentance, which bringeth unto the power of the Redeemer, unto the salvation of their souls.

"And now, my sons, remember, remember that it is upon the rock of our Redeemer, who is Christ, the Son of God, that ye must build your foundation."

Through Joseph Smith, the priesthood has been restored in this day for man's salvation. This gives the Christian religion a new life force, and it becomes a demonstration in this modern day of divine life. It calls forth new activities in man, and is in keeping with the general development of humanity. We are expressing a divine—a very divine and vital truth—when we say that the priesthood of God was restored in this age by John the Baptist and Peter, James and John. Therefore our task is a great one, for mankind must come to think of religion otherwise than they think of it today. We may feel then with the great writer Fichte: "We should rejoice at the sight of that vast field which we are called to cultivate, and rejoice that we feel strength within us, and that our task is endless."

Then there is the fourth great point of the Christian religion that "The Lord God hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all." We are working for the establishment of God's kingdom upon the earth. No nobler purpose could be in the hearts of men; no greater motive could ever move them. With these principles, we shall be able to work out the highest principles of morality, for faith in God and his work is the true basis of morality.

I think we are held responsible for a rich creative work. One may call the principles I have cited old or new as one will. The question is whether they are true or not. I think that such ideas and ideals have always been common to man and have been expressed in different ways. There are today far more forces working—consciously and unconsciously—towards the goal of the Kingdom than we realize. These principles are not gained from books nor from experience, but from our contact with the Spirit of God which Jesus taught us could be done. So the simple truth of God's kingdom and man's divinity remain forever and ever.

In closing, let me read to you the words of Adolf Harnak, one of the world's great scholars:

"It is religion, the love of God and neighbor which gives life meaning; knowledge cannot do it alone. Pure knowledge is a glorious thing, and woe to the man who holds it light or blunts his sense for it. But to the question, Whence*whither, and to what purpose? It gives an answer today as little as it did two or three thousand years ago. It does indeed instruct us in facts; it detects inconsistencies; it likens phenomena; it corrects the deceptions of sense and idea. But where and how the curve of the world and the curve of our own life begin, and whither this curve leads, knowledge does not tell us. But if with a steady will we affirm the forces and the standards which on the summits of our inner life shine out as our highest good, nay as our real self; if we are earnest and courageous enough to accept them as the great reality and direct our lives by them; and if we then look at the course of mankind's history, follow its upward development, and search in strenuous and patient service, for the communion of minds in it, we shall not faint in weariness and despair, but become certain of God, whom Jesus Christ called the Father and who is also our Father."

Amen.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. NIBLEY

This has been a most glorious conference. I have been coming to this tabernacle for sixty years. In the year 1869 I sang with a choir from Brigham City, in this tabernacle. Never in all that sixty years have I seen such a great multitude of people in this building and outside on this block as there is today. Zion is growing.

We have every reason to rejoice in the work of the Lord. We have been blessed during this conference with splendid weather. As a matter of fact we have a great deal of good weather at conference time, even if it is the stormy period of the year. But how beautiful this day and the two days preceding it. Could you find anywhere else in all the world, my brethren and sisters, such a delightful country to live in, with this rarefied atmosphere—three quarters of a mile above the sea level, and yet breathing salt sea air? No such atmospheric combination exists elsewhere on the known globe, because if you get salt air anywhere else in the world you must go to sea level. So here we have a most marvelous combination which is best for vegetable life, for animal life, and for human life, making it the best country in all the world. That which was a desert and a wilderness eighty-three years ago, behold what the Lord has done!

THIS IS ZION

The people have been blessed of the Lord in very deed. This city is a marvel of beauty all through the summer. As I ride around this city, I gaze at it with wonder, with admiration. I have said in my heart a hundred times, where in all the world is there a more beautiful place than this? Beautiful indeed, beautiful for situation, is Zion. This is Zion here in these mountains. Zion in the largest sense is perhaps North and South America. Zion is in Jackson County, as we heard this morning, but here also is the Zion of our God, the mountain of the Lord's house, as President Ivins read from the prophecy of Isaiah, which I will repeat, for it is good to hear: "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house"—I take that to mean the headquarters, the chief part of it though not all of the Lord's house, for in the Book of Mormon, First Nephi, 14th chapter, you can read that the saints of God should be scattered upon all the face of the earth; but the biggest end of it, as we may phrase it, the "mountain" of the Lord's house "shall be established in the top of the mountains." And here it is; here we are; and the works that we have produced, I think, are good, they are constructive. What Mormonism has done is a credit.

This building, built here before there was any railroad within many hundred miles of here, was a marvel at the time, is a marvel now. That temple—is it not splendid? Whether you believe in the doctrines of our faith or not you must admit that as builders, as a constructive people, a people who do things and do them right, we are entitled to some credit. You can see that in a material way our works are good, are they not? No sane man, unless prejudice has blinded him—and then he isn't sane—could say otherwise. The works speak for themselves; and the doctrine of the Church, the faith of the people, has produced this kind of works. Therefore that which produces these good things must, of necessity, be good itself, for an impure fountain will not send forth pure water. The tree is known by its fruit. Look at this block. Where will you find anything prettier in the world than this Temple block, kept up at the expense of the Church? We don't ask anybody to help us pay the expense. The Church pays it. Your tithes help to pay it, and it is a good work. Hundreds of thousands of people every year come here with a feeling in their hearts, and say, "Won't you please tell us something about your religion?" They come and ask for it. Why, here is the chance for the greatest missionary service in all the world. I don't think we quite appreciate the opportunity that we have here. And the men and women who have served here, and are serving, we owe them our thanks for the good work that they are doing—men like Brother Joseph Peery, who has given so many years of service free—in fact, everything here is free. These organ recitals every day—free. There isn't somebody standing around at every corner with a hat or a tin cup to take your money, or to beg for money. I have traveled over the world. You missionaries, you who are here by the hundreds, you know what you find in the world. It is pay, pay, pay. Well, here it is free, free, free; free organ recitals, free choir. I want to thank Brother Anthony Lund and the choir for their splendid work. They come here Monday afternoons at 4 o'clock, and if you will turn on your radio you will hear this wonderful choir. It is heard all over the United States. We have had letters from Long Island, from New York, from Washington, from all around the surrounding country: "We heard the choir, we heard the organ, and oh, it was so good." That is all free. I want to thank those who employ the members of the choir, the merchants and others, who release them long enough to come here for a half hour on Mondays and sing, and do a good missionary work. It is all free, and it is different from anything else in the world. I am proud of it. I am proud of what has been accomplished.

A POOR MAN'S CHURCH

This Church is just what the Lord intended it to be—a poor man's church. Of course, it is also for the rich, if the rich choose to come; but it has been built up by the poor. That was one of the signs that the Savior gave. When John was in prison and probably quite discouraged, he sent one or two of his disciples to Jesus, asking this question: "Art thou he that was to come, or look we for another?" And Jesus said to those two: "You go back and tell John the sick are healed, the lame are made to walk, the dead even are raised"—because he had power to raise the dead—and as a further evidence, "the poor have the gospel preached unto them."

So, in this day, two thousand of our missionaries are out in the world, preaching—to whom? Generally speaking, to the poor, because the rich haven't time to listen to them; they are too busy and secure with their money; and it is too much of a sacrifice yet to be called a "Mormon." It is not so much as it was fifty years ago, not by a long way, but it is still a sacrifice to give up family connections and wealth, to come and throw in their lot with the Latter-day Saints. The rich, as a rule, will not do it; but with the poor, it is different. Who were your fathers and mothers, all of you? Scarcely one that was not of the poor. I say that we get one thousand converts who are poor, where we get one who is rich. However, let us not overlook the fact that they are poor in worldly goods only. They are rich in spirit, rich in faith. They are the Lord's poor, and he loves them. They do not come from the dregs of society, but are of the highest type of manhood and womanhood.

So the gospel in this day as was the case in the days of the Savior, is preached to the poor. The poor have the gospel preached to them, and it is the gospel of Jesus Christ. The poor, I want to tell you, have built up this Church. The poor are more faithful in devotion to the Church than are the rich, or those who are comparatively rich. That poor widow in your neighborhood, whom you know, probably washing for a living, has a son on a mission, helping to support him. She is the kind, and those like her, who are really sacrificing for this work. How much do you sacrifice? How much real sacrifice do we, who are better off, make for the work? Not so very much, because what we give we don't feel, and the reason that we don't feel it very much is because we don't give very much, in proportion to what we have. But the poor—that poor emigrant girl in your ward, who is there at fast meeting, bearing her testimony, probably in broken English, her tithing is in the hands of the bishop. Let me tell you she is helping to build up the Church, she is sacrificing. I take off my hat to such as those. I bow my head in their presence because they are better than I.

FOR BUILDING UP THE KINGDOM

We heard from the President of the Church that a very considerable part of the work is halted because of the lack of missionaries. With the call for missionaries comes the call for meeting houses. It is different from what it was in the world a while ago. People want to hear about Mormonism now and they want a decent place to come to that they may hear about it. So that takes a great deal of money, and we need ten times more for that same work of the Lord; not for me, not for President Grant, not for the authorities of the Church, but for the building up of the kingdom of God. We need ten times more. And let me say, if you and I and all the rest who are well-to-do—if the entire membership of this Church, paid their tithes honestly, there would never need to be another call on the people for anything in building up the kingdom of God. The law of the Lord has provided all that would be needed. But we don't fully observe the law. We don't contribute the means that we promise, and that we are under obligation to do. Brother McKay, in the first day of conference, called attention to that very point, that you are under covenant, I am under covenant, to keep that commandment. I know some of the brethren will say: "I don't know that I have promised to pay tithing." Oh, yes you have; yes, you have. Every Sunday, if you go to fast meeting or sacrament meeting, you promise it, clearly, definitely, if not gladly. You should do it gladly, for before you eat that morsel of bread symbolizing the body, the death, burial and the resurrection of Jesus Christ, a prayer is offered, in which you make the pledge, "that we may witness unto Thee, O God the Eternal Father"—that is a pretty solemn pledge, brethren and sisters—"witness unto thee, O God the Eternal Father, that we do remember him, that we are willing to take upon us"—willing, mind you—"willing to take upon us his name,"—and what else? "And keep his commandments which he has given us." Isn't that a pledge? Isn't that your promise? Well, we haven't kept it. We don't keep it. And so the Church hasn't means enough to help carry on and build up the work of the Lord.

Here is what the Lord says about the poor. It is in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section thirty-five:

"And the poor and the meek shall have the gospel preached unto them, and they shall be looking forth for the time of my coming, for it is nigh at hand."

Then again, section fifty-six:

"Wo unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation—The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!

"Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with your own hands!

"But blessed are the poor who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs.

"For behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice;

"And their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, for ever and ever."

IN THIS GOODLY LAND

Those are the promises made to the poor. We, descendants of the poor, are placed in this wonderful, goodly land, with riches, with abundance; and yet we are so stingy, I was going to say. Our hearts are not what the Lord would like them to be, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, not a stingy giver. It will not bring so much blessing if it is given niggardly.

I recall hearing Brother Golden Kimball tell of his father, who happened to come into possession of a very fine horse, a beautiful horse, and the boys thought they needed it; whereas he, Brother Kimball, thought he had better pay it in on tithing—for we used to pay in kind, in those days, when there wasn't any money in this country; wheat was paid, and butter and eggs, cattle and sheep, and everything that was produced. Well, this was a beautiful horse, and the boys thought they ought to keep him. Finally Brother Kimball had to say: "You take that horse right down to the bishop there in the tithing office, before my heart puckers up."

Well, we figure out how little we can pay, and our hearts "pucker" up, and we don't keep the covenant, the pledge we make every Sabbath day at the sacrament table. And yet I don't want to scold. Rather I want to bless; it is in my heart to bless, to bless the faithful workers, for after all, are we not the best people in all the world? I don't want to be associated, here or hereafter, with any other kind of people than my own. They are good people.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

I see the signs of the times that have been pointed out to you and those who try to watch for them. Brother Young has mentioned Ramsay MacDonald, Premier of the British empire, coming over here to talk peace, to try to help to bring peace to the world,—blessed peace! Herbert Hoover, the farmer's son, grown up from a poor boy who had to work his way through school, standing at the head of the greatest nation on earth, and Ramsay MacDonald, one of the poor, the poor exalted, meeting there this day in those Virginia hills and talking things that are of most momentous concern to the whole world. I bless the Lord for them. As far as I have authority to bless—and I have, as an elder of the Church—I bless Herbert Hoover in the great effort that he is making now, and I bless Ramsay MacDonald, and ask God to bless them, that they may do that which makes for righteousness.

BLESSINGS INVOKED

In the president's office the other day, when Ramsay MacDonald was landing at the pier in New York, we turned on the radio—wonderful radio—and we could hear the whistle of the steamship blow; we could hear the tumult and the shouting and all the rest of it, the bands playing; and after they got up to the city hall we heard Ramsay MacDonald's rich, Scotch voice; he rolled out his r's when he said: "We want to bring peace to the wor-rld," and I enjoyed it. It was music to my soul, and I said in my heart and soul, "God bless you." I say it now before this congregation. By the power and authority of the holy priesthood that I hold, I bless the President of the United States and the Premier of Great Britain, that God Almighty may give them success and blessing from the Lord.

I bless you, my brethren and sisters, by that same power and that same authority, that our hearts may be opened to the work of the Lord, and that we may not fail in keeping the covenants we make.

I bless my brethren here on this stand. I want to say here that with the General Authorities of the Church I don't believe there ever was a time in the history of this Church when there was more unanimity, more of fellowship, more of real effort, so far as we are able to put effort forth. There may have been greater men; doubtless were; but for real united effort, united strength, and the power of God, never has there been, in the history of this Church, a more united band of brethren than the General Authorities of the Church are this day. I glory in it. I quote with pleasure the prophecy made, I think by Isaiah, when the Lord should bring again Zion, and he is bringing it now.

"Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together they shall sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

That is the condition today. I bear witness of it. I bless the President of this Church for his integrity, for his humility and meekness and power. I bless his counselors, that they may be helps to him; also the Twelve, and the Patriarch. I bless the Patriarch with all my heart, that he may be healed. I bless the Presidents of Seventies, the Presiding Bishopric, and all you presidents of stakes, and bishops of wards, and every faithful worker, male and female. I bless you sisters, who so nobly and efficiently direct the splendid labors of your organizations. You are not stingy like your husbands are. I mean it. You are not that kind. You give more freely. God bless you. I bless you all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.—Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. PETERSON

Former President of the Danish Mission

This, my brethren and sisters, is the biggest thrill that I have ever experienced. To gaze over this vast audience is an inspiration and an opportunity of a lifetime.

I bring you the love and greetings of the missionaries and saints in the Danish Mission. This mission is probably one of the smallest in the world, but I can assure you it is a live mission. It is the second oldest mission in Europe; and in this small country of Denmark there have probably been more converts, according to the population, than in any other country in the world. Thousands have embraced the gospel, and there are still thousands that are waiting to accept it.

I can assure you, my brethren and sisters, that the missionaries in that mission are performing an excellent work. They are not idling their time away, nor neglecting their calling. I can assure you that they are enjoying the spirit of their work. Many of these elders have spent as high as two hundred and ninety hours in a single month tracting from door to door—more than ten hours per day. They are all enjoying the best of health. The saints are active. We have auxiliary organizations in practically all the branches of that mission. They are all functioning and doing a splendid work.

Through the kindness of the First Presidency we have disposed of our old mission property, Korsgade No. 11. This place, which has been owned by the Church for a great many years has outlived its usefulness. We have now secured, through the aid of President James E. Talmage, one of the most beautiful sites in the wonderful city of Copenhagen. Strenuous protests were made by the clergy, not only to the Bank of Copenhagen who sold us the property, but also to the city council, to thwart or to hinder the granting of a building permit, but in all cases these protests were turned down. At the time the protest was made to the city council in Copenhagen by the clergy, headed by the Bishop of Seeland, they informed the council that we were not Christians, that we were heathens, and had no right to own property or erect a church in that city. One of the councilmen arose and stated that he thought it would be a splendid idea to have these heathens come within the shadow of their church, so that they could be converted. Our building site is directly in front of one of the large Lutheran churches in that city.

I would like to make an appeal to you parents of Scandinavian ancestry, to urge your sons to take missions or accept missions to Denmark. I can assure you that they will be kept busy, that they will enjoy their work, that they will get just as much, and possibly more experience than in any of the missions to the south of that country.

I trust that you parents will also be very considerate as to the sending of money to your boys. Rather send them an extra letter than too much money. The more money you send, the less efficiency will take place.

I bear you my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that I am proud of that country, proud of the work that has been performed in that land. I have a testimony of the gospel. I know that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Savior of the world. I know that Joseph Smith was divinely commissioned to again establish this work upon the earth. I pray that we may all strive to do our duty as members of this Church, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOHN P. LILLYWHITE

Former President of Netherlands Mission

I stand here today in the midst of one of the greatest revelations that God could give of the divinity of Mormonism. As I gaze into the ten thousand or twelve thousand faces of those who are sitting in this audience this afternoon, I see the manifestation of God's hand in gathering his people together in these latter days. You men and women have received the gospel of Jesus Christ. Its sweet influence has touched your souls, and has made you happy; it has made you rejoice in the day in which you live; and it is in fulfilment of the words of the Savior to the prophet Joseph Smith in this last dispensation, when he said:

"Blessed are they * * * who have obeyed my gospel; for they shall receive for their reward the good things of the earth, and it shall bring forth in its strength."

Surely this word has been fulfilled in the presence of these everlasting hills. The men and the women gathered out from the various nations of the earth, poor men and poor women, as we have heard today from President Nibley, have been made rich; first, in their souls, by the mellowing, sweetening influences of the gospel of the Son of God; and then, by reason of their faithfulness and the keeping of his commandments, they have been made rich in their store-houses. They have received from the earth in abundance, as the Lord promised to those who would keep his commandments:

"And they shall also be crowned with blessings from above, yea, and with commandments not a few, and with revelations in their time—they that are faithful and diligent before me."

This promise has also been fulfilled. There is no organization in the world today that has received more revelation, more blessings than the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You are witnesses to the fulfillment of these promises. Glorious is this organization. Every man and woman, every boy and girl, has a place in this wonderful Church; a place for development, for growth, aye, for the perfecting of their characters, if they will be obedient to God's laws.

"Wherefore I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind and strength, and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal, neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it.

"Thou shalt thank the Lord thy God in all things.

"Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness, even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit."

This sacrifice is not too great for you nor for me. God does not ask of you that which you cannot give, but it is within the power of every man and woman to offer unto him a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and in return for this sacrifice he promises to reward with blessings and with commandments not a few, and that the earth shall bring forth in its fulness.

I love the gospel, I love to bear witness to the truth; for God has let me know, through the inspiration of his Spirit, that Mormonism is the gospel of his Son, and will perfect every man and woman who is willing to keep and obey his commandments.

I am thankful for the privilege I have had of laboring in the mission field, thankful for the splendid men under whose direction I have labored: President Grant, President Nibley, and President Ivins, of the First Presidency; President George Albert Smith, President Orson F. Whitney, President David O. McKay and President James E. Talmage. I call them presidents because they were so and are so to me. I have enjoyed their acquaintance and the wonderful influence that has come from them into my life. I have been with them, and I have never heard them say one word nor have I seen them perform one act but what was elevating, but what would make me better, and other men better. And I can say the same thing of the other brethren who have been and who are laboring as the General Authorities in this Church. God bless them, and keep them happy in his service.

I bring you greetings from President and Sister Widtsoe. They asked that we convey to the brethren and to the saints their good will and their love. They are wonderful people, and are wielding a tremendous influence throughout the European Mission. They are loved by all the saints and by the missionaries, and they are doing a great deal of good, as these other presidents have done.

I bring you greetings from the saints and the missionaries in Holland. They are splendid people. There are no better upon the earth,—men and women who are willing to serve God and keep his commandments. The Dutch people are kind to the missionaries. They are kindly disposed towards the gospel. They open their homes and their hearts to its influence. Many of them are accepting the gospel. I congratulate the fathers and mothers who have sons in that mission. They are wonderful young men. We have labored with them. We have lived with them. We love them. Yes, we love them as our own children. Their success is our success; their joys are ours. God bless them for their faithfulness, for they are faithful. There is a wonderful spirit prevailing in the Netherlands Mission, a spirit of brotherly love, of kindness one toward another, of mutual helpfulness and benefit; and the saints are being blessed in all they do, as well as the elders.

May the Lord help us to be faithful, and keep his commandments. When we partake of the sacrament let our hearts and hands be clean and pure, and let our testimonies and our obedience be as firm and implicit as our declarations; for I hold that a man's testimony of the gospel is no stronger than his obedience unto its principles.

God bless us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

I dislike very much to limit the brethren, but we still have four speakers that we would like to hear from, we have the authorities to present, and I would not object to having two or three minutes left for myself.

We had three most splendid testimonies from our sisters, all three of whom occupied a total of eight minutes between them. A very fine example.

ELDER JOHN G. ALLRED

Former President of the North Central States Mission

It is an honor to any man to be called to preside over a mission of the Church. From such a position there comes a joy and happiness that can be received from no other source. About four years ago I was called to preside over the North Central States Mission, as its first president, and I had the joy and happiness of my life in that labor.

I have been thinking today that if Mormonism is true there must be an abundance of evidence of it; and I would like to give just briefly, if I may, an evidence to me of the divinity of this work. This Church has been organized now nearly a hundred years. During those hundred years we have been sending missionaries to every part of the civilized world, and these missionaries have been largely young men and women who were unsophisticated, untrained, and unlearned, pertaining to the religions of the world. It has been estimated that we have sent into the mission fields between sixty-five and eighty-five thousand men and women during that period of time, and so far as I know, there has never been a single case where a missionary, young or old, has written back or sent word, "I have found something in the world that is better than you sent me out to preach. I am leaving the service of this church and joining another institution." I think there never has been a single case of that kind. If there has been, I have never heard of it. How is it, if Mormonism is not the divine truth, that these young men and women go out and meet the learned preachers of the day, and are not won away from their religion?

I want to testify today that I come back to Zion with my heart full of gratitude to my Heavenly Father for my standing among this people, for my faith in this great latter-day work, and that I have found nothing in the world that has been any inducement whatsoever to me to leave the faith of my people and identify myself with any other work.

I want to leave the rest of my time, if there is any, to President Grant. God bless this work, with him at the head, and all who labor with him in this service, that this work may be consummated as God intended it should be, through the faithfulness of this people, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JAMES H. MOYLE

President of the Eastern States Mission

This is a surprise but I suppose it should not be.

I am happy in the performance of my duties as a missionary. As Brother Allred spoke I could not help but think that I was never busier or more intensively occupied in my life. But the joy that has come to me in that labor of love, is greater than that realized in any other undertaking.

This is a glorious work! It is my privilege to labor with a splendid band of young missionaries, who have been an inspiration to me, especially as I have heard them report their labors in the mission field. I have felt that their experiences are similar to those of the seventies in the days of the Savior. When they returned and reported to him their labors and what they had witnessed, he said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

These young people are not wise in this world's learning, or experienced; they are youthful, inexperienced, frequently uneducated, and crude, but enjoying an experience and receiving an education superior to that obtained anywhere else. We value the privilege of educating our children in the great universities of the world, preparing them for life's duties; but is it not far more important that they should be prepared both for this life's duties and those of the life to come, the eternities?

It is the greatest university training, to be thus divinely inspired, guided and educated. It is more than what people call religious training. There is in it also a most practical training for life's secular duties as well. It develops more than any college work will, initiative, self reliance, leadership, moral character, virtue, love of fellowmen, and above all the love of God, and a knowledge of him.

I should be glad indeed to relate some of the really marvelous experiences of these young people. The Savior said, "This is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." That is what these young people are learning and of which they are testifying. Many of them are able to say, with clear consciences and fervor, that they know that God lives, that he is their Father, and that Jesus Christ is their Savior.

I read the Monday morning New York papers, giving an account of the Sunday discourses of the learned "Divines" of that great city. Rarely does some one of them fail to say something indicating a need of a new or different religion. Some openly advocate, even orthodox preachers, that there must be a broad rational religion in which all can unite. In other words, that the gate should be wide, easy to find, and the way broad and easy to walk in, to eternal life.

These young people are testifying that there is "One Lord, one faith, one baptism;" that the way to eternal life is not to be so easily found, "because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Not long since that very noted preacher Dr. Emerson Fosdick, of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, one of the most noted New York preachers, said, "Religion in this country, with its conflicting creeds, is a good deal of a mess. That many people are confused over it, looking at it as a kind of jungle without a road through it, everybody knows. And thus to be bewildered about religion is to many a source of mental and spiritual agony. The wish for certainty in religion is one of the most important desires of man. We can stand having all sorts of things shifting on every side of us, but when the solid ground itself shakes it is intolerable. Though we can welcome change in many realms, scientific, cultural and economic, when our basic ideas of what life is all about begin to vacillate, that means spiritual vertigo"—or stomach ache.

Only a week or two since Dr. Beck, in the Unitarian church, said that "Ghosts of the past are all that keep Christianity together today."

Fifty years ago or more when I was a boy, and when spiritualism was being introduced, I heard the elders of the Church say that the time would come when all of the great truths of the gospel would in some way be more or less duplicated, as spiritualism was then attempting to duplicate one of the features of the truth revealed in our time. Later came a science of healing by faith and a popular religion, its chief corner stone being healing by faith.

Not long since, in Washington, a great conclave or general convention of the Protestant-Episcopal church was held, in which there was a somewhat remarkable report made by a very dignified commission which had been appointed by that church six years before to study the merits of faith or spiritual healing. That commission consisted of a number of noted bishops and deputies, among whom were three distinguished physicians, one Charles H. Mayo of Mayo Brothers, than whom there are no more distinguished physicians. This commission, after studying the subject for six years, made report confirming what the Prophet Joseph Smith learned in a day, in which they said that, "Christian healing has passed beyond the stage of experiment and its value cannot be questioned."

Three conclusions were drawn by the commission, and the report asked the general convention to "thankfully recognize the deepening of the spiritual life of the church which had come through the growing recognition of the healing power of God."

The conclusions were, "that throughout the world spiritual healing is no longer the hope of a few, but the belief and practice of a large and rapidly increasing number of persons;" that such healing is an experience of mankind that can no longer be questioned; that while faith in any supposed remedy produces some effect, faith in God, as revealed in Christ, is followed by results which are more sure, more lasting and of a more evidently spiritual character.

What is called spiritual healing is rapidly becoming popular in many of the churches.

Today, as we are commencing to rely more than formerly upon the power of the physician, should there not be a revival among us of that deep and profound faith which has so notably characterized Latter-day Saints, so much in advance of all the churches?

I am trespassing on the time allotted me. May the Lord help us to enjoy the blessings of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ and its work in which we are engaged and which means so much to us, is my desire in the name of Jesus, Amen.

ELDER MILES L. JONES

President of the East Central States Mission

I am happy, my brethren and sisters, in having the opportunity of reporting very briefly the activities of the East Central States Mission. I was resting quite easily for the reason that the time was passing so rapidly and there are so many to occupy it.

I am very pleased to state that during the first eight months of this year we have performed two hundred and forty-three baptisms in the new mission. From the first of September until the time that I left, about a week ago, the average would run about seventy for this month. So that you can see that we are active in that mission.

I have spent considerable time just recently in visiting the near-by settlements or branches, where I could reach them by auto, and in the latter part of the season we will make the longer journeys by rail. I have found, in visiting these branches, where mothers have traveled as far as five miles over the hills, carrying their babes, with two or three children by their side, making the journey with them. One of our beloved sisters, and her sister who was not a member of the Church, made an eighteen mile journey across the hills on horse-back to a station and took a train from there to the place we were holding our meeting. This shows to me that the faith is strong among those people, and they are living the gospel to the best of their ability.

I am very sorry to say that we have had the misfortune just recently of losing one of our most efficient missionaries, although all of them are very efficient. We haven't one in the mission who is not energetic, early and late, going wherever called to go at any time. The one to whom I have reference is a humble elder from Arizona. He, with his companion, Elder Baird, was asked to visit Edmonton county, in Kentucky. They wanted to visit a certain family belonging to the Church and leave their blessing with them, and in order for them to do so it was necessary that they cross a river. When they reached the water's edge they waited for some time, thinking that someone would come along and bring the little boat, which was on the other side, across to where they were. After waiting for some time, Elder Fenn decided that he would swim the river and get the boat, come back and dress, and then he and his companion could cross to the other side. After preparing to swim across the river he turned to his companion, and said, "God bless you, Elder Baird, in your labors." Then he plunged into the water. He had proceeded a little more than half way across, when, for some cause he turned back, and almost immediately disappeared. The river at that point is three hundred feet in width and from eighteen to twenty-five feet in depth.

Word was sent to us at headquarters. My secretary and I left in a very few minutes in an automobile, and arrived at the place where the accident occurred, at about 8:30 o'clock at night. We spent the greater part of the night there, and when we discovered that we were unable to recover the body immediately, we retired for the evening, leaving several men there to go on with the work as best they could. When I awoke in the morning there were three things that stood out distinctly in my mind. The first one was, Telephone for the ambulance to come at once; the second was, We will soon recover the body; and the third was, Tell Elder Baird to prepare himself to accompany the body to the home of Elder Fenn in Arizona. I immediately acted upon those impressions.

We had already arranged for a man and his son to make preparations for dragging the river. In the morning they stretched a line across the river some fifteen feet below where Elder Fenn disappeared, and then started dragging it. I walked along the bank a short distance, and as I gazed out over the water it was made plain to me that Elder Fenn's body lay about twenty feet below the line and about thirty feet nearer the bank than where they were making their attempt to find it. I acted upon that impression. I showed the man who was in charge the place where I knew the body was located, and after three or four casts they recovered it. From then until Elder Fenn's body was returned to his family in Arizona everything moved along satisfactorily.

My brethren and sisters, there are some things that come into our lives that require our dependence upon the Lord Almighty for guidance and direction. I have found this to be true on several occasions in the mission which I have the honor of laboring in at this time.

In conclusion I want to say to the friends of Elder James W. Price, that when he met with the accident of which some of you have heard, the doctors said that his usefulness was past. But through the faith of the ninety-seven elders and lady missionaries in that mission, who fasted and prayed for his recovery, and through the administration that he received, he was restored to his health and strength; and he is in his field of labor today, an earnest defender of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I leave with you my testimony that this is the work of God, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ARTHUR WELLING

President of the North Central States Mission

My brethren and sisters: With all my heart I rejoice in this opportunity of expressing my pride and gratitude for the honor that has come to me of presiding over one of the missions of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints,—of announcing myself in full accord with all of the instructions and with the testimonies that have been borne from this stand during this conference,—and of pledging to you, my brethren and sisters, and to the presiding brethren under whom we serve, that I will do my best not to be a disappointment to you, or to them, or to our Heavenly Father whom we serve.

Will you please think of the North Central States Mission as a great block U, with one corner resting on the Yellowstone Park, where Montana and Wyoming meet; and the other on the Iowa line at the Mississippi, below St. Paul and Minneapolis; and extending north from these beginnings indefinitely; including Montana east of Great Falls, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota in the United States; and Manitoba, Saskatchewan and parts of Alberta and Ontario in Canada.

I do not know how many million people we have to work with. We have about seventy elders and lady missionaries. Since it has been said (in the Priesthood meeting Saturday evening) that we need not ask for more missionaries, except to Scandinavian countries, it may be remarked, in passing, that we are very strongly Scandinavian, President Grant. In the city of Minneapolis, our headquarters, we have a population equal to that of the state of Utah, mostly Scandinavian.

I have been all through the mission twice, since June; once with my predecessor, President John G. Allred, whom you have heard today, and Brother Ballard, of whom and for whom I may say to you, that no man ever received a more favorable introduction to a field of labor than I did to mine; and nobody appreciates that privilege and honor more. I have been through the mission again since, have met all the elders twice and have twice heard them bear their testimonies, in public and in missionary meetings. I can testify to you that they are a loyal band of workers, and that they are performing a service similar to that spoken of by all the other mission presidents.

The work in which we are engaged is the truth. This is the Church and kingdom of God. The authorities who preside over us I sustain with all my heart; and ask the blessings of our Father in heaven upon them and upon our missionary labors. It is a glorious work. I am grateful for it; and leave you my testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

We have a telegram from the bishop of the South Ward at Manti, stating that a great number of people have heard distinctly over the radio every word of the conference.

PRESIDENT HEBER J. GRANT

Notwithstanding the time has expired I am going to trespass a little.

GRATITUDE FOR SUCCESS OF CONFERENCE

I rejoice in the very splendid conference that we have had. I echo and endorse the words of blessing for the President of the United States, for Ramsay Macdonald, for our good sisters, and for the people generally, as uttered, I believe, under the inspiration of the Spirit of the Lord, by my counselor, Brother Nibley.

I thank each and all who have taken part in this conference. It is an astonishing fact that there have been forty-three speeches made here during the conference, including the one that I am now making.

I can truthfully say that I rejoice beyond all the ability with which God has endowed me to express my thoughts, and my heart is full of gratitude for the rich outpouring of the Spirit of the Lord and his blessings that have attended us during this conference. Ever since I was a boy I have heard the statement made at the close of each conference that it was one of the very best we had ever had. To me this is one of the great testimonies of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. We hear, year after year—I have heard from childhood unto the present time—the same testimonies, the same words almost, in explaining the gospel and testifying of it, but we never weary if our spirits are only right; and the spirit of this conference has been one of joy and peace and happiness.

BLESSINGS INVOKED

I leave my blessing upon you, my brethren and sisters—not only upon all within the sound of my voice in this great auditorium, but upon all those who are listening in. I pray God to bless every soul who is striving to do good upon the earth, every soul who is honest and upright, loyal and true to his God and to his country. May the peace of heaven abide with all the honest the world over; and particularly do I pray for the blessings of the Lord upon the Latter-day Saints. I do it all in humility and by the authority of the priesthood of the living God that I know I hold, and in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer and Savior. Amen.

Solo and chorus, "The Earth is the Lord's," was rendered by Sister Jessie Evans and the choir.

The Hallelujah Chorus from "The Messiah" was rendered by the choir.

Elder Andrew Jenson, Assistant Church Historian, pronounced the benediction, and the Conference was adjourned for six months.

Professor Anthony C. Lund conducted the singing. Accompaniments and interludes were played on the great organ by Tracy Y. Cannon and Frank W. Asper.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

JOSEPH ANDERSON,
Clerk of the Conference.
